CANKER IS A SERIOUS TROUBLE

Includes All Troubles Involving Portions of Living Bark.

USED TO COVER MANY DISEASES

It May Be Caused By Sun, Frost, Blight or Fungus.

No Specific Remedies for the Trouble—Best to Cut Out Badly Diseased Parts Which Assume a Brownish Appearance.

The term canker is a very pliable one. It can be used to cover most any disease or trouble of the bark of a tree. To the layman it means little when it is mentioned and therefore often serves as a loophole for an expert's ignorance. So if you should be asked what the trouble with a certain tree is and do not know just say "canker" and the other man will utter the usual half-enlightened "Oh" and think you are wise.

As stated above, the term canker is a c l n d e s all troubles involving portions of living bark. It may be caused by frost, sun, blight or fungus of various kinds. Regardless of what the source of the canker is, it is a serious trouble to have a tree trunk affected with, as it restricts the sap. It is often found on the trunk of the tree, where it checks the flow of the sap and the nutrition of the top of the tree.

The blight canker is due to the blight bacteria and is recognized by the blighty appearance of the affected portion, which is the bluish black discoloration so common on blighted limbs. The only possible method of control is to cut out the affected portions and all blighted limbs when they appear. The cuts should be made well back to the apparently healthy wood, so as to make certain to get all the bacteria which might be working into the healthy tissue. All wounds made by this process of cutting should be disinfected with a weak solution of carbolic acid or a dilution of lime-sulphur at about one to eight. This is to prevent the carrying of the disease from place to another.

Canker caused from the sun—commonly called "sun scald"—and injury from frost will generally show themselves on the trunk of the tree, the sun scald usually being on the south side of the tree. Frost injury often does not show itself until some time after the injury is done, as the cambium layer of the bark is the part usually affected. After the growing season starts the outer bark will shrivel and loosen and give the first outward signs of the trouble. Cankers from either of the above troubles should be taken care of by cutting away all of the loose dead bark, trimming the wound to good healthy wood. Wounding of the tree by iron implements or other causes should be treated in the same way.

Several cankers are of a fungus source. There is the rot canker due to leaving rotten fruit hanging on the tree during the winter. The rot spores are carried by the rain from the fruit to the limbs below, where the canker will appear. The common New York apple canker is caused by the black rot fungus and the canker so common in Illinois is caused by a fungus of an unspeakable name. The New York canker is described as enlarged sections of roughened bark and with the wood often laid bare. The dead bark chings tightly to the decaying wood, cracks appear later in the diseased part, and the bark assumes a dark, charred appearance. The Illinois canker shows itself in a dark flaky roughness of the bark. Under the bark will be found a mottled appearance due to the interposition of healthy areas among the diseased parts. In time the wood is affected and will assume a brownish, unhealthy appearance.

There are no specific remedies for these troubles. All that can be done is to cut out the badly diseased parts and do what can be done to encourage the vigor of the tree. Some of the thrifty growing and hardy varieties, such as the Spy, are quite resistant to rot canker, while others, such as the Wagner, are quite susceptible to it. Spraying will do much to keep cankers from this source in check.—The Michigan Farmer.

Results of a Mortgage.

An exchange gives an incident that illustrates the impossibility of telling where the trouble resulting from a mortgage will lead to. A man mortgaged his farm to buy his wife a pair of ear rings. His wife took in washings to pay the interest on the mortgage and the first day lost one of the diamonds in the suds and in despair tried to hang herself in the barn, but the rope broke and she fell on a $150 Jersey heifer and broke its back.

BOOKLET A FINE ONE

Fourth Edition of Illustrated Magazine "Western Michigan" Received.

We have received a copy of the fourth edition of the illustrated magazine "Western Michigan," issued by the Western Michigan Development Bureau for the purpose of advertising the fruit and farming lands of the western part of the state and calling the attention of the world to the products of this section of Michigan. The edition is 50,000 copies and is a beautiful specimen of the "art preservative" and is profusely illustrated with scenes from the twenty different counties which constitute "The Land of Fruit and Fortune."

It contains many facts about fruit raising and farming in Western Michigan, also the value of its crops and exceptional marketing facilities, as well as bank deposits, wealth of public schools, etc. The views were all taken last year and show the high state of development of this section and what has been done by those who are farming and raising fruit for a profit. It is a great advertisement for Western Michigan and will result in doing much good.

NEW INCOME TAX RULES

Couples Living Together To Have $4000 Exemption; Apart $3000 Each.

Husband Should Make Returns as the Head and Representative of Household.

Regulations for the payment of the income tax provide that husband and wife living together shall be entitled to an exemption of $4000 from the aggregate net income of both, but when separated and living apart each shall be entitled to $3000 exemption.

Where husband and wife living together have separate estates their income may be made on one return, but the amount of the income of each with the full names and addresses must be shown.

The husband, the regulation says, should make the return as the head and legal representative of the household. Where a wife has no estate managed by herself from which she receives an income of more than $3000 she may make her own return, and if the husband, in such cases, has an income which brings the total above $4000 the wife's return should be attached to that of her husband or vice versa.

Where either husband or wife has an income of $3000 or more a return is required under the law, no matter whether the combined income or both be less than $4000.

When the joint income exceeds $4000 husband and wife are jointly and separately liable for making the proper returns and for the payment of the tax. The single or married status of persons claiming the exemptions provided shall be determined at the time made if it is made within the year of the return. Otherwise the status shall be determined at the close of the year.

Promise a Treat.

The pupils of Saint Mary's church promise a rate treat to those who attend "Dorothy" at the Charlevoix Theatre Friday evening, January 30. They will be assisted by the music pupils, Miss Irene Finnican and Miss Mildred Sweet, violinist, of East Jordan. Tickets at popular prices may be obtained at Central Drug Store or from the ladies of Saint Mary's church.

ASK FOR SOME OF THESE GIFTS

A Letter to Your Congressman Will Bring Them to You.

Every Taxpayer in the Country Helps Provide Money to Pay for Them.

Many country people never enjoy all the good things they might have for several reasons, says a writer in Farm and Fireside. They either do not know that the member of congress from their district can do many things for them or else they are too indifferent to try for these free gifts. Sometimes they feel sure that when one gets "something for nothing" it doesn't amount to much, but in this instance one doesn't get something for nothing. Every taxpayer in the country helps provide the money for the gifts the government lavishly bestows through its public servants.

Everyone knows roads are given away free every year, because there is much contention about this subject, but it is not generally known that there are also valuable plants and shrubs given for the asking. If any group of young people want to beautify the school grounds, the church yard or the pretty grave where public meetings are held, or even their own homes, they should investigate and see what can be done for them by their member of congress. Tulip bulbs, plants, shrubs and things from the botanical gardens are all within the reach of the congressman.

Then there are public documents relating to crops, plants and their insect enemies, animals and their diseases, and other free literature that is valuable and interesting. The Year Book of Agriculture is one of the most interesting volumes ever printed and it is unfortunate that copies are never opened in many country homes.

If there is a little lake or pond in the neighborhood where the young folks like to fish it may be stocked with fish free of charge and a man will be sent with the shipment, so there is absolutely nothing to do but carry them to the pond. In the large hatcheries fish are produced by the thousands each year and a simple request through your congressman will bring a supply to your neighborhood. Of course, they are small when they come, but in a few years they grow and multiply in a most gratifying manner. If there are many applications it will be necessary to wait your turn.

Each member of congress has the privilege of naming one cadet for West Point and two midshipmen for Annapolis. By writing to your congressman you can find out if there is a vacancy and how to get the place if it is open.

RAY K. IMMEL

Will Appear at Charlevoix Theatre Tuesday, January 27.

On Tuesday evening, January 27, Ray K.immel, the famous impersonator and orator, appears at the Charlevoix theatre under the auspices of the Senior class of the Charlevoix high school and will entertain and amuse the audience with his clever impersonations of the characters of Shakespeare's "Much Ado About Nothing," and in addition will give two light readings.

Mr.immel, who is at present the professor of oratory at the University of Michigan, has had much experience along this line. He comes very highly recommended and a pleasant evening's entertainment is assured the appreciative public. The class has been very fortunate in securing Mr.immel, who is at present making a lecture tour of the larger cities in Michigan and has kindly consented to extend his route to include Charlevoix. Come out and help the Seniors.

More Local Option.

Hickman county, Kentucky, went dry recently by 1547 majority, 601 "wet" votes. Two more counties in Texas have gone dry. Georgia has made it a misdemeanor for anyone to solicit orders for liquor. Such incursions from the Southland show that the tide of prohibition is sweeping on.

DEATH CALLS MRS. BURNETT

Wife of Prominent Business Man Passes Away Tuesday Evening.

Twenty Years a Resident of Charlevoix and She Will Be Greatly Missed by Her Friends.

Death released Mrs. A. T. Burnett from her sufferings Tuesday afternoon at 6:00 after an illness since Christmas week. While the news was not unexpected, the entire community felt a distinct shock at the realization that a strong and beautiful life had ended.

During the twenty years of Mrs. Burnett's residence in this city she endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact. Her serenity of spirit, her merry cheer and, above all, her indomitable courage in suffering received unconscious homage from those who knew her.

Sarah Catherine Wagley was born on Mackinac Island in 1853. December 2nd, 1871, at the age of eighteen, she was united in marriage to A. T. Burnett and lived at Cross Village until in September, 1895, when they moved to this city. Three children were born to them—E. A. Burnett of Harbor Springs, Mrs. G. E. Hinchey and Bert Burnett of this city.

Mrs. Burnett was a devoted Christian and for many years was a member of the Congregational church. She was an earnest worker for any good cause; her sympathy was warm and true and she never failed to extend a helping hand to all who came to her in their hour of trouble. At the time of her death she was vice-president of the Ladies' Aid society and a member of the Bible class.

Relatives are expected to arrive to-day and the announcement of the funeral arrangements will be made later.

P. M. CHANGES TIME

Arriving Time of Regular Night Train Changed to 4:27 in the Afternoon.

Monday morning the Pere Marquette railroad put into operation a new schedule of time for the arrival and leaving of trains from this city as follows:

No. 6, south, leaves at 7:50 a. m.
No. 11, north, leaves at 9:50 a. m.
No. 8, south, leaves at 2:30 p. m.
No. 1, north, leaves at 4:27 p. m.

Under the new schedule the train that usually arrived in the evening at 9:50 from the south has been taken off, and in its place No. 1 northbound, arrives at 4:27, giving a better mail service from the south, it being a through Grand Rapids and Chicago train.

No. 6 leaves for the south about a half hour earlier in the morning and the other two trains leave at practically the same time.

GRANT STREET HILL

City Council Designates This Hill as the Place to Coat in Charlevoix.

The city dads had considerable discussion Tuesday evening regarding the matter of coating on the various hills of the city. Chief of Police Alcock reported that many complaints had been made from residents who daily travel Bridge street on account of the young people sliding down the hill and sidewalk, especially on the sidewalk. Continual coating makes the street and sidewalk so slippery that it is almost impossible for pedestrians to keep their feet and it was the universal request that the city officials stop all coating on this hill.

It was finally decided that the Grant street hill be designated as the city coating hill and all coating on other hills in the city be stopped at once. Parents are requested to aid the city officials in the matter and see that their children refrain from coating on all hills with the exception of Grant street hill.

WILL REMAIN IN BUSINESS

M. A. Levinson Takes Over Interests of M. A. Levinson & Company.

Plans Under Way to Make the Store Bigger and Then Better Than Ever Before.

On November 12th, 1913, it was announced in the columns of the Courier that M. A. Levinson & Co. would close out their stock and go out of business during the early months of the present year. In this week's edition will be found the announcement that on account of having made satisfactory arrangements in regard to the rental of the building which they occupy the business will be continued at the old stand indefinitely under the management of Meyer A. Levinson, who has taken over all interests formerly known as M. A. Levinson & Co.

In an interview with Mr. Levinson he states that in the future the store will be in better shape to supply the demands of the public than ever before and that it would be bigger and better than it has been in the past. New and up-to-date lines of merchandise will be added to the various departments, especially in the lines of ladies' and gentlemen's furnishings.

The firm name of M. A. Levinson & Co. has been known to residents of this vicinity since April 18, 1902. Previous to this time the store was run under a different name. In the spring of 1901 the store was enlarged to its present size and has been one of the leading shopping places in the city.

In the future the policy of the store will be the same as in the past—conscientious treatment to its customers and the best merchandise possible for their money.

State Horticultural Society.

The midwinter meeting of the Michigan State Horticultural Society will be held at Benton Harbor Thursday and Friday, February 5th and 6th, in the auditorium of the First Baptist church. A fine programme has been arranged for and everyone interested in horticulture should attend and find out what is doing in the world.

CLAY AND SAND ROADS

At Present There Are About 35,000 Miles in the United States.

WORK MATERIALS WHEN WET

Roads Made of These Materials are Easy to Construct and Repair.

Cost Per Mile of Road Depends Largely Upon Distance the Material is Hauled—Many in the South.

There are at present about 35,000 miles of sand clay roads in the United States, mainly in the southern states, according to the Office of Public Roads, U. S. Department of Agriculture. The time to work the roads is in the spring when the soil is damp. If the working of the roads is deferred until late in summer when they are dry, they are not only much more difficult to put in proper shape but the cost of repair is greater than it they were worked early in the spring.

Previous to 1894 comparatively little, if any, of these roads existed. The popularity of this type of road is due to the facts that it is cheap, comparatively firm and durable, easy to construct and repair, and that the materials out of which it is built are plentiful in many sections of the country.

The sand-clay road is made by mixing the sand and clay in such a way that the grains of sand touch each other, the spaces between the grains being filled with clay which acts as a binder.

The approximate mixture of sand and clay may be determined by filling a vessel with a sample of the sand to be used, and another vessel of the same size with water. The water is poured carefully into the sand until it reaches the point of overflowing. The volume of water removed from the second vessel represents approximately the proportion of clay needed.

The proper proportion of sand and clay can best be determined, however, as the work progresses, as some clay will contain more sand than others. In fact, clays were very frequently found which already contain about the right proportion of sand.

If the road to be treated is sandy, the surface is first leveled off and crowned with a road machine, the crown being about one half inch to the foot from the center to the sides. The clay is then dumped on the surface and carefully spread, so that it will be from six to eight inches in depth at the center, and gradually decreasing in depth towards the sides. A layer of clean sand is then usually added, which is thoroughly mixed with the clays, either by traffic or by means of plows and disk or tooth harrows.

The best results have been obtained by thoroughly mixing or puddling the materials when wet. For this reason, it is desirable that the mixing be done in wet weather. The mixing can be left to the traffic after the materials have been properly placed but this involves a whole winter and spring of bad road, and even then the mixing is not always satisfactory. In all cases, it is advisable to dress the road with a road machine or split-log drag after the materials have been thoroughly mixed, and to give it a crown of not more than one inch or less than three-fourth inch to the foot from the center of the sides. A light coating of sand may then be added. The use of the road machine or drag should be continued on page 8.

Is It a Wise Thing To Do?

So enamored are some people with the idea of buying in anything than their own town that they hesitate to buy even a spool of thread of their local merchant and there are men who will send a hundred miles away for a 25-cent whip which they could have bought without the cost of a cent for postage from a local merchant. And these are the people who talk about their town being dead. Verily the Wise Man was right when he said: "The eyes of a fool are in the ends of the earth."

CHAPTER XVII.

The Trap That Failed.

As the scornful maiden went out of the door under the escort of Cassidy, Burke bowed gallantly to her like a knight and blew a kiss from his thick finger tip in mocking reverence for her as an artist in her way. Then when he learned that Edward Gilder had arrived he ordered that the magistrate and the district attorney be admitted and that the son also be sent up from his cell.

"It's a bad business, sir," Burke said with hearty sympathy to the shaken father after the formal greetings that followed the entrance of the two men. "It's a very bad business."

"What does he say?" Gilder questioned.

"Nothing," Burke answered. "That is why I sent for you. I suppose Mr. Demarest has made the situation plain to you."

"Yes, he has explained it to me. It's a terrible position for my boy. But you'll release him at once, won't you?" "I can't," Burke replied reluctantly but bluntly. "You ought not to expect it, Mr. Gilder."

"Inspector," the magistrate cried keenly, "you—don't mean?"

"I mean, Mr. Gilder, that you've got to make him talk. That's what I want you to do for all our sakes. Will you?" "I'll do my best," the unhappy man replied.

A minute later Dick, in charge of an officer, was brought into the room. He was pale, a little disheveled from his hours in a cell.

The father went forward quickly and caught Dick's hands in a mighty grip.

"My boy!" he murmured, huskily. Then he made a great effort and controlled his emotion to some extent. "The inspector tells me," he went on, "that you've refused to talk—to answer his questions."

"That wasn't wise under the circumstances," the father remonstrated hurriedly. "However, now, Demarest and I are here to protect your interests, so that you can talk freely. Now, Dick, tell us! Who killed that man? We must know. Tell me."

Demarest went a step toward the young man. "Dick, I don't want to frighten you, but your position is really dangerous. Your only chance is to speak with perfect frankness. I pledge you my word I'm telling the truth. Dick, my boy, I want you to forget that I'm the district attorney and remember only that I'm an old friend of yours and of your father's who is trying very hard to help you. Surely you can trust me. Now, Dick, tell me! Who shot Griggs?"

"I shot Griggs," said the young man. Demarest realized that his plea had failed, but he made an effort to take the admission at its face value.

"Why?" he demanded.

"Because I thought he was a burglar."

"Oh, I see," he said, in a tone of conviction. "Now, let's go back a little. Burke says you told him last night that you had persuaded your wife to come over to the house and join you there. Is that right?"

"Yes."

"Now, tell me, Dick, just what did happen, won't you?"

There was no reply, and, after a little interval, the lawyer resumed his questioning.

"Did this burglar come into the room?"

Dick nodded an assent.

"And he attacked you?"

There came another nod of affirmation.

"And there was a struggle?"

"Yes."

"And you shot him?"

"Yes."

"Then, where did you get the revolver?"

"Dick started to answer without thought."

"Why? I grabbed it!" Then, the seriousness of this, flashed on his consciousness, and he checked the words trembling on his lips. "So," he said with swift hostility in his voice, "you're trying to trap me, too! You! And you talk of friendship! I want none of such friendship."

But Burke would be no longer restrained.

"You don't want to take us for fools, young man," he said, and his big tones rumbled harshly through the room. "If you shot Griggs in mistake for a burgar why did you try to hide the fact? Why did you pretend to me that you and your wife were alone in the room when you had that there with you, eh? Why didn't you call for help? Why didn't you call for the police as any honest man would naturally under such circumstances?"

"We're trying to save you," the father pleaded tremulously.

Burke persisted in his vehement system of attack. Now, he again brought out the weapon that had done Eddie Griggs to death.

"Where'd you get this gun?" he shouted.

"I won't talk any more," Dick answered sharply. "I must see my wife first. His voice became more urgent. 'I want to know what you've done to her.'"

"Did she kill Griggs?" Burke questioned roughly.

Dick was startled out of his calm. "No, no!" he cried, desperately.

"Then, who did?" Burke demanded sharply. "Who did?"

"I won't say any more until I've talked with a lawyer whom I can trust." He shot a vindictive glance toward Demarest.

The father intervened with a pleading eagerness.

"Dick, if you know who killed the man you must speak to protect your self."

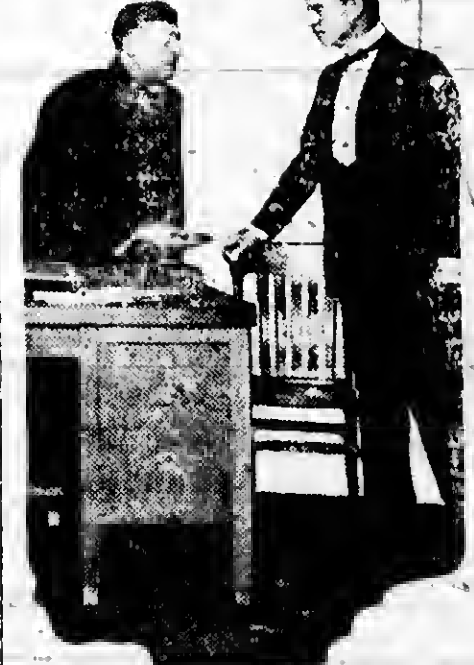

The face of the young man softened as he met his father's beseeching eyes.

"I'm sorry, dad," he said, very quietly. "But I—well, I can't!"

Again, Burke interposed.

"I'm going to give him a little more time to think things over. Perhaps he'll get to understand the importance of what we've been saying pretty soon."

He pressed the letter on his desk.

"Where'd you get this gun?" he asked, and, as the doorman appeared, addressed that functionary.

"Don't have one of the men take him back. You wait outside."

Dick, however, did not move. His voice came with a note of determination.

"I want to know about my wife. Where is she?"

Burke disregarded the question as completely as if it had not been uttered and went on speaking to the doorman, with a suggestion in his words that was effective.

"It's not to speak to any one, you understand?" Then he condescended to give his attention to the prisoner.

"You'll know all about your wife's young man when you make up your mind to tell me the truth."

Dick turned and followed his escort down out of the office in silence.

As the doorman reappeared Burke gave his order. "Don't have the Turner woman brought up."

The inspector next called his stenographer and gave explicit directions.

At the back of the room, behind the desk, were three large windows, which opened on a corridor, and across this was a tier of cells. The stenographer was to take his seat in this corridor, just outside one of the windows. Over the windows the shades were drawn, so that he would remain invisible to any one within the office while yet easily able to overhear every word spoken in the room.

When he had completed his instructions to the stenographer Burke turned to Gilder and Demarest.

"Now, this time," he said energetically,

"I'll be the one to do the talking. And get this: Whatever you hear in any don't you be surprised. Remember, we're dealing with crooks, and when you're dealing with crooks you have to use crooked ways."

Then the door opened, and Mary Turner entered. She paid absolutely no attention to the other two in the room, but went straight to the desk, and there halted, gazing with her softly penetrant eyes of deepest violet into the face of the inspector.

Under that intent scrutiny Burke felt a challenge and set himself to match craft with craft. His large voice was modulated to kindness as he spoke in a casual manner.

"You ought to know, since you have arrested him."

"I just sent for you to tell you that you're free."

"Then, I can go?"

"Sure, you can go."

Without any delay, yet without any haste, Mary glanced toward Gilder and Demarest, who were watching the scene closely. Then, she went toward the outer door of the office.

Burke waited until she had nearly reached the door before he shot his bolt.

"Garson has confessed!"

Mary turned and confronted the inspector, and answered without the least trace of fear, but the firmness of knowledge.

"Oh, no, he hasn't!"

"What's the reason he hasn't?" Burke asked with wrathfully.

"Because he didn't do it!"

"Well, he says he did it!"

Mary, in her turn, resorted to a bit of finesse, in order to learn whether or not Garson had been arrested.

"But how could he have done it when he was?" she began.

"Where did he go?"

"You ought to know, since you have arrested him, and he has confessed."

Burke was frantic over being worsted thus. To gain a diversion, he reverted to his familiar bullying tactics.

"Who shot Griggs?" he shouted.

"My husband shot a burglar," Mary said innocently. "Was his name Griggs?"

"Oh, you know better than that," Burke declared, impatiently. "You see, we've traced the Maxim revolver, Garson himself bought it up in Hartford. For the first time, Mary was caught off her guard."

"But he told me," she began, then checked herself.

"What did he tell you?" Burke questioned.

"He told me that he had never seen one. Surely, if he had had anything of the sort, he would have shown it to me."

Burke pressed the button on the desk, and, when the doorman appeared, ordered that the prisoner be returned to her cell.

"I suppose," Mary said, "that it's useless for me to claim my constitutional rights, and demand to see a lawyer?"

"Yes," Burke agreed, "you've guessed it right, the first time."

Cassidy came hurrying in with a grin of satisfaction on his stolid face.

"Say, chief," the detective said with animation, "we've got Garson."

Burke asked Gilder and the district attorney to withdraw, while he should have a private conversation with the prisoner.

"Now," he said when they were alone together, "I'm going to be your friend."

"Are you?" Mary's tone was non-committal.

"Yes," Burke declared, heartily. "And I mean it! Give up the truth about young Gilder. I know he shot Griggs, of course. But I'm not taking any stock in that burglar story—not a little bit! No court would either."

What was really back of the kindness? Was he jealous of Griggs? Well, that's what he might do then. He's always been a worthless young cub. A rotten are two essential factors in the make-up of the man or woman who accumulates money.

Determination to bank a little each week or month and "grit" to stick to it.

Many people start with a firm resolve to save, but a month or two will suffice to cool their ardor and their bank account dwindles to nil.

Determine to bank a little every pay day. Exercise your stick-to-it-iveness.

The first hundred will come hard, after that the rest is easy.

We have a book for you and pay 4 per cent interest.

Tailored Clothes De Luxe, at "Ready-Made" Prices

Nowadays every man, no matter what his age, recognizes the importance of being correctly dressed.

The more pronounced his individuality, the more it is our mission to meet his requirements. For such we provide tailored-to-measure clothes in keeping with their individuality and still at no more than good ready-made clothes would cost.

For Spring we are showing upwards of 500 select and beautiful weaves from which you can choose just the fabric and pattern that appeals to you. From it we will cut and make to your individual measure a suit that will please and satisfy you from the moment you put it on until the day when you regretfully lay it aside for a later style or heavier weight.

Before the season advances further, stop in here and examine critically our fabric offerings. Let us show you drawings of the latest Metropolitan fashions for well dressed men. Do not buy your Spring outfit until you have done yourself the justice to investigate our Tailored Clothes.

HOW to evolve some method to get elected to office without having to run against a large field of equally or even better qualified candidates is a problem that is worrying some of the politicians of the state at the present time.
 The only difficulty so far circumvented is the refusal of the others to be eliminated and the desire on the part of the people to make their choice.

BEFORE finding fault with somebody else for the way in which they have done things it would be an act of wisdom to first ask yourself the question "Would I have done any better had I been placed in the same position?" General shortcomings always start from the individual and are not a sporadic product.

THE Japanese weather observer who failed to detect in advance the eruption of Sakura-Jima, volcanic mountain, has committed suicide in chagrin. When Japan's weather service has been running as long as ours the employees will be less sensitive to a little mistake like that.

EXPERIENCE has proven that the fellow who is always clamoring for more factories for the city is never the one who volunteers to go down to any depth in his own pocket to bring about the establishment of a new industry.

It should be borne in mind that what taxpayers would like to have public officials do is not to attempt to pull off something big during their administration, but to get the most for the money that they have to spend.

THE scramble for the plums down in Washington has reached the point where it makes football look like a pink tea.

EARLY MORNING BLAZE

Fire Tuesday Morning Causes Considerable Damage in Sentinel Office.

Tuesday morning about 7:30 fire was discovered in the second floor of the building occupied by the Charlevoix Sentinel and for a short time it looked as if the fire department had a hard job on its hands.

The blaze was started from the chimney on the second floor of the building in the rooms formerly occupied by the Masonic lodge and partially burned away the partition, but was discovered before much headway had been gained.

Water caused all of the damage in the printing office on the first floor, which was fully covered by insurance.

Announcement

HAVING made satisfactory arrangements in regard to the rental of the store known as the M. A. Levinson & Company, I wish to announce to the people of Charlevoix and vicinity that I will remain and continue the business in the VanPelt building and that I have taken over all the interests of the store known as the M. A. Levinson & Company.

I intend to stock up at once with a full assortment of merchandise so that the store will have again, as large a stock as ever and be prepared to meet all its old and new Customers.

The policy of the store will be the same as before, that is, to give the people the best of goods possible for their money.

To Have Warehouse.

Articles of incorporation, with a capitalization of $25,000, having been filed in Lansing by the Charlevoix Lumber Co., plans have been made to erect a large lumber warehouse in this city. The building will be a two-story structure, with a floor area of about 10,000 square feet. It will be used for the storage of lumber and other building materials. The company is owned by J. H. Smith and J. H. Smith & Co. of Lansing.

TIMELY RECIPES.

How to Use the Always Popular Oyster.

Oyster Salad.—Ingredients: One pint of oysters, two cups of celery cut into half inch pieces, one teaspoonful of Worcestershire sauce, one small head of lettuce, one tablespoonful of chopped parsley, two tablespoonfuls of chopped boiled beets, French dressing. Wash and drain the oysters, put them into a pan with a little water and cook them until the oysters are plump. If the oysters are large cut them into four pieces, add the cut up celery to the oysters, pour over them French dressing, which has been made with three tablespoonfuls of good olive oil, one tablespoonful of vinegar and half tablespoonful of tarragon or any other kind of vinegar, a pinch of red pepper, half teaspoonful of salt, quarter of teaspoonful of sugar. Put this dressing into a bottle and shake it well, or mix with an egg beater. Serve on lettuce leaves and decorate with the chopped parsley and chopped beets.

Oyster Cocktail.—Ingredients: One pint of small oysters, twelve tablespoonfuls of tomato ketchup, three tablespoonfuls tarragon vinegar, two tablespoonfuls of Rilline wine, juice of one lemon, salt to taste. Serve this very cold in cocktail glasses with quarter of a teaspoonful of chopped mustard pickle on top of each portion.

Oysters With Noodles.—One pint of oysters, one pint of boiled noodles, one cupful of sauce, half cupful of rolled crackers, quarter cupful of butter. Boil the noodles until tender in water that has been salted. When they are cooked drain off the water, then pour cold water over them (this keeps the noodles from sticking together) in a well greased pudding dish place the oysters which have been drained, then add the noodles, cover this with a sauce which has been made with quarter of a cupful of the oyster liquor, three-quarters of a cupful of milk, two spoonfuls of butter, quarter of a teaspoonful of pepper, half teaspoonful of salt. Sprinkle with the rolled crackers and pieces of butter. Bake until the cracker crumbs are brown. This is suitable for luncheon or supper and makes a good entrée.

How to Freshen Furs.

Not everybody can indulge in new furs often; therefore the care of furs is worth considering at this season of the year. As to the furrier, for a great freshening up of furs are really not necessary if one will follow these directions. They are related, in fact, by one who has known the fur business for years and has cared for many garments of odd fur pieces. When the cheaper furs threaten to become somewhat flat and what is called lifeless take a hairbrush with not-too-stiff bristles, wet it thoroughly then brush the fur up briskly the wrong way. Continue this brushing until the fur finally loses its moisture, then gently shake and beat it lightly with some flat beater, never a thin stick.

After this process the fur becomes normally straightened, when easy combing in the right direction brings the fur to an unusually fine aspect. This extra care of any fur article that is not exactly the best grade will keep it in good condition and will pay well for the trouble taken.

How to Make Wedding Cake.

Any rich fruit cake, heavily iced and decorated in white, may serve as a wedding cake. At an informal wedding the bride will cut the wedding cake. For a pretty little ceremony of this cake cutting the guests should make a wide circle with a white satin ribbon about the bridal pair. To add to the gravity of the occasion it should have labels in it the other symbols which denote various fortunes.

How to Clean Towels.

Thin towels may frequently be restored to normal whiteness by putting in a kettle of cold water, adding white soap shavings and lemon juice and letting them slowly boil. This will get the water very blue, and then in the sun.

Not Too Important.

DAYBIRD SENTENCED

Given from One to Ten Years with Recommendation of One Year at Jonia.

Paul Daybird, who was arrested last November on a charge of assault on the person of Miss Ruth Miller, an Emmet county young girl, was sentenced Monday by Judge Miller, who was acting as judge in the Emmet county circuit court, to from one to ten years in Jonia, with a recommendation of one year.

Daybird claimed that he was under the influence of liquor when he attacked the girl and that he did not know what he was doing. He pled guilty to the charge at the time of his arrest, but later changed his plea to not guilty, and was found guilty by the jury at the time of his trial on Tuesday.

tinued at frequent intervals until the surface is smooth and firm.

If the road to be treated is composed of clay it should first be brought to a rough grade with a road machine. The surface should then be plowed and thoroughly pulverized by harrowing to a depth of about four inches, after which it is given a crown or slope of about one-half inch to the foot from the center to the sides. It is then covered with six to eight inches of clean, sharp sand, which is spread thicker in the center than at the sides. The materials should then be mixed with plows and harrows while they are comparatively dry, after which they are finally puddled with a harrow during wet weather. If clay works to the surface and the road becomes sticky more sand should be added.

The road is then shaped, crowned and ditched in the usual manner with a road machine. This should be done when the surface is soft, yet stiff enough to pack well under the roller or traffic. Wide but shallow ditches should be provided on both sides of the road and culverts or cross-drains should be placed wherever water flows across the road, for it is exceedingly important that the "sand on clay" roads be well drained.

After the clay on sand or the sand on clay road is completed it should be carefully maintained until the surface becomes firm and smooth. The construction of this type of road is by no means a quick operation. If soft, sticky places appear more sand should be added, and if loose, sandy places are found more clay is needed. It is just as important to attend to these small details as to any other part of the work, for if they are neglected the road is liable to fail.

It requires approximately one cubic yard of clay to surface one and one-half running yards of road twelve feet in width, or about 1175 cubic yards to the mile. From three-quarters to one cubic yard will make a road for two horses on a dry clay road. The cost of the road will therefore depend largely upon the distance the material is hauled, the average being from $500 to $1000 per mile. A road built under the direction of the Office of Public Roads at Gainesville, Florida, one mile long, fourteen feet wide, and having nine inches of sand clay surface cost $881 per mile, or ten cents per square yard. Another sand-clay road built by the Office at Tallahassee, Florida, sixteen feet wide and seven inches thick cost $470 per mile, or about five cents per square yard.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

FRUIT PUNCHES.

TEMPERANCE punches made with fresh fruits are appreciated on a sultry day. They are just the beverages to serve at the lawn or porch party and look tempting served in the punch bowl with a block of ice and garnished with sprigs of mint.

Acid Punches.

Orange Punch.—Make lemonade with four lemons. A small cupful of granulated sugar and a pint of water may be added to the juice with pulp of six oranges and a heaping tablespoonful of minced pineapple. Pour this on a block of ice and just before serving turn in a quart of sparkling water.

Lemon Punch.—An excellent punch with lemons as a foundation is made by mixing the juice of six lemons with a cupful of granulated sugar and letting it stand in the cold an hour. About two cupfuls of crushed ice may then be put in the punch bowl and the lemon and sugar poured on it. Take long stemmed sprigs of mint and crush the stems to bring out the flavor. Stir these into the fruit, ice and sugar and empty upon them two bottles of chilled ginger ale.

A Fruit Compound.

Mixed Fruit Punch.—With cold tea and lemonade a number of delicious hot weather drinks may be compounded. One of the best is a fruit punch which is a strong lemonade, to which are added sliced pineapple, orange, banana or almost any sort of fruit. The compound is poured over a big lump of ice in a punch bowl.

Fruit Tea Punch.—Mix eight ounces of Oolong, six of Ceylon and two of English tea. Of this take six table-spoonfuls, place in a quart of boiling water, steep for five minutes; strain. When cold pour in a pitcher containing one-half cupful granulated sugar, six table-spoonfuls lemon juice, one lemon and one orange sliced thin and one quart fresh raspberries and two cupfuls powdered ice. Fill the month of the pitcher with a bunch of fresh mint, dusted with powdered sugar. When ready to serve add one pint carbonated water.

A Frozen Punch.

iced Fruit Punch.—Dissolve a pound and a quarter of sugar in a quart of boiling water, add the grated rind of one lemon and one orange, being careful that only the yellow rind is used, as the least bit of the white will give it a bitter taste. Stir in two table-spoonfuls of gelatin that has been soaked for an hour in half a cupful of water. Strain the whole for five minutes till the gelatin has thoroughly dissolved. Take from the fire and when cool add extract of orange or lemon to suit the taste. Allow to get cold and put in a freezer and stir slowly and evenly till frozen.

WORK OF THE WEATHER BUREAU

Few People Have an Idea How Storms and Floods are Forecasted.

DONE IN BUSINESS-LIKE WAY

Storms, as a Rule, Do Not Originate in the United States.

Their General Direction and Rate of Progress Can Be Determined in Most Cases Many Days in Advance.

Many people have an idea that there is something mysterious and occult about the work of the U. S. Weather Bureau in forecasting the coming of storms, frosts and floods. Not a few think that the observers must necessarily get their data by reading the planets, the stars and the moon. As a matter of fact, the forecaster of the bureau foretells the coming of disturbances in a business-like way, very similar to that in which a man who has ordered a shipment of goods would estimate the date of its arrival.

Suppose a business man has ordered a carload of pineapples from the Hawaiian Islands. He would know the average time it would take the steamer to make the trip to the Pacific port, the average time for unloading and loading into refrigerator cars and the average number of days to be allowed these cars for their trip across the continent to New York. His estimate, however, would be subject to error because the steamship might be delayed by fog or the cars might meet with an accident.

Storms, like pineapples, as a rule do not originate in the United States. They come to us, some from the Philippines, Japan, Siberia, Alaska, Canada or the Gulf of Mexico. The Weather Bureau gets cable, telegraphic or wireless notice of a foreign storm. Station after station of vessel after vessel reports the storm's arrival in its neighborhood, so that the general direction and rate of progress can be determined very nearly. In fact, the arrival of some storms can be forecasted ten days in advance.

The forecasters watch for the region of low barometer which is the storm center around which the wind blows. This whirl or eddy moves bodily forward with the general eastward drift of about 350 miles a day in our latitudes. As the lines of equal pressure (isobars) around the low center crowd closer together, the winds, attending the storm increase in force. The forecaster determines the direction of movement of the storm and its velocity.

When weather disturbances are reported the forecasters know from experience about how long it takes them to reach our Pacific Coast and then how long after they will reach the Atlantic Coast. For example, if a storm coming from Siberia drifts eastward around the North Pole and reappears in Alaska it should appear in Washington and Oregon in about two days, should get to the Great Lakes in six days and to the Atlantic Coast in seven or eight days.

Unexpected conditions may delay storms or divert them from the straight track just as a refrigerator car may be thrown off its schedule or be shipped by accident on a wrong road. Some of these storms deplete themselves by running into regions of high barometer which are of greater magnitude and extent than the storm itself. Some of them, however, travel completely around the world.

To keep tab on cold waves that come into the United States from Canada and Alaska the Weather Bureau studies the Canadian weather reports. England sends reports from Iceland, the British Islands and Continental Europe, and daily reports come from St. Petersburg on the conditions in Russia and Siberia.

The same business-like system used in tracing the track of a storm is applied in determining the arrival of storms.

Flood forecasts are made in much the same way. Information as to the amount of rainfall at the head waters of streams that cause floods are covered by telegraphic reports sent by local observers. As this rain reaches the main channel the height of the water in the channel is determined by successive gaging stations. Past records establish how much a height, say, of 20 feet at Dubuque, Iowa, will produce at Davenport, another station 80 miles down the Mississippi. This plan is followed all the way down the river and at each point full allowance is made for the effects of water from tributaries and from additional local rainfall. As a result of these observations in the recent flood the people of Cairo had warning a week or ten days in advance. The Pittsburgh district can be given only twelve to twenty-four hours notice, because a flood is upon them within twenty-four hours after a heavy rainstorm.

FORMER RESIDENT KILLED IN WRECK

Thomas Scroggie Meets Horrible Death
Three Miles North of Jackson Sunday Night.

Wm. Scroggie of This City a Brother of Victim—Burial Takes Place in This City Thursday.

Sunday night about 9:45 a terrible wreck took place on the Jackson Saginaw division of the Michigan Central three miles north of Jackson between a passenger train and a freight. Four men were killed and eighteen men and women injured. Among the death victims was Thomas Scroggie of Owosso, a former resident of this city.

Thomas Scroggie was born in Vermont March 15, 1870, and was 43 years of age. He spent his early life in this city. He moved to Bay Shore, where he engaged in business, later going to Petoskey, again entering into business. About four years ago he moved to Owosso, where he and his family made their home up to the time of the accident. Mr. Scroggie was an agent for the International Harvester Company at Owosso and was well known throughout his territory.

Mr. Scroggie is survived by his wife and two daughters, also two brothers—William Scroggie of this city and Dean Scroggie of Hayes—and two sisters, Mrs. William Gray of Hayes and Mrs. George Zipp of Petoskey.

Mrs. Zipp and her nephew, Albert Cropping, and Dean Scroggie left Monday night for Owosso to bring the remains back to this city. The body will reach here Thursday morning and funeral services will be held at the Methodist church, Rev. Walker officiating, interment to be made in Brookside cemetery.

News of the accident and death was received here Monday morning and was a shock to the community. The public extends its sympathy to the bereaved family and relatives. Mr. Scroggie was a congenial, light-hearted man and made friends wherever he went.

The body of Mr. Scroggie when found in the wreck was tightly

PRINCIPLES AND PLANS FOR REORGANIZATION OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS

Present Plan Wasteful and Irrational—High Schools Should Be Made a Real People's College and Should Also Prepare the Young People of Today —for the Best Service Possible.

That the present courses followed by students in the average high school of today does not prepare them in a proper manner, not only for the average business of life, but to enter the various colleges, is the opinion of not only the leading educators, but of a majority of parents. Many changes are needed in the present system, and below is offered suggestions as to the real needs of practically every high school in the country:

The present plan of organization of the secondary schools is wasteful and irrational, and can find no real basis in either logic or psychology. A little history of the secondary school will help to make the matter somewhat clearer. The origin of the secondary school was in the grammar schools of New England, which were established by a law passed in 1647, which required every community of one hundred families to establish a grammar school. The main object was to fit the young man for the ministry and was therefore very narrow in its scope and did not meet the needs of the majority of the people. Naturally the interest in that kind of a school declined.

In 1778 there arose a new kind of secondary school, generally through private generosity and private initiative. These academies were wider in their scope and aimed to prepare the student not only for college but for any profession and were of great benefit even to those who never intended to go to the university. The scope can be better seen when we examine the list of studies which were a part of the course: English, Latin, Greek, French, Arithmetic, Writing, Public Speaking, Practical Geometry. These schools were primarily for the wealthy and the well-to-do, but people were not long in seeing the advantage of these schools and wondering why all the young people could not have access to similar schools.

This led in 1826 to a law passed that required all towns of 4000 inhabitants to establish a first-rate high school and all towns of 300 families to establish a second-rate high school. The main difference was that the first was with Greek and the second was without. From this time to 1886 the high school developed in some small matters but remained practically the same. In all cases the schools were for both sexes.

Thus far it is shown that the secondary school had its origin as a college preparatory institution, that it served a purpose but was wedged on the west side of the smoking car. One hand was protruding through the side of the car, which was torn and splintered. His body lay in the wreck for several hours and when recovered the skull was found to be crushed, one arm reduced to a pulp and his face terribly distorted. Death was evidently instantaneous.

"The blame for the wreck rests entirely with the crew of the freight train," says M. T. Wright, division superintendent of the railroad. "They have thrown up their hands and admitted it. They overlooked the passenger train."

"COLLEGE LIFE" COMING

Knights of Pythias Will Put on Play Friday Evening, February 13th.

The Knights of Pythias will put on the pleasing musical comedy "College Life" on February 13th with a splendid local talent cast of fifty people.

Mr. Clyde P. Steen will have the direction of the play and has produced it with great success at many places, including Mancelona, East Jordan and Harbor Springs, where the press and people spoke in warmest praise of the play, the performance and the manager.

Further notice will be given as the rehearsals progress, but from what we have read we can assure our people that a rare treat is awaiting them.

only beneficial to a portion of the people, since its aims and scope were narrow and its main object to provide men for the ministry. It could not permanently hold the support of the majority of the community. Even its later development had for its main object the preparation for college and as such was narrow in its scope. It did, it is true, provide the subjects necessary for general culture, but that was not its main aim. Our present high school is an offspring of those of colonial times and as such has many of their faults. Its main aim is still preparation for some thing higher in place of being complete in itself. Many educators are of the opinion that radical changes are needed in order to make the high school a real people's college and to prepare the young people of today for the best service possible. Among the changes suggested is that the course shall be six instead of four years. We will now show the reasons why this is deemed necessary and wise:

First, the high school does not begin at the change of the life of the student. The beginning of a child's life is a period of exploration, a going on for everything. This is seen in the way a little child tries of his playthings. The same thing is noticed by all teachers of young people and undoubtedly the trouble in the lower grades arises from the fact that the child is kept too long at the same thing, until his interest lags and trouble ensues. Dewey says: "The aim of the elementary school is wrong. It should not be knowledge, but to organize the instincts and impulses of the children into working interests and tools. The stress should be on methods, not results. Not that we do not want results, but that we transfer the emphasis of attention to the problem of mental attitude and operation. We need to develop a certain activity in truth and its allies, a certain disposition to its inquiry together with a command of the tools that make it effective, and to organize certain modes of activity in observation, construction and expression. Six years ought to be enough to accomplish this." Thus it appears that elementary education, besides promoting and strengthening one's physical health, has as its main object the opening of mind to the entire world and its elements; the development of interest in the world and its activities; and the fostering of desirable habits of mind and body. Could

FIRE MYSTERY DISCLOSED

Robert Crandall Confessed to Throwing Cigarette Stub in Straw.

Petoskey suffered a severe fire loss early Tuesday morning, when the Petoskey Grocery Company's barn was burned and a fine team of heavy draft horses suffocated by the smoke and heat. The total loss will not exceed $1000.

The fire was discovered about 1:20 o'clock Tuesday morning and was burning fiercely in the hay and straw when first noticed. The building was owned by C. Z. Bockes and is a total loss.

The man who caused the fire has been discovered in the person of Robert Crandall, who was arrested Tuesday forenoon by Officers Wolff and Kurtz as a suspect. The man underwent the "third degree" and finally confessed his part in the fire.

His story is that he was drunk and had gone into the shed part of the building to sleep the remainder of the night in the hay and straw. He says he smoked a cigarette and supposed he threw the lighted butt into the straw. He was awakened by a small blaze in the straw. He claims to have put this fire out and after that left the building. He had not gone far, however, before, looking back, he discovered the whole east side of the shed in flames. He went to the nearby home of George Wilmarth, driver of the grocery company's team, who had charge of the barn, and awakened him and assisted the best he could in trying to put out the fire. He is being held until a further investigation can be made of his story and proper papers filed.

He is the same fellow who about a week ago was picked up by Officer Wolff nearly frozen to death in a snowdrift near his home and taken to Petoskey hospital. Just what charge will be placed against him has not yet been decided.

SOMEONE FOUND IT

All Articles Found Should be Advertised in Some Manner at Once.

LOST—Black Morocco Leather Pocketbook with small amount of money and valuable papers between State Bank and the County Bank January 3rd. Finder leave at Court office.

The above advertisement appeared in the January 14th issue of the Courier, also in the same issue of the Charlevoix Sentinel. As stated in the advertisement, the pocketbook was lost between the Charlevoix County Bank and the State Savings Bank. The party who lost the pocketbook retraced their steps within five minutes, but during this time it had been picked up by some one passing by. About $5 in money and valuable papers consisting of bank deposit slips, tax receipts, a railroad ticket and a note were in the pocketbook. The loser offers all the money as a reward for the return of the pocketbook. The papers have no value to anyone but the person who lost them.

Undoubtedly the party who found the pocketbook is now looking for its owner and will return it as soon as he is known. But the proper method, to me on finding lost articles is either to advertise them in the local papers or post notices in prominent places. If the finder will leave the above lost pocketbook at this office a reward in the amount of the money in the pocketbook will be given them and the valuable papers handed over to the person who lost them.

THIRD NUMBER OF LECTURE COURSE

The Cambridge Players to Appear at Charlevoix Theater February 5th.

Company is Spoken Of in Highest Terms Wherever They Have Appeared.

The third number in the course of entertainments under the auspices of the Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course will be given at the Charlevoix Theatre Thursday evening, February 5th, commencing at 8:00 o'clock sharp.

The Cambridge Players, who are booked for this date, are an organization that mark the beginning of a new epoch in Lyceum entertainments. Four good artists brought together by the same interests and all peculiarly fitted for the positions they occupy. This is the only organization to which Mr. Elias Day has given the use of his name as coach and director. The members of this company have banded themselves in a business organization in the form of a joint stock company, thus insuring stability and continued service. They offer to the public entertainments of purpose, variety and thoroughly artistic modeling, with an attention to detail that will be a revelation. The scenes from famous plays are the most famous and vital, the humor clean and wholesome, the singing above reproach.

At every place where they have entertained they have made good. Tickets will be placed on sale at the Central Drug Store Wednesday, February 4.

MICHIGAN STOMACH SUFFERS DISCOVER THE QUICKEST REMEDY

Swift Relief of Ills of Digestive Tract Given by Mayr's Wonderful Treatment.

Hundreds of Michigan people have found quick deliverance from stomach troubles by the use of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. This remarkable treatment has established a record of proven results and benefits. It has cured everywhere. Here is what two Michigan people say:

Mrs. Guy A. Remmer of 1307 North street, Flint, Mich.—"I never saw anything work—such wonders as just three doses did. I have been doctored by specialists, too, and received very little benefit."

A. W. Hubbs of 1301 East Main street, Jackson, Mich.—"I had not been well in fifteen years. After taking a few doses of your wonderful remedy I am in perfect condition."

Such words of praise come from users of this remedy in all parts of the United States. The first dose gives a long treatment.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of unclean accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare that it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure that it has saved their lives.

The normal class attended the farmers' institute at Ironton Tuesday. Several interesting talks were given on soil management, alfalfa, culture, production and care of milk, and many others which will greatly aid the class in teaching agriculture next year.

MUST BORROW PROPERLY

School District Boards Cannot Secure Money Loans on Time Orders.

Michigan banks are discovering that unless school boards make loans as prescribed by law the districts cannot be held for the money. The statutes give to the board the authority to vote any amount of money necessary for the running expenses of the school and for any school furnishings and appurtenances deemed desirable. They also provide that when the tax is voted by the board and the money is needed before the tax can be spread and collected, the board may borrow on the strength of the tax voted a sum not to exceed the total of the tax. School treasurers have no right to honor orders, even if properly signed and countersigned, unless there is a sufficient amount in the particular fund upon which the order is drawn. If the fund is exhausted money must be borrowed. The tax must be spread the following October.

It has been customary in many places to borrow on the strength of the tax voted for the year and to pay the same when the tax is collected. This is not the way to do it. The law requires that the money be borrowed before the tax is spread and collected.

CHICAGO-MACKINAW RACE

Long Distance Contest to be Resumed After Lapse of Two Years.

After a lapse of two years the Mackinac race, most famous long distance contest on any waters, will be placed on the yachting card for the coming summer, according to the plans of Chicago yachtsmen.

Ever since the heavy gale and trouble that occurred in 1911, when the Vincitor was lost just below south point and another boat was wrecked and others badly damaged, Mackinac has been passed up by the yachtsmen, as there is no adequate shelter there for a fleet of any size. The finishing point of the race will probably be at Harbor Springs.

where there is an excellent harbor. It is also planned to have a power boat contest in connection with the race.

CHAPTER XVIII. The Confession.

BURKE pressed the button call and ordered the doorman to send in Cassidy. When the detective appeared he asked: "Does Garson know we've arrested the Turner girl and young Gilder?" And, when he had been answered in the negative: "Or that we've got Chicago Red and Davey here?" "No," Cassidy replied. "He hasn't been spoken to since we made the collar. He seems worried," the detective volunteered.

"He'll be more worried before I get through with him!" he growled. He regarded Cassidy speculatively. "Do you remember the third degree Inspector Burns worked on McGinnis?" Well, he went on, as the detective nodded assent, "that's what I'm going to do to Garson. He's got imagination, that crook! The things he's afraid of! After he gets in here, I want you to take his pals one after the other, and lock them up in the cells there in the corridor. The shades on the corridor windows here will be up, and Garson will see them taken in. The fact of their being there will set his imagination to working overtime, all right."

Burke reflected for a moment, and then issued the final directions for the execution of his latest plot. "When you get the buzzer from me, you have young Gilder and the Turner woman sent in. Then, after a while, you'll get another buzzer. When you hear that, come right in here, and tell me that the gang has squealed. I'll do the rest. Bring Garson here in just five minutes. Tell Dan to come in."

As the detective went out, the door man entered, and thereon Burke proceeded with the further instructions necessary to the carrying out of his scheme.

"Take the chairs out of the office, Dan," he directed, "except mine and one other—that one!" He indicated a chair standing a little way from one end of his desk. "Now, have all the shades up!" He chuckled as he added: "That Turner woman saved you the trouble with one!"

He returned to his chair, and when the door opened he was to all appearances busily engaged in writing. "Here's Garson, chief," Cassidy announced.

"Hello, Joe!" Burke exclaimed, with a seeming air of careless friendliness, as the detective went out, and Garson stood motionless just within the door.

"Sit down a minute, won't you?" the inspector continued affably. He did not look up from his writing as he spoke.

Garson's usually strong face was showing weak with fear. His chin which was commonly very firm, moved a little from uneasy twitches of his lips. His clear eyes were slightly clouded to a look of apprehension as they raved the room furtively. He made no answer to the inspector's greeting for a few moments, but remained standing without movement poised alertly as if sensing some concealed peril. Finally, however, his anxiety found expression in words. His tone was pregnant with alarm though he strove to make it merely complaining.

"Say, what am I arrested for?" he protested. "I ain't done anything."

"Burke did not look up, and his pen continued to hurry over the paper. "Who told you you were arrested?" he remarked cheerfully in his blandest voice.

Garson uttered an ejaculation of disgust. "I don't have to be told," he retorted haughtily. "I'm no college president, but when a cop grabs me and brings me down here I've got sense enough to know I'm pinched!"

"Is that what they did to you, Joe? I'll have to speak to Cassidy about that. Now, just you sit down, Joe, won't you? I want to have a little talk with you. I'll be through here in a second." He went on with the writing.

nervousness increased momentarily. It swept beyond his control. Of a sudden he sprang up and stepped close to the inspector.

"Say," he said, in a husky voice, "I'd like to have a lawyer."

"What's the matter with you, Joe?" the inspector returned, always with that imperturbable air, and without raising his head from the work that so engrossed his attention. "You know, you're not arrested Joe. Maybe you never will be. Now, for the love of Mike, keep still and let me finish this letter."

Slowly, very hesitatingly, Garson went back to the chair, and sank down on it in a limp attitude of dejection wholly unlike his customary postures of strength. Again his fear fascinated eyes were to the row of cells that stood silently nuzzling on the other side of the corridor beyond the windows. His face was tinged with gray. A physical sickness was creeping stealthily on him, as his thoughts held insistently to the catastrophe that threatened. His intelligence was too keen to permit a belief that Burke's manner of almost fawning kindness hid nothing ominous with a hint of death for him in return for the death he had wrought.

Then, terror crystallized. His eyes were caught by a figure, the figure of Cassidy, advancing there in the corridor. And with the detective went a man whose gait was slinking, craven. A cell door swung open, the prisoner stepped within, the door clanged to the bolts shot into their sockets noisily.

Garson sat huddled, stricken—for he had recognized the victim thrust into the bed before his eyes. It was Davey, one of his own cronies in crime—Davey, who, the night before, had seen him kill Eddie Griggs. There was something concretely sinister to Garson in this fact of Davey's presence there in the cell.

Of a sudden the finger cried out ran loudly.

"Say, inspector, if you've got anything on me, I'll tell you!" The cry dropped into unintelligible mumbles.

Burke retained his manner of serene indifference to the other's agitation. Still, his pen hurried over the paper, and he did not trouble to look up as he expostulated, half laconically.

"Now, now! What's the matter with you, Joe? I told you that I wanted to ask you a few questions. That's all."

But, after a moment, Garson's emotion forced him to another appeal.

"Say, inspector," he began.

Then, abruptly, he was silent, his mouth still open to utter the words that were now held back by horror. Again, he saw the detective walking forward, out there in the corridor. And with him, as before, was a second figure, which advanced slinkingly.

Again the door swung wide, the prisoner slipped within, the door clanged shut, the bolts clattered noisily into their sockets.

And, in the watched terror grew for he had seen the face of Chicago Red, another of his pals, another who had seen him kill Griggs. At last he licked his dry lips, and his voice broke in a throaty whisper.

"Say, inspector, if you've got anything against me, why?"

"Who said there was anything against you, Joe?" Burke rejoined, in a voice that was gently chiding.

"Say, inspector, if you've got anything on me!"

"What's the matter with you today, Joe? You seem nervous." Still, the official kept on with his writing.

"No, I ain't nervous," Garson cried with a feverish effort to appear calm. "Why, what makes you think that?"

But this ain't exactly the place you pick out as a pleasant one to spend the morning!" He was silent for a little, trying with all his strength to regain his self control, but with small success.

Burke believed that his opportunity was come. His hand slipped into the pocket where was the pistol, and clutched it. He stared at Garson fiercely, and spoke with a rush of the words.

"Why did you kill Eddie Griggs?"

"I didn't kill him!" The reply was quick enough, but it came weakly. Again, Garson was forced to wet his lips with a dry tongue, and to swallow painfully. "I tell you, I didn't kill him!" he repeated at last, with more force.

"You killed him last night—with this!" Burke cried, viciously. On the instant, the pistol leaped into view, pointed straight at Garson. "Why?" the inspector shouted. "Come on, now! Why?"

"I didn't, I tell you!" Garson was growing stronger, since at last the crisis was upon him. He got to his feet with the swiftness of movement and sprang close to the desk. He bent his head forward challengingly, to meet the glare of his accuser's eyes.

There passed many seconds, while the two men battled in silence, will warring against will. In the end it was the murderer who triumphed.

Suddenly, Burke dropped the pistol into his pocket, and looked back in his chair. His gaze fell away from the man confronting him. In the same instant, the rigidity of Garson's form relaxed, and he straightened slowly.

"Oh, well," Burke exclaimed amiably, "I didn't really think you did, but I wasn't sure, so I had to take a chance. You understand, don't you, Joe?"

"Sure, I understand," Garson replied, with an amiability equal to the inspector's own.

Burke pressed the buzzer as the agreed signal to Cassidy. "Where did you say Mary Turner was last night?"

At the question, all Garson's fears for the woman rushed back on him with appalling force.

"I don't know where she was," he exclaimed doubtfully. He realized his blunder even as the words left his lips, and sought to correct it as best he might. "Why, yes, I do, too," he went on, as it flashed by sudden memory.

"I dropped into her place last night, and they said she'd gone to bed—headache, I guess. Yes, she was home of course. She didn't go out of the house all night." His insistence on the point was of itself suspicious, but eagerness to protect her dulled his wits.

"Know anything about Gilder?" Burke demanded.

"Not a thing," was the earnest answer.

The inner door opened, and Mary Turner entered the office. Garson with difficulty suppressed the cry of distress that rose to his lips. For a few moments the silence was unbroken. Then, presently Burke by a gesture directed the girl to advance toward the center of the room. As she obeyed he himself went a little toward the door, and when it opened again and Dick Gilder appeared he interposed to check the young man's rush forward as his gaze fell on his table, who stood regarding him with sad eyes.

Then, while still that curious, dawning silence endured, Cassidy came briskly into the office.

"Say, chief," the detective said rapidly, "they're squealed!"

"Squealed, eh? Do they tell the same story?" And then when the detective had answered in the affirmative he went on speaking in tones now deems with self complacency.

"I was right! Then, after all, right all the time. Good enough." Of a sudden his voice boomed solemnly. "Mary Turner, I want you for the murder of—"

Garson's rush halted the sentence. He had leaped forward. His face was rigid. He broke on the inspector's words with a gesture of fury. His voice came in a hiss.

"That's a — lie! I did it!"

CHAPTER XIX.
Anguish and Bliss.

GARSON shouted his confession without a second of reflection. But the reply must have been the same and he taken years of thought. Between him and her as the victim of the law, there could be no hesitation for choice. The joint necessity was to save her, Mary, from the tolls of the law that were closing around her. For himself, in the days to come, there would be a ghastly dread, but there would never be regret over the cost of saving her. He had saved her from the waters—he would save her until this end, as far as the power in him might lie.

The suddenness of it all held Mary voiceless for long seconds. She was frozen with horror of the event. When at last, words came, they were a frantic prayer of protest.

"No, Joe! No! Don't talk—don't talk!"

"Joe has talked," Burke said, significantly. "He did it to protect me," she stated earnestly.

The inspector disdained such futile argument. As the doorman appeared in answer to the buzzer, he directed that the stenographer be summoned at once.

"We'll have the confession in due form," he remarked, gazing pleasantly on the three before him.

"He's not going to confess," Mary insisted, with spirit.

But Burke disregarded her completely, and spoke mechanically to Garson the formal warning required by the law.

"You are hereby cautioned that any thing you say may be used against you." (Continued on page 61.)

PROBABLY no concern is asked to give more of its stock in trade to charity than newspapers. Promoters of entertainments of every kind feel perfectly free to demand advertising space or advertising thinly disguised as news matter, space that they could not buy and pay for because it is not sold. These same folks, animated no doubt by the best of motives, would not think of going to a dry goods store and asking for a bolt of silk or shoes. Yet space in a newspaper is regarded as legitimate prey. We have always done our part for charity and always will, but if charity is to entirely take the place of business, as seems the present tendency, very soon we will have to go out begging too.

ONE of the principal reasons why the solution of many important questions is so slow is because the people devote too much time to discussion of the unimportant details instead of getting at the base of the trouble. There is little to be gained by removing pebbles from the road of progress when it is obstructed by boulders that weigh tons.

If the members of congress would devote as much of their time to passing needed legislation as they do to fighting over the distribution of patronage the people who elect them would come a great deal nearer to getting their money's worth out of the salaries they pay these public officials.

If it were as easy for people to do things themselves as to give advice to others how to do them there would be no great problems to be settled, because everything would be properly smoothed out long before any condition had a chance to resolve itself into a problem.

FOUR hundred collectors will be required under the new income tax law and so far there are ten thousand applicants for the positions. It is apparent that about as many people are willing to work for the government as for Henry Ford.

The better some men know themselves the more suspicious they are of others.

Origin of Duels.
Duelling took its rise from the judicial combats of the Celtic nations. The first formal duel in England, between William, Count of Flanders and Godfrey Baynard, took place in 1083. The duel in civil matters was forbidden in France in 1305. Francis I. challenged the Emperor Charles V. in vain in 1528. The fight with small sword was introduced into England in 1585. A proclamation was made in 1579 that no person should be pardoned who had killed another in a duel. The custom was checked in the British army in 1792 and was abolished in England by the act of public opinion.—Kansas City Star.

SHOCK ABSORBING HUB.

Steel Ball Fluid Bearing For Automobile Wheels.

For over two years motor buses have been in use in London which run on leather tired wheels, and the vehicles are said actually to run with less vibration than pneumatically tired omnibuses.

The secret lies not in the tire, although it is of novel form being made of hydraulically compressed, specially tanned leather, but in the hub, which is so designed as to dissipate the shocks before they reach the axle. The hub is shown in the accompanying cross sectional view. It will be observed that an annular space between the shaft and the hub cylinder is filled with steel balls, each about three-eighths inch in diameter. These balls go around the shaft and support it. They do not quite fill the annular space, but leave a gap, such as indicated at A under the axle C. The balls arrange themselves in an arch across this gap. A road shock passing up one of the spokes B of the wheel cannot reach the axle because of the row of balls D intervening. The entire row is forced across the gap A, carrying the momentum of the shock from the forward to the backward moving half of the wheel. The shock is then communicated to the steel balls above, which slip and slide upon each other and revolve on their axes, distributing the shock just as a liquid would. In fact, the filling about the axle may actually be considered a steel ball liquid, so far as its operation is concerned, but with the advantage that the steel balls are slightly elastic.

POTASH FERTILIZERS.

Experiments Show That Kainite Protects Crops From Frost.

Experiments made in France by W. Goltz show that potash fertilizers have the property of protecting crops against damage from frost. In order to show what results are obtained in different cases he proceeds as follows:

Three areas of a quarter of an acre each were sown with rye. The first area did not receive any fertilizer, and on the second and third there were spread 200 and 150 pounds, respectively, of the fertilizer known as "kainite." After a period of heavy frosts it was found that the ground of the area which was strongly fertilized had not been frozen. The second or less fertilized area was much less frozen than the unfertilized field. The author considers that this effect is no doubt due to the saline solution at the surface of the soil. However, he finds that the sprouts on the strongly treated areas were less flourishing than the others, and the leaves seemed to have lost a considerable percentage of water by plasmolysis. But during the thawing period the pathological symptoms disappeared and the plant showed a rapid and vigorous growth.

On the contrary, on the unfertilized area the effects of the frost were shown by a yellowing of the leaves. As is known, the damage caused by freezing is due to the fact that the water con-

The proofreader on a certain western daily was a woman of great precision and extreme propriety. One day a reporter succeeded in getting into type an item about Willie Brown, the boy who was burned in the West End by a live wire. The next day the reporter found on his desk a frigid note asking "Which is the west end of a boy?" It took only an instant to reply "The end the son set on, of course."

Judge Mayne, who was in Petoskey Monday completing the winter term of Emmet county circuit court has paroled more than one hundred and sixty prisoners who have been before him in his home circuit for sentence. The judge is perhaps the strongest advocate of the parole system in Michigan, and out of this number of paroles he has experienced trouble with less than twelve, which fact speaks strongly for itself for the parole system, as advocated by Judge Mayne. He is making a broad, careful study of the parole question and in his conversation on the subject displays a deep knowledge of what goes to make a successful parole system. The judge is a delightful conversationalist and a chat with him on any subject is more than pleasant.—Petoskey Evening News.

MANY USERS OF THE HAMMER

Not as Effective as the Salve Pot, But Used More.

Average Individual's Ideal of Way to Reform Things is by Perpetual Knocking.

The most over-estimated weapon in the world is the hammer. It isn't one-millionth part as effective as the salve pot, though the great majority of people go through life without finding it out.

The average individual's ideal of the way to reform things is by perpetual knocking, which perhaps explains why so few abuses are ever changed for the better. Theoretically you can smash anything by hammering it hard enough and long enough, but in actual practice this does not work out successfully, especially when it is applied to the faults and foibles of human nature.

Still, when a man doesn't like his wife's housekeeping or thinks she spends too much money—bing—he begins lambasting her cooking and extravagance. And a live goes on burning the roast, and making dish water coffee, and buying imported lingerie and French hats.

If a woman objects to her husband's belonging to a club or smoking she keeps busy day in and day out pegging away with her little hammer—knock, knock, knock, and still he puts on his hat and makes a break for freedom the minute dinner is over and he smokes like a furnace.

If Johnnie is awkward and spills things at the table and hates school the whole family organizes itself into an avvil chorus, and it's bing, bing, bing from morning till night, until Johnnie grows surly, and hates home and books, and spends all the time he can with acquaintances he picks up on the street.

If an employer wants to speed up his employees and get more work and better service out of them he goes for them with a trip hammer and abuses them for loafers and incompetents and shirks, and the employees say to each other that the old man is a grinch who never appreciates good work anyway, so what's the use in giving it to him? And they don't.

Fault finding and blame never yet reformed anything, but praise is the lever of Archimedes with which you can move the world of humanity. And the reason of this is plain enough. Praise touches us in our weakest spot, our vanity, whereas blame wounds us in our most vulnerable point, our self-esteem, and there is a natural inclination to revenge our hurt pride by persisting in doing the thing we were censured for doing.

Of course if we were the grand, noble creature we should be, bent on our highest self-development, when our attention was called to our faults we would devote our energies to building up and strengthening the weak spots in our characters. That would be the logical thing to do, but alas, which of us are logical, when it comes down to brass tacks with us?

Surely this axiom should furnish a tip to the knocker that it would be better to throw away their hammers and get busy spreading the salve if they want results. As a matter of fact, everybody knows that all you've got to do to make a woman break her neck is to dangle a little flattery before her. She will go for it every time, and so advise the husband who bemoans his wife's bills to try praising her economy a little. Let him discourse before company upon her thrift and what a help she is, and, my word for it she will put a lock on her pocketbook that it will take a professional safe cracker to undo.

Likewise any woman can be turned into a good housekeeper by a husband who judiciously praises and sorrowfully remarks over a bad one that it isn't up to her normal exalted ordinary standard.

Positively the only thing that will nail a man to his own hearthstone and make him a generous, attentive and interested lover as well as a husband, is to find in his own home a brand of flattery so much more potent, so much higher spiced and so much more inextinguishable than any to be had that it puts all other women into the amateur, hot air class besides his wife.

As for employees, isn't it invariably the man who knows he is most trusted who is most trustworthy, the one who knows the boss depends on him who is most dependable, the crackjack salaried man who works ten times as hard to sell to the man who knows that not much is expected of him?

Oh, it's praise, and not blame, that makes the world go around. We give the best of us to those who expect the best of us, and who appreciate that best. Throw away the hammer, and try spreading the salve.

yon." Then, as the stenographer entered, he went on with lively interest. "Now, Joe?"

Yet once again, Mary protested, a little wildly.

"Don't speak, Joe! Don't say a word till we can get a lawyer for you!"

The man met her pleading eyes steadily, and shook his head in refusal. "It's no use, my girl," he said. "I'm going to try you and Garson, and the whole gang for murder—yes, every one of you. And you, Glider, he continued, lowering on the young man who had defied him so obstinately, "you'll go to the house of detention as a material witness." He turned his gaze to Garson again, and spoke authoritatively. "Come on now, Joe?"

Garson went a step toward the desk and spoke decisively.

"If I come through, you'll let her go—and him?" he added as an afterthought, with a nod toward Dick Glider.

"We'll get the best lawyers in the country," Mary persisted desperately. "We'll save you, Joe—we'll save you!"

Garson regarded the distraught girl with wistful eyes. But there was no trace of yielding in his voice as he replied, though he spoke very sorrowfully.

"No, you can't help me," he said simply. "My time has come, Mary. And I can save you a lot of trouble."

"He's right there," Burke ejaculated. "We've got him cold. So, what's the use of dragging you two into it?"

"Then they go clear?" Garson exclaimed, eagerly. "They ain't ever to be called as witnesses?"

"You're on!" Burke agreed.

"Then, here goes!" Garson cried, and he looked expectantly toward the stenographer.

"My name is Joe Garson."

"Alias?" Burke suggested.

"Alias nothing!" came the sharp retort. "Garson's my moniker. I shot English Eddie, because he was a skunk and a stool pigeon, and he got just what was coming to him." Utterance beyond the mere words burst in his voice now.

"Now, now!" Burke objected severely. "We can't take a confession like that!"

Garson shook his head—spoke with fiercer hatred.

"Because he was a skunk and a stool pigeon," he repeated. "Have you got it?" And then, as the stenographer nodded assent, he went on, less violently: "I croaked him just as he was going to call the bulls with a police whistle. I used a gun with smokeless powder. It had a Maxim silencer on it, so that it didn't make any noise."

Garson paused, and the set despair of his features lightened a little. Into his voice came a tone of exultation, he described glibly. It was born of the eternal optimism of the criminal, feeling vainly in gloating over his ingenuity for evil. He stared at Burke with a quizzical grin crooking his lips.

"Say," he exclaimed, "I'll bet it's the first time a guy was ever croaked with one of them things! Ain't it?"

The inspector nodded affirmance.

"Some class to that, eh?" Garson demanded, still with that growling air of boasting. "I got the gun and the Maxim silencer thing off a fence in Boston," he explained. "Say, that thing cost me $60, and it's worth every cent of the money. Why, they'll remember me as the first to spring one of them things, won't they?"

"They sure will, Joe!" the inspector conceded.

"Nobody knew I had it," Garson continued, dropping his arrogant manner abruptly.

At the words, Mary started, and her lips moved as if she were about to speak.

"Nobody knew I had it—nobody in the world," he declared. "And nobody had anything to do with the killing but me!"

"Was there any bad feeling between you and Eddie Glider?"

"Never till that very minute. Then I learned the truth about what he'd framed up with you." The speaker's voice reverted to its former fierceness in recollection of the treachery of one whom he had trusted.

"He was a stool pigeon, and I hated him! That's all, and it's enough. And it's all true, so help me God!"

The inspector nodded dismissal to the stenographer, with an air of relief.

"That's all, Williams," he said happily. "He'll sign it as soon as you've transcribed the notes."

Then as the stenographer left the room Burke turned his gaze on the woman who stood there in a posture of complete dejection, her white, anguished face downcast. There was triumph in the inspector's voice as he addressed her, for his professional pride was full fed by this victory over his foes.

"Young woman!" Burke said harshly. "It's just like I told you. You ain't beat the law, Garson thought he could—and now—" He broke off with a wave of his hand toward the man who had just sentenced himself to death in the electric chair.

"That's right," Garson agreed, with somber intensity. His eyes were grown clouded again now, and his voice dragged leaden. "That's right, Mary," he repeated dully, after a little pause. "You can't beat the law!" He hesitated a little, then went on, with a certain curious embarrassment. "And this same old law says a woman must stick to her man."

The girl's eyes met his with passion and sorrow in their misty depths. Garson gave a significant glance toward Dick Glider, then his gaze returned to her. There was a smoldering despair in that look. There were, as well, an entreaty and a command.

"So," he went on, "you must go along with him, Mary. Won't you? It's the best thing to do."

The girl could not answer. There was a clutch on her throat just then which would not relax at the call of her will.

Of a sudden, an inspiration came to him, a means to snap the tension, to create a diversion wholly efficacious. He would turn to his bounding again would call upon his vanity, which he knew well as his chief folly, and make it serve as the foil against his love.

"You want to cut out worrying about me," he counseled, bravely. "Why, I ain't worrying any, myself—not a little bit! You see, it's something new I've pulled off. Nobody ever put over anything like it before."

He faced Burke with a grin of ghastly glee.

"I'll bet there'll be a lot of stuff in the newspapers about this, and my picture, too, in most of 'em. What?"

The man's manner improved on Burke, though Mary felt the torment that his vainglorious "meant to mask."

"Say," Garson continued to the inspector, "if the reporters want any pictures of me would I have some ones taken? The one you've got of me in the gallery is over ten years old. I've taken off my beard since then. Can I have a new one?"

"Sure you can, Joe. I'll send you up to the gallery right now."

"Immense!" Garson cried boisterously. He moved toward Dick Glider, walking with a faint suggestion of swagger to cover the nervous tremor that had seized him.

"So long, young fellow," he exclaimed, and held out his hand. "You've been on the square, and I guess you always will be."

Dick had no scruple in clapping that extended hand very warmly in his own.

"We'll do what we can for you," he said simply.

"That's all right," Garson replied, with such carelessness of manner as he could contrive. Then at last he turned to Mary. This parting must be bitter, and he braced himself with all the vigors of his will to combat the weakness that leaped from his soul.

As he came near the girl could hold herself in fash no longer. She threw herself on his breast. Her arms wreathed about his neck. Great sobs racked her.

"Oh, Joe, Joe!" The gasping cry was of utter despair.

Garson's trembling hand patted the girl's shoulder very softly, a caress of infinite tenderness.

"That's all right," he murmured huskily. "That's all right, Mary. There was a short silence, and then he went on speaking more freely. "You know, he'll look after you."

He looked up over the girl's shoulder and beckoned with his hand to Dick, who came forward.

"Take good care of her, won't you?" He disengaged himself gently from the girl's embrace and set her within the arms of her husband, where she rested quietly, as if unable to fight longer against fate's decree.

"That's all right. That's all right, Mary."

"Well, so long!"

He dated not after another word but turned blindly, and went, still billing a little, toward the doorman who had appeared in answer to the inspector's call.

"To the gallery," Burke ordered curtly.

Garson went on without once a glance back.

There was a long stillness in the room after Garson's passing. It was broken at last by the inspector, who got up from his chair and advanced to ward the husband and wife. In his hand he carried a sheet of paper, roughly scrawled. As he stopped before the two and cleared his throat, Mary with drew herself from Dick's arms and regarded the official with brooding eyes from out her white face.

Burke extended the sheet of paper to the husband.

"There's a document," he said gruffly. "It's a letter from one Helen Morris, in which she sets forth the interesting fact that she pulled off a theft in the Emporium, for which your Mrs. Glider bore did time. You know, your father got your Mrs. Glider sent up for three years for that, same job—which she didn't do. That's why she had such a grudge against your father and against the law too!"

Burke chuckled, as the young man took the paper, wondering.

"I don't know that I blame her much for that grudge, when all's said and done. You give that document to your father. It sets her right. He's a just man according to his lights, your father. He'll do all he can to make things right for her, now he knows. Now you two listen. I've got to go out a minute. When I get back, I don't want to find anything here—not any body!—do you get me?"

When the official was gone, the two stood staring mutely each at the other through long seconds. What she read in the man's eyes set the woman's heart to beating with a new delight. What he read in her eyes set the husband's pulses to bounding. He opened his arms in an appeal that was a command. Mary went, forward, slowly, without hesitation, in a bliss that forgot every sorrow for that blessed moment, and cast herself on his breast.

HOW TO CHOP UP CITRON.

Woman's Versatility Gets Another Chance to Assert Itself.

"Woman's versatility was proved to me the other day by my wife," declared Mr. Newby.

"She was preparing the ingredients for a mixture which she intended to bake into a cake guaranteed digestible. Only one thing was needed to make the mixture complete. That was the citron."

"There was a supply of citron in the pantry, and my wife took down some of it and set me to work cutting it in small pieces. Armed with a small vegetable knife, I set to work cutting the citron into squares. When I accomplished this my idea was to cut the squares into smaller pieces and gradually reduce the pieces to the required size."

"It was an arduous task. The citron either stuck to the knife or the cutting board, and I was forced to stop and remove a tiny piece from the knife before attempting to cut a larger piece. It was necessary to be extremely careful for fear the knife would slip and cut my hand."

"Just when I thought I was getting along gloriously my wife decided that I was taking too much time to do the work. I explained it was slow work because of the difficulties stated above."

"Well, I'll find a quicker method," she said. I thought that was impossible. She reached into the cupboard and took out the meat chopper, attached the handle to a ledge and threw it into the pieces of citron. Then she set me to turning the crank, and the citron came out the other end ground evenly and finely. The work consumed about five minutes. Who but a woman would have thought of such a scheme?"

How to Dry Handkerchiefs.

Don't continue to dry pocket handkerchiefs on your toilet table's mirror. Miss Farnsworth Roomer, to handle one's handkerchiefs is a laudable economy, but to paste them while wet upon the vanity shelf surface of a mirror always hinders and occasionally breaks it, and the latter misfortune brings seven years of bad luck to the superstitious transgressor of lodging house rules. Moreover, they can be dried more smoothly and more quickly on the sides of the bathtub. After the tub's enamel has been thoroughly scrubbed place the soporific wet handkerchiefs daintily against it and spare no pains to strike the corners of each square of linen so that they will firmly adhere. They'll dry in a few moments.

THE HARVEST.

[As the harvest hand sees it.]
It is all right for poets to talk about
The "beautiful harvest of grain,"
But when you get out and you look about Ten million square miles it's a strain
Perhaps there's romance to be met In it.
That's something I wouldn't dream of But I've found only backache and Sweat in it.
And, yes, but a fellow gets dry.
The ether goes clacking in front of you
The ship's heading down on your neck,
And the food is demanding the Amount of you.
Keep up with the blunder
You shock through the ages of history.
For thousands of years do you
Yet you find by some magic or mystery
You've worked just two hours by the clock!
You eat, but the food isn't fitting you.
You drink, but the water ain't wet.
Your back and your shoulders are Killing you.
You swim in an ocean of sweat.
The glamour of poets may give
To it.
Ah, seen by this mortal for one
I harvest because I ain't dry to it.
And you bet I ain't glad when it's done!

BIBLE STUDY ON

WHO MAY PRAY AND FOR WHAT?

Luke 11:1-13—Feb. 1.

"Ask, and it shall be given you; seek, and ye shall find; knock, and it shall be opened unto you."—Luke 11:9.

JESUS usually prayed alone. On some occasions He spent the entire night in prayer to God. How inconsistent that would have been if He Himself were the Father, who for a time was with men and outwardly appeared as "the Man Christ Jesus." But how consistent it is with His own declaration: "My Father is greater than I!"

Doubtless the disciples noted the Master's frequency in prayer and the blessings resulting therefrom. In time they requested instruction, saying, "Lord, teach us to pray!" It is well that we inquire who may pray and for what, lest we pray without authority or pray unavailingly, as St. James declares some do.—James 4:3.

There is a difference between worship and prayer. Any one may offer homage to the Lord or express appreciation. But the privilege of making requests is limited.

The Jews were privileged to pray, because they were in covenant relationship with God under the Law Covenant. But the Gentiles had no such privilege until the Jewish favor had ended—three and a half years after Jesus' crucifixion.

While any one may worship, none are privileged to pray except Jesus' consecrated followers and their immediate children. Everywhere Jesus' words, "Our Father," will be misinterpreted to signify "the fatherhood of God and the brotherhood of man." The fact that consecrated disciples, not mankind in general, were instructed to pray "Our Father" will be ignored.

Jesus Usually Prayed Alone.

There is a general tendency to ignore personal faith in the redeeming blood of the Father but by the Son. (John 14:6) Adam was created a son of God, but his disobedience and death sentence cancelled the relationship, which cannot be restored except in God's appointed way—through Christ. Prayer is a wonderful privilege. It is not for sinners, but for those justified by the Advocate whom the Father has appointed—Jesus.

"After This Manner Pray Ye."

The model prayer which Jesus gave His disciples is, grandly simple. It opens with a reverent acknowledgment of the greatness and sacredness of the Heavenly Father's name, or character. The petition, "Thy Kingdom come," is an acknowledgment of faith in God's promise that eventually His Kingdom will be established on earth, and an expression of the suppliant's heart sympathy with God and righteousness.

"Thy will be done on earth, as it is done in Heaven," signifies full confidence that Satan will be bound; that the reign of Sin and Death will end; that the knowledge of God's glory will fill the earth and that all willful opposers will be destroyed.

The request for daily bread implies our realization that our sustenance, both temporal and spiritual, must come from God. The failure to specify the kind of food implies full resignation to Divine providence.

When the justified pray, "Forgive us our trespasses," they do not refer to original sin; for they were freed from it in justification. Trespasses signify those unintentional imperfections which imperminently and which Jesus' followers strive to overcome. The request that we shall have forgiveness as we are forgiving towards those who trespass against us is a reminder of the general terms of our relationship with God. We cannot grow in grace except as we cultivate the spirit of love—a forgiving, generous spirit in our dealing with others.

"Abandon us not in temptation" indicates that we are aware that we are surrounded by the powers of evil, which we as New Creatures cannot withstand successfully without Divine aid. "Deliver us from the Evil One," is a recognition that Satan is our great Adversary, and that we are in the alert to resist him, yet realize our need of Divine assistance. "We are not ignorant of his [Satan's] devices." We wrestle not against flesh and blood [merely], but against wicked spirits in high positions.

"Seek, Knock, Ask—and Receive."

In the rambling verses of today's Study, Jesus admonishes that prayer be fervent—not merely formal words. He gave the illustration of the man who was finally moved by the earnestness of his friend's petition. So we are not to think that our prayers are unanswered. Although we are not hastening the Kingdom by our prayers, yet we are entering a blessing of rest through faith in God's promises.

What God really wishes to give His people is His Holy Spirit. Because of the imperfections of the flesh none of us can be filled with the Spirit at first. But we can come to God, desiring to be in His character, likeness; and to our knocking the door will be opened. Nor should we fear. Our Father delights to give His Spirit to those who seek it.

PRINCIPALS AND PLANS OF SECONDARY SCHOOLS

not this task be accomplished in six years? It is the opinion of the foremost educators of the day that too much time is spent in elementary preparation and that this could be applied as extra time in the secondary schools in a manner that will be explained in the following master.

It is seen, if the preceding discussion is true, that the seventh and eighth grades are of little use in elementary education. There are other reasons why they do not belong in the elementary education. At the age of twelve or thirteen the child has a change of life and enters the adolescent period. In this stage the child needs more room to expand. It is the self-assertive age when he can no longer be held to strict obedience to rules in which he can see no value. He must be shown their value before he will give obedience to them. Thus the conditions that must be given him must be very different from the ones that are used in the elementary grades. The conditions that exist in the secondary schools are very much better suited to his needs and give him a chance to exercise his growing powers. To repress these growing powers is nothing less than a criminal act, from which the child may never recover.

If the seventh and eighth grades are to be brought into the high school then the course must be lengthened—and how is this to be accomplished? Shall we simply tack the grades on, or shall the whole secondary course be rearranged?

The present day high school is not all that could be desired. In fact there are many faults. The following are the indictments made against our present system. 1. The curriculum is over crowded. 2. There is little correlation in the subject matters. 3. Exaggerated attention is given to unessential and impractical topics. 4. The pupils are overworked. 5. The course of study is inflexible. 6. No close articulation between the grades and the high school. 7. Individual tastes and capacities are not considered. 8. Teachers are improperly equipped. 9. Methods of instruction are unpedagogical. 10. The work is not effectively vocational. 11. Large numbers leave school. 12. Not enough attention is given to retarded pupils. 13. Not sufficient hard work. 14. Special trade instruction is lacking. 15. The whole system is over mechanized.

If these conditions are true then the whole system needs to be reorganized; a six year course for the elementary school and six for the high school. The rest of the discussion will be how to arrange the secondary school on this basis.

Up to the present time four methods have been suggested. First, continue the external form the same but introduce in the seventh and eighth grades the administration that is now common to the high school. About the only thing that can be said in favor of the plan that it is inexpensive. Bring the said grades into the high school and change the internal and the external conditions. This plan does not alter the conditions as they now exist in the high school, it simply gives the said grades the benefit of our now imperfect system.

The third plan desires to change the entire system so as to meet the present day criticism of our secondary system. The fourth is to divide the secondary system into two parts of three years each, the first three years called the Junior High and the last three Senior high.

The last two are the only ones that have a very large following and since the last contains all the benefits of the third and then a few more we will consider the latter proposition.

In this plan the grade would accord at the end of the sixth grade and the students would enter the Junior High, where the conditions would exist in reference to discipline as now exist in the high school. The subject matter would be English, history, civics and Geography, ethics and sociology, physiology and hygiene, arithmetic, algebra and geometry, elementary science, domestic science and arts, music and fine arts; drawing, voice culture, physical training, the latter part of the course would be taken up by vocational training the kind and the extent to be determined by the various communities.

The Senior high school would be college preparatory and would have that as its main function and which would not have the vocational features so strongly expressed. This would be especially true of the last two years. The number of subjects offered would be larger and would tend to meet

WICKERSHAM.
America's Most Popular Lecturer to Speak Here.

When fifteen years of age, Mr. Wickersham earned two dollars by cutting corn by moonlight that he might buy a ticket to the Lyceum course given at the county seat, seven miles away. Returning from the last lecture, he said to his chum, "When I grow up, I'm going to be a public speaker." "Ho, ho," he answered, "you'll make a dandy!" It was said in derision, but the boy stated a fact. Mr. Wickersham has lectured in that state nearly 1,700 times, and in that very town six times. Speaking recently of that first Lyceum course he attended, he said:

"I do not remember very much of what any one man said, but every one of them impressed me with his personality and left me with new ideals and new aspirations and inspiration. I have been living in a new and larger world ever since. If some man had given me ten thousand dollars at that time it would have been heralded in all the papers what a great philanthropist he was; but that would not have been worth one ten-thousandth part as much to me as the lectures. I never go into a community as a lecturer without thinking to myself that perhaps there is a little soul hid away in the audience that I may be able to help in the same manner in which I was helped by the first lectures I had ever heard."

The present-day criticism, and it would be in a truesense a peoples college and the student passing from its doors would be well equipped to meet the conditions of the world today. From the enriched curriculum, with a large range of elective subjects, he will have developed mental powers of a high caliber and be able to meet the conditions imposed on him. To the student who leaves at the end of the Junior High School, he will have vocational work, backed by a good education, which will enable him to take his place among the skilled laborers and to fill his place in society.

This division of the Secondary schools is a thing of the near future. It is already in successful operation in Berkeley, California and Columbus, Ohio, and other cities are seriously considering its adoption.

God Help The Taxpayer.

Out of the goodness of their generous hearts—and out of Charlevoix county's open treasury—the supervisors and the state's lawmakers strive together to help everybody.

Or almost everybody. Pensions are provided for the widowed mothers and the orphans. Pensions are provided for the blind.

The poor are helped. The sick are helped. The lame are helped.

The lazy do not ask in vain—if they live in a township with the right sort of a supervisor.

There is official aid and sympathy for all—with one exception.

That lone exception is the taxpayer.

In case he happens to be struggling to pay off the mortgage on a little home that he has built with borrowed money—taxed on his own investment and on what remains invested by the man to whom he's paying interest—God help him! Other refuge has he none!

State Teachers' Institute.

The Department of Public Instruction for Charlevoix county, to be held in the city of East Jordan on Monday and Tuesday, February 2nd and 3rd. Superintendent L. A. Hittler of Houghton City has been appointed as conductor and will be assisted on Monday by Professor Van den Berg of the Central State Normal School and on Tuesday by Professor Arthur H. Harrop.

Governor Ferris says Professor Harrop is one of the foremost educators of the present day.

This is a state institute and teachers are expected to close their schools and attend without loss of time.

Grange Column

Peninsular Grange.

Peninsular Grange No. 706 met in regular session Thursday, 15, at the grange hall. A feature of this meeting was that the members met at 11 o'clock in the forenoon with well filled lunch baskets, and at 12:30 a good dinner was served.

After dinner the grange met in regular session with the worthy master in the chair. Eighteen members and two visitors were present, and four applications for membership were received for initiation and referred to the committee on membership.

After the regular routine business the master turned the meeting over to Brother H. D. Willson and wife, of Harmony Grange, who proceeded to install the officers elect for the ensuing year. Brother Willson also gave a fine report of his visit to the state grange, to which meeting he was a delegate.

EARLY MORNING FIRE

Home of Thomas Milner was Completely Gutted by Serious Fire Friday.

About 2 o'clock last Friday morning the local fire department responded to an alarm of fire at the Thos. Milner residence at 310 Clinton street. The house was all aflame and was densely filled with smoke on the arrival of the department and considerable difficulty was encountered in extinguishing the fire. The blaze started from a defective furnace in the basement and when discovered the whole house was flaming. Mr. Milner awakened his wife and children and they had to get out on the roof of the porch and to the ground by ladder scantly clad. Neighbors cared for them temporarily. The flames ate their way through the floors and side walls and filled the house with a dense smoke, and flames shot out from every angle of the house.

Some of the furniture was saved, together with the piano. Practically everything in the home and the house itself is ruined. The shell which remains is a good evidence of the start the conflagration had when discovered. So terrific was the heat that the water pipes in the house were honeycombed and the floors that remain are nearly in a state of collapse.

Insurance to the amount of $3000 was carried and will by no means cover the loss exacted to the family.

WHAT'S INSIDE AN APPLE?

Structure of Fruit is More Complex Than is Generally Supposed.

The inside of an apple is to most people merely a delicious whitish pulp and a few brown seeds in a more or less edible core wrapped up in a prettily colored skin. The real structure of the apple is by no means so simple. A scientific examination shows it to be far more complex. The accompanying photograph shows a cross section of a Baldwin apple. It has been treated first with alcohol and then with cedar oil to make the structure of the different parts show up better in the photograph.

The outer part, marked A, which is the part generally considered the fruit, the part that is eaten, is really corresponding to the outer wood of a tree or the stem of a plant, while the real fruit is the part marked D, known scientifically as the carpel, the dark triangular marks in the middle of the photograph.

CROSS SECTION OF AN APPLE.

The dark spots, marked B, are the main arteries, of which there are ten, that carry the food through the network of veins seen in the outer section. This system of arteries and veins is entirely separate from that which feeds the fruit in the middle. The five sections marked C might be likened to five plums set down close together with a stem grown up around them (the fleshy part of the apple). These the horticultural scientist now calls "drupes." The outer part, with the pretty skin, is furnished by wise Dame Nature to make the apple attractive so it will be carried about and the seeds distributed.

The picture is taken from a bulletin on "Gross Morphology of the Apple," by E. J. Kraus, the first of a series on "The Pollination of the Pomaceous Fruits" to be issued from the research laboratories of the Oregon Agricultural college experiment station. Mr. Kraus treats the subject in a thoroughly scientific manner, going into careful detail as to the structure of the different parts of the apple and their relation with a view to establishing his contention that pollination, for instance, of a yellow apple with pollen from a red apple affects the inner fruit rather than the exterior.

PLANT BREEDING ON FARM.

The cry is becoming more general for better seeds. How are we to get them? As the situation is, says a correspondent of the American Agriculturist, I believe the answer to the question is to breed them ourselves. We often see in horticultural and agricultural periodicals articles that have a tendency to throw a wet blanket over this proposition, claiming that seed breeding is a business of its own, requiring special training to do it properly. This may be true, viewed from a scientific standpoint, and yet there are a few market gardeners and truck farmers who cannot breed and grow what seeds they require for their individual plantings.

Root Crops For Dairy Cows.

No matter what some people tell you, turnips and other roots make fine milk producing feed. Turnips will not affect the flavor of milk if fed at the right time. If turnips are fed in large quantities and two or three hours before milking, they are likely to give the milk an unpleasant taste, but if fed directly after milking no flavor whatever will be noticed.—Farm Progress.

ALL SORTS OF ANIMALS.

Great care should be used in watering the horses. A little and often is the best way.

Moldy or filthy grain is one of the worst things that can be given the calves, as it is productive of numerous digestive ailments.

The cows that are on pasture should have free access to salt. The dairy cow needs this all the year around, but especially just at this season.

You frequently hear the question asked, "What is the best size of flock for the average farm?" Generally speaking, from forty to sixty ewes under the best size of flock for a quarter section farm.

If you are not attended so that you can let your hogs out draw a load of earth and throw it into the pens now and then. The hogs will work it over and take a lot of comfort doing it. Makes them grow faster too.

SUGGESTION TO ALFALFA GROWERS

Experience Covering Many Years of a Prominent Southern Farmer.

SHOULD USE INOCULATED SOIL

Growth of Alfalfa Will Be Far Better if This is Done.

Had 100 Acres in Mow Last Year and Will Seed 50 More the Coming Year—Much Valuable Advice Given.

The following article from the pen of R. B. Waltrous, published in a recent issue of the Michigan Farmer, gives in detail his experiences in the growing of alfalfa. He tells of his mistakes and makes many valuable suggestions that should be of value to farmers in this vicinity who are growing or who expect to grow alfalfa.

My experience with alfalfa dates back to the summer of 1904, when I seeded three acres of sandy loam with clay subsoil. I sowed about twenty pounds of seed to the acre, using no inoculation. The result was only a fair stand of sickly plants. This I clipped the first year, getting not enough alfalfa to learn whether or not there was any value in it as a feed, but this I did learn, that all stock would eat it readily and seemed to relish it. The next year it apparently blighted and I afterwards learned it was due to the lack of inoculation, so my first experience was not very satisfactory. Since then the same piece of ground has grown the regular routine of crops. In 1912, it was reseeded, together with inoculation, and to-day the nicest stand of alfalfa that I have is on this piece. In the spring of 1911 I prepared another five-acre piece, which, by the way, is, I think, as poor a five acres as I could have selected on my farm. This piece had been into beans the previous year. There was not a weed of any description in the field, so the only preparation it had was a thorough springtooth. I then sowed broadcast about one and one-half yards of soil taken from the roadside where sweet clover had grown. This was sown from the wagon, allowing the team to walk slowly, using much care to get it distributed as evenly as possible. This ground was then again gone over with the springtooth, thoroughly mixing the inoculation with the soil.

Right here let me suggest that the more of the inoculated soil used the better will be the growth of alfalfa. The soil containing this inoculation, being damp, would sometimes not distribute evenly and after the plants were well started one could easily discern the much more thrifty plants where the inoculation was thickest. I prefer a cloudy day for sowing the inoculated soil, as the sun is apt to destroy the germs. After preparing the ground in this manner I seeded to oats, at the rate of one and one-half bushels to the acre, afterwards sowing the alfalfa seed with a broadcast seeder at the rate of fifteen pounds to the acre. I did not roll the ground after sowing the alfalfa, but would advise doing so, as with any other seeding, it leaves the ground in better shape for the mow. I harvested only a fair crop of oats, any only about thirty bushels to the acre, but that did not matter. It was the alfalfa I wanted and the alfalfa I got this time. After the oats were harvested I clipped the alfalfa, allowing it to remain on the ground, there not being enough to bother with. The next season I cut about ten tons from this five acres. The second cutting amounted to very little on account of the drought.

In the spring of 1912 I seeded fifty acres in the same manner, using only ten pounds of alfalfa to the acre. With this I mixed both June and Alsike, which gave me the nicest quality of hay I ever cut. This hay I am now feeding my horses, fattening lambs and brood sows. Again last spring I seeded another fifty acres together with oats, inoculating in the same manner, but leaving out the June and Alsike, seeding heavier than the second year. (I think fifteen pounds to the acre about right). This seedling went into the winter looking fine, although not making as thrifty a growth as that of the preceding year owing to the dry weather. A twenty-two-acre piece of June Alsike was entirely destroyed by the drought and a seventeen-acre field of the same kind of seeding I am trying to save by top dressing. So, considering the condition of these pieces, I am pleased to have so good a stand of alfalfa if it is small. This proves to me that alfalfa will stand the drought much better than other clover, owing, I think, to its quick growth and length of root.

One mistake I made with a fifteen-acre stubble field last spring was that instead of plowing I used a spring-tooth, thus getting a great many weeds which I might have avoided by plowing. Remember, I am experimenting with this crop as many others are, only perhaps on a larger scale. I have 100 acres to mow this year and will seed fifty acres with oats the coming spring. I have tried the pure culture, but found that it swelled the seed and caused them to stick together, thus making it impossible to seed evenly and determine the amount of seed I was sowing to the acre.

Now, another thing that remains for me to learn is this: Does it injure alfalfa to pasture it? After mine got a good start last summer after I had cut it the second time I turned 325 lambs into 30 acres of it. This I did when it was about eighteen inches high and in blossom, leaving them until they had eaten it to the ground. I then took them out that it might get a good start before winter set in. I am now anxiously waiting for spring to see if any bad effects come from this fall pasturing. I never had lambs gain faster than while on this pasture, with no bad effects whatever. I kept close watch of them, for I had heard all kinds of stories about blight, etc., but nothing of the kind presented itself.

Locates at Petoskey.

Roy V. Otto of Middleton, well known throughout the state as a poultry judge, has formed a partnership with Dr. Geo. Keycraft, one of the leading poultry breeders of Emmet county, and will take charge of the poultry farm in that city this month. The new firm will make a specialty of breeding and exhibiting birds and will supply the local market with broilers.

MONDAY WAS GROUNDHOG DAY

Saw His Shadow in Some Localities, While in Others He Did Not.

Traditional Weather Indications are Somewhat Mixed for the Balance of the Winter.

In some localities in the state the proverbial groundhog got a good look at his shadow Monday, while in about as many others he did not, and, according to tradition, he will hike back to his den to sleep away six more weeks of cold weather, or, on the other hand, mild weather will prevail. The first days of the week have been cold and the nights declared to be "ice makers." Sudden changes continue to be almost daily occurrences and the weather prophets are on their mettle as to what the next change will be.

Whether or no, the groundhog was able to see his shadow Monday, forecasts of weather for the next month are liable to become somewhat mixed. Many weather prophets rely on the general conditions on the second of the month to predict how things will be for the next 30 days. According to their prediction February will be mild and sunny, in direct contradiction to the groundhog theory. Then again there are the goosebone weather prophets who declare that the balance of the winter will be extremely warm with an early spring following. It is a case of taking one's choice and then waiting to see how things turn out.

Two wintry storms are expected to cross the country from the west during the coming week, which the weather bureau experts say will open with fair weather and moderate temperatures prevailing over most of the states.

The first part of the week will be fair over the eastern, central and southern portions of the country, with moderate temperatures, as a rule. There will be rain or snow by Tuesday in the great central valleys and the upper lake region, and during Tuesday night and Wednesday, the rains and snows will extend through the lower lake region to the middle Atlantic States and New England.

Rising pressure and falling temperatures will follow the northwestern disturbance, and it is probable that another brief period of low temperatures will set in, beginning Monday night in the north-west, reaching the central portion of the country about the middle of the week.

A second disturbance will appear on the north Pacific coast by Tuesday or Wednesday. It will cause local snows in the northwest, and will move eastward and southeastward with resulting rains and snows over the central and eastern portions of the country during the second half of the week, reaching the Atlantic states by the end of the week.

REAL ESTATE MOVING

Gregory & Benton Real Estate Agency Report Four Sales for the Past Week.

The Gregory & Benton Real Estate Exchange reports the sale of Mrs. Sarah I. Merriman's south terrace property to Elmer Donaldson. Also the Richardson farm in Banks township of 80 acres to Geo. Metcalf, and 60 acres of the old Nowland farm, near Nowland Lake, to Ernest Knox of Anderson, Indiana. They also sold a mile of a house and lot owned by Harry Hooker, at Everett, to James S. Brady of Sears, Mich.

This bustling real estate firm, realizing that publicity means the success of all businesses—have engaged space in the Courier and in the future will advertise the great bargains they have in real estate and farm property each week.

Will Start Rehearsals.

Clyde P. Steen, under whose instructions the musical comedy "College Life" will be put on by the local Knights of Pythias, arrived in the city Wednesday, and the first rehearsal was given the same evening. Much interest is being manifested in the coming event, which in our opinion will be one of the best ever put on in the city by local talent.

YOUNG COUPLE HAPPILY WEDDING

James W. Gaskin and Miss Constance H. Iddings Married Saturday.

Young Couple Well and Favorably Known in This City—Will Reside in Chicago.

Mr. James W. Gaskin and Miss Constance Harvey Iddings were united in marriage Saturday, January 31st, the ceremony being performed by Rev. Father Gaten in the sacristy of Saint Mary's church at 10 o'clock a. m. in the presence of the immediate relatives and a few intimate friends.

A wedding luncheon was given at the Bridge residence, where the family of the bride are spending the winter, and the happy couple left on the afternoon train for Chicago, where they will reside.

The bride is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. Lee Iddings and is one of Charlevoix's most accomplished and well-known young ladies. The groom is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Jas. Gaskin, warden at the Chicago Club, and for a number of years has been employed by the Golf Club of Charlevoix.

The young couple have the best wishes of their many friends in this city, among whom they have both grown to manhood and womanhood, for a long and happy married life.

FIRE AT PICTURE HOUSE

Four Films Destroyed in Blaze in Temple Theatre at East Jordan.

Fire destroyed about three and one-third reels of motion pictures at the Temple Theatre, at East Jordan Wednesday night, during the evening's entertainment. About 150 people were in the audience and only a few of these realized there was a fire until they were out of the building.

The operator was having trouble with a short circuit and Manager Adams, Operator Muma and a boy who re-winds the reels were in the booth. Not realizing that the lad had brought a couple of reels into the booth and placed them on a shelf, Mr. Adams removed a red-hot carbon and placed it near the reels; the carbon rolled against one of the reels and immediately there was a flash. Failing to hold the fire with an extinguisher, the operator went on the outside and let the fire burn out. The boy, who is a son of Arthur Ward quietly went down stairs and informed the audience that "that will be all for tonight." The crowd left without knowing the trouble.

The booth is absolutely fireproof was proved in this unwelcome test. It is built of sheet iron, lined with three thicknesses of asbestos, and is connected with a chimney. The inside was a mass of flame for about ten minutes, but neither the costly machine or interior were particularly damaged. Loss on the reels will undoubtedly be assumed by the company who owned them—East Jordan Herald.

MAY GET IN RACE

Hon. W. L. Pearson Is Being Urged By Friends to Get Into Race for Senator.

Hon. W. J. Pearson of Boyne Falls was in our city last Tuesday. Mr. Pearson was in the House two terms and stepped aside from the state senatorial race for Frank D. Scott of Alpena. Mr. Pearson's name is being urged by his friends for the state senate, and the people of this side of the district would be pleased to support him were it not that Hon. J. Lee Morford is in the race. Mr. Morford is thought a lot of throughout his present representative district and there is no question but that he would get the undivided support of that portion of the senatorial district. The fact that Rep. Hinkley of Petoskey is out for congressman would also have a tendency to complicate matters somewhat for Mr. Pearson.

Both Mr. Morford and Mr. Pearson are men of high qualities, recommending them to the position of trust. Neither are bigoted or boisterous, and the Outlook feels confident that when the times come their influence will be united on one or the other.—Onaway Outlook.

AUTO RIDING IN FEBRUARY

Loren Hart Makes Trip to Boyne City and Returns to Heavy Snow February 1.

That an automobile can be run in Charlevoix at almost any time of the year was demonstrated last Sunday, when Loren Hart in his Ford car, made the run to Boyne City to get a passenger, who had been refused transportation by the local liverymen, on account of the severe snowstorm and bad roads.

Mr. Hart made the trip to that city and brought back L. B. Wick-erham, who wanted to catch a train at Petoskey in the evening. The return trip from Boyne City was made in good time, and they immediately proceeded to go to Petoskey, in plenty of time to make the train. In some places the roads were badly drifted, but not enough to hinder the car from going through the drifts.

SURPRISED HIM

Neighbors Help James O'Brien Celebrate His 65th Birthday Anniversary.

Last Wednesday evening a crowd of neighbors and relatives to the number of 42 pleasantly surprised James O'Brien to help him celebrate his 65th birthday.

That Mr. O'Brien was taken by surprise was illustrated by the fact that he had retired for the night, but upon hearing the voices of his many friends it did not take him long to enter into the spirit of the occasion. After congratulations Mr. O'Brien was presented with a fine rocking chair as a token of the esteem in which he is held by his many friends. He was also advised in the future to put off his retiring time to a later hour, as this was the second time he had been found in bed when his neighbors called upon him.

A potluck supper was served and the usual good time followed during the evening. Upon leaving the crowd wished him many more such surprises.

BUREAU HELD ANNUAL MEETING

D. H. Day of Glen Haven Named as President to Succeed Himself.

Charlevoix County to be Again Represented by D. S. Payton and Fred P. Robbins.

At the annual meeting of the membership of the Western Michigan Development Bureau held at Traverse City on January 28th D. H. Day of Glen Haven was elected president of the bureau for the sixth time. A. S. White of Grand Rapids and E. R. Harris of Ellsworth were re-elected as vice-presidents and R. B. Heudel of Manistee was re-elected treasurer. Fifty directors were elected for the ensuing year.

Forty men were re-elected and ten new men selected. The new men are Charles B. Carver, Antrim County; M. M. Buroham, Emmet County; C. W. Carman, Kent County; C. A. Riechart, Mason County; O. F. Marvin, Muskegon County; J. D. S. Hanson, Newaygo County; G. A. Weller, An Arbor Railroad, and E. W. Abbott, B. C. & A. R. K.

The annual reports showed that the bureau is doing a bigger work than it ever has in the past. It has secured double the advertising for Western Michigan than it was getting two years ago. It is also taking care of a large number of local problems and assisting the various organizations in the territory to carry forward their various programs of development.

MAKE THE KITCHEN MORE ATTRACTIVE

Culinary Departments of Home Should Not Be Denied Actual Necessities.

BETTER PROVIDED YEARS AGO

When Housewife Had Only Fireplace and Log Cabin.

Health, Comfort and Happiness of the Family Dependent Upon Constructive of Farm Home.

The importance to the farmer of having an economical farmhouse has been emphasized by the farm architect of the U. S. Department of Agriculture, who states that the mental and physical fitness of the laborer both within the house and in the fields are vitally affected by the building that affords the family shelter. The average American farm home has failed to share in the improvements that are every day being made in agricultural conditions and, according to the architect, is a rebuke to our boasted civilization. Relatively, he says, the housewife of a century ago with her fireplace-cooking and log cabin was better provided for than is the housewife to-day.

The most important building on a farm is the house. The health, comfort and happiness of the family are dependent upon its construction and equipment and unless these matters are looked after, the sanitary dairy barn or the economically-constructed buildings for stock are of little value. Happiness and contentment in the family are as essential to efficient service as improved tools and outbuildings.

Although the housewife spends in many cases a lifetime in her "workshop," the kitchen and the family rooms, she is not, as a rule, capable of planning a house to the highest degree serviceable and comfortable without assistance. Her help, however, is essential to the farm architect, as the result of his plans most vitally concerns her.

In 1910 a western farm paper, at the suggestion of the Department of Agriculture, conducted a competition for farmhouse plans. About 600 plans of farmhouses were submitted, not one of which was fully satisfactory. The larger number insisted on some particular pet notion and emphasized a single feature to the neglect of other important ones. The men and women who familiarize themselves with the work to be done and then apply themselves to the single task of devising means are the ones who, with the co-operation of the farmers and their wives, can best handle the farmhouse problem.

One of the most important details regarding the average American farmhouse is that it must be inexpensive. The average annual net income of a farmer to-day, after deducting five per cent interest on his investment, is less than $400. This does not mean that the houses may not be attractive. They may—if intelligently planned with the help of vines, shrubs and trees—become the prettiest spots in the landscape and more beautiful and inexpensive than the crowded city houses.

The tenant-house problem is growing in importance, as can be seen from the fact that the number of rented farms increased by more than 324,000 during the last decade. To-day little more than half the farms in this country are operated by the owners.

TO ECONOMIZE THE HOUSEWIFE'S STRENGTH.

The possible economy in household labor and the conservation of the strength of the housewife are two important factors to be considered in the construction of a farmhouse. Pleasant and comfortable farm homes tend to hold families together; but the cheerless, unlovely and insanitary houses drive boys and girls to the cities. Investigation of prisons, insane asylums and houses of correction seem to prove the fact that the aims which account for the existence of these institutions are often bred in inadequate and unhappy farm homes. So this social aspect of the problem is considerable.

GAVE DOCTORS ENOUGH TO BUY FARM--RESTORED IN ONE DAY

Battle Creek Man Finds New Life in First Dose of Wonderful Remedy.

William N. Goss, 218 Aldrich St., Battle Creek, was troubled with stomach and intestinal ailments for years. Year after year he spent endless time and money with specialists and in expensive treatments that failed.

He took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy at last and wonderful results followed. When he had taken only one bottle he wrote:

"I got more relief out of one bottle of your wonderful stomach remedy than I did in all my years of treating with specialists.

"If I had all the money I have spent for doctor's bills I could buy a farm. I will certainly recommend Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy."

Mr. Goss' experience is like those of thousands of others who have taken this remarkable remedy with such astonishing results. It is known everywhere because of its merit.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of acid secretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of its success there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's Mayr's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results. It has been accomplishing among people they know--or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful. For sale by all druggists.

ESTABLISH NEW BANK

Well-Known Bankers to Give Rapid City a New Banking Institution.

C. W. McPhail of Ludington, W. S. Richardson of Central Lake, and L. O. Brouner of Alden will open up a new bank in Rapid City about March 1st.

Mr. Bloomer has represented a banking firm at Rapid City for the past year. Mr. McPhail is one of the best known bankers in Michigan, being president of six banks and the principal owner in eight other banking institutions. Mr. Richardson, who is cashier of the First State Bank of Central Lake, has been assigned with Mr. McPhail in the banking business for the last twenty years and is well known throughout Northern Michigan. Dag S. Way has been selected to act as cashier. Mr. Way is an unusually successful manager and no doubt will be as successful in the new undertaking. At present the business will be carried on in the Lewis Way mercantile house, where part of the main room has been leased.

Allison-Bremmer.

Mr. Frank Allison of this city and Miss May Bremmer of Michigan City (Indiana) were united in marriage by Rev. Quinton Walker Jan. 28th. The young people are well and favorably known and have a host of friends. They will reside on the north side.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL
A Romance of the Panama Canal
BY
REX BEACH
COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

PROLOGUE.
Panama as the home of the great canal we all know about, and now here's the zone as the scene of a rattling good romance. It's by Rex Beach, who jumps from Alaska to the tropics to tell about a young American and his friends, and foes in the zone. The hero of this tale is the sort of fellow you like to read about—one who has the hard luck to get into all kinds of scrapes and the nerve and courage and wit to get himself out of them. And the heroine—there are two of her. One's an American, and the other's a member of a proud, houghty family of the upper native classes of the canal zone. Both are worth reading about. Of course the other characters help along the yarn. If you have paid any sort of attention to the story of the digging of the "big ditch" you will recognize some of them.

The Trail Divides.
It was a crisp November night. The artificial brilliance of Broadway was rivaled by a glorious moonlit sky. From the city's canyons came an incessant clanging roar.
In the lobby of one of the playhouses a woman paused to adjust her wraps, and, hearing the cries of the newsboys, petulantly exclaimed:
"I'm absolutely sick at football. That performance during the third act was enough to disgust one."
Her escort smiled. "Oh, you take it too seriously," he said. "Those boys don't mean anything. That was merely youth—irresponsible youth on a tear."
The doors belched forth the football players and their friends. Out they came, tumbling, pushing, jostling, greeting scowls and smiles with grins of insolent good humor. The twenty athletes dodged in through the revolving doors of a cafe, leaving Broadway rocking with the tumult. All the city was football mad, it seemed, for no sooner had the newcomers entered the restaurant than the diners rose to wave napkins or to cheer. One said to his companions:
"That is Anthony—the big chap. He's Darwin K. Anthony's son. You've heard about the Anthony bill at Alamy?"
"Yes, and I saw this fellow play football four years ago. Say! That was a game."
"He's a worthless sort of chap, isn't he?" remarked one of the women, when the signal had disappeared up the stairs.
"Just a rich man's son, that's all. He's twenty-six."
"Didn't I read that he had been sent to jail recently?"
"No doubt. He was given thirty days."
"What—in prison?" questioned another in a shocked voice.
"Only for speeding. It was his third offense, and his father let him take his medicine."
Up in the banquet hall, however, it was evident that Kirk Anthony was more highly esteemed by his mates than by the public at large. He was their hero, in fact, and in a way he deserved it. For three years before his graduation he had been the heart and sinew of the university team, and for the four years following he had coached them, preferring the life of an athlete trainer to the career his father had offered him. And he had done his chosen work well, his team winning the day's game against great odds.
It had been a tremendous spectacle, and when the final whistle blew for the multitude to come pouring down across the field, the cohorts had paid homage to Kirk Anthony, the coach to whom they knew the honor belonged.
Naturally, the newspapers gave the young man's story as well as a history of the game. They told of his arrangement from his father, of the Anthony anti-football bill which the old man in his rage had driven through the legislature and up to the governor himself. Some of them even printed a rebuke of the railroad man's famous magazine attack on the modern col lege.
The fact was that Kirk's associates were of a sort to worry any observant parent. In particular Anthony senior was prejudiced against a certain Ad i bert Higgins, who, of course, was his son's best companion, adviser, aid and abettor. This young gentleman was a seems to be. What shall I do sir? Locke took something from his pocket and thrust it into the fellow's hand, while the look in his eyes changed to one of desperation.

"Step outside and wait. Don't let him come up. I'll call you in a minute."
Anthony caught a glimpse of Locke's eyes and inquired in surprise:
"What's wrong, old man? Are you sick?"
Locke shook his head. "I told you fellows I'd been followed this evening. Remember? Well, there's a man downstairs who has given the waiter $10 to let him have his coat and upon so he can come in here. I think it's part of a plan to rob me."
Kirk Anthony rose suddenly, moving as lightly upon his feet as a dancer, and rang for the waiter.
"Give that chap your coat and apron," he ordered when the attendant answered, "and when I ring next send him up. Pass the word to Padden and the others not to notice any little disturbance. I'll answer for results."
The white faced Locke sank back into his chair, while Anthony directed sharply:
"Now, gentlemen, be seated. Here, Locke, your back to the door; you're face looks like a chalk mine. There! Now don't be so nervous; we'll cure this fellow's ambition as a gin slinger. I'll change names with you for a minute." He pushed the button twice, and a moment later the door opened quietly to admit a medium sized man in white coat and apron.

The man allowed his eyes to shift up certainly from one to another as if in doubt as to which was his quarry. Anthony did not dream that it was his own resemblance to the Missourian that led to this confusion; but, in fact, while he and Locke were totally unlike when closely compared, they were of a similar size and coloring, and the same general description would have fitted both.
Having allowed the intruder a moment in which to take in the room, Kirk leaned back in his chair and nodded for him to approach.
"Are you Mr. Locke sir?" inquired the new waiter.
"Yes," added Kirk.
"Telephone message for you, Mr. Locke," the waiter muttered. "They're holding the wire outside. I'll show you the booth."
"Oh, will you?" Kirk Anthony's hands suddenly shot out and seized the masquerader by the throat. The man uttered a startled gasp, but simultaneously the iron grip of Marty Ringold fell upon his arm and doubled them behind him. The rest of the party were on their feet instantly, watching the struggle and crowding forward with angry exclamations.
"All the way from St. Louis for a telephone call, eh?" Anthony sank his thumbs into the stranger's throat; then, as the man's face grew black and his contortions diminished, added, "We're going to make a good waiter out of you."
Jefferson Locke broke in excitedly: "Choke him good! Choke him! That's right! Put him out for keeps. For God's sake, don't let him go!"
But it was not Kirk's idea to strangle his victim beyond a certain point. He relaxed his grip after a moment and, nodding to Ringold to do likewise, took the fellow's wrist himself, then swung him about until he faced the others. The man's lungs filled with fresh air, he began to struggle once more, and when his voice had returned he gasped:
"I'll get you for this. You'll do a trick!" He mumbled a name that did not sound at all like Jefferson Locke, whereupon the Missourian made a rush at him that required the full strength of Anthony's free hand to thwart.
"Let me go," the stranger gasped. "I'll take you all in. I'm an officer."
"A lie!" shouted Locke. "He's a thief!"
"I tell you I'm an officer. I arrest this!"
The words were cut off abruptly by a loud exclamation from Higgins and a crash of glass. Kirk Anthony's face was drenched, his eyes were filled with a stinging liquid; he felt his prisoner sink limply back into his arms and beheld Higgins struggling in the grasp of big Marty Ringold, the full covered neck of a wine bottle in his fingers.

The foolish fellow had been hovering uncertainly round the edges of the crowd, longing to help his friends and equally anxious to win glory by some deed of valor.
"I've got him!" he cried joyously. "He's out!"
"Higgins!" Anthony exclaimed sharply. "What the devil?" Then the dead weight in his arms sobered him like a deluge of ice water.
"You've done it this time," he muttered.
"Good God!" Locke cried. "Let's get away! He's hurt!"
"Here, you!" Anthony shot a command at the speaker that checked him half way across the room. "Ringold, take the door and don't let anybody in or out. We're in bad now. I want Padden." He stepped to the door and signaled a passing waiter. A moment later the proprietor knocked and Ringold admitted him.
"What the—" Padden started at sight of the motionless figure on the floor and, kneeling beside it, made a quick examination, while Anthony explained the circumstances leading up to the assault.
"Thief, eh? I see."
"In his badly hurt?" queried Locke, bending a pale face upon them.
"Huh! I guess he's due for the hospital," the owner of the Austrian Village announced. "He had his nerve."

As I before stated, I am now feeding this hay to sixteen brood sows and it does one good to see how they relish it. I feed in racks and they line up like a lot of sheep and it is surprising how little they waste. They are doing nicely and without any grain whatever. If any reader has had any experience in feeding this to brood sows and knows of any bad effects at farrowing time I will be glad to hear from them, as it is an experiment with me.

These things I have learned: Spare no pains in preparing your seed bed for alfalfa. Seed as early in the spring as possible. If it is alfalfa you want and if you seed with oats don't try to get fifty bushels of oats to the acre and alfalfa, ton. Sow not over one and one-half bushels of oats (one and one-fourth is better) per acre and be satisfied with no oats if you have to if you only get the alfalfa. Be sure and get your seed on evenly—no less than fifteen pounds to the acre. If you wish to sow other clover with it let this be additional. Get fifteen pounds of alfalfa seed on every acre.

I have told you the little experience I have had during the three years with seeding and feeding. Now about fertilizing and curing the hay. I have never used any fertilizer but barnyard manure. Don't put this on until your alfalfa has at least four months growth. Never put it on before you seed or the weeds which will surely come from the manure will tend to retard the growth of the alfalfa. Don't get the idea that alfalfa cannot be handled with side-delivery rakes and loaders as other clovers. They are the proper tools to use. Cure it in the wind-row; make small windrows, turning them often, thus curing the hay evenly. You will be surprised how few leaves a single cylinder loader will knock off. Even if it does waste some, "Time is money." One ton of alfalfa is worth two of any other hay.

LEE A. MCINTYRE

Noted Lecturer to Appear in Charlevoix Three Days, February 19, 20 and 21.

One of the coming events which should not be overlooked by the citizens of Charlevoix, is Lee A. McIntyre, author, lecturer and reformer, who will be in Charlevoix February 19, 20 and 21.

Lee A. McIntyre has for twenty years been engaged in religious, literary, philanthropic and social service activities. His duties as pastor, evangelist, presiding elder, and organizer has given him a wide vantage ground for observation. His close association with untoward social conditions when, with the Moody Bible Institute gave him most favorable opportunities to study sociological conditions. The experience of years as pastor of an institutional church gave him the privilege of close association with young men and women. In a heart beating with desire for great service the seeds of ripened experience have brought forth great fruitage.

He will appear in Charlevoix under the auspices of the churches, Bible class and schools on the above dates. The place where the lectures will be given will be announced in these columns at a later date.

SPANISH MOSS INDUSTRY.

Method of Gathering and Preparing Vegetable Hair For Market.

Vegetable hair, or so called Spanish moss, is an epiphytic plant growing on a good many different kinds of trees in the southeastern United States, West Indies and South America. The largest and most tenacious kind grows on the bald cypress in the south Atlantic and gulf states. In the Scientific American, it is known botanically as Tillandsia usneoides. The specific name usneoides means "like usnet," a generic name of a gray lichen, or so called "moss," which is common along the coast as far north as New Jersey and which it resembles, but to which it is in no way related. The common name "moss" is a misnomer for the plant because it is not a moss at all, but belongs to the pineapple family of plants. While this plant grows upon another, it does so without deriving any nourishment from its host, as does a parasite. It is more of the nature of an air plant and hangs in long festoons from the branches of the trees through out the moist regions of the south. It is generally considered that it does not interfere with the growth of the trees upon which it grows, except in cases where it is very abundant.

The collection of this plant is a growing industry in the south and constitutes one of the important minor forest products, which is usually overlooked. It hangs from the branches of the trees, often within easy reach, and is gathered in the time of the high floods, when the swamps are easily accessible by small boats. The gathering is done by negroes at intervals of seven years on the same trees. After it is collected it is placed in large piles on the borders of the swamp, packed closely and left to decay for about a month. During this time the linear and shaped leaves and the gray, spongy, cellular tissue surrounding the firm, hairlike elastic fiber partly rot away. It is then dried thoroughly in the open air. In this dried state the material is shipped to small glass located in various parts along the gulf coast, where it is further dried, perfectly cleaned by machinery and haled for the market. During the process of cleaning the material is washed in boiling water and soap. It is then hung out on racks to dry and finally dusted in a fan mill. When the moss has passed through these processes a dark, coarse, tough fiber is left, which resembles horsehair. To impart a uniform color to the article it is sometimes dyed jet black, and the best qualities can hardly be distinguished from horsehair. It is used extensively for stuffing mattresses, cushions and the like. It is usually mixed with horsehair.

Harry L. Oldman of Decatur, Illinois, for a number of years a summer visitor of Charlevoix, has sold his business interests in his home town and will in a short time take his aged mother to her old home in England. Upon his return he expects to locate in northern Michigan, either in this city or at Traverse City. Mr. Oldman is considered one of the best insurance men in Illinois and took an active part in the social and business life of that city. Charlevoix extends the hand of welcome to Mr. Oldman, and we hope he will decide to locate here.

New Tunnel Through the Rockies. One of the most striking developments of present day engineering is the great expense which the railroad companies do not hesitate to incur in building tunnels of unprecedented length with a view to decreasing their grades across the mountain summits. The latest announcement in this connection is that of the Canadian Pacific railroad, which states it is going to undertake the construction shortly of a tunnel that will be by far the longest yet constructed. It is to be built below its pass through the Rocky mountains. It will be sixteen miles in length and will cost $14,000,000. This is some four miles longer than the well known St. Mary tunnel through the Alps, and the estimated time of construction is seven years.

Lavatory For Automobiles. A complete lavatory equipment for automobiles of the limousine type, which, when folded out of the way, takes up but little space, has been placed on the market recently. When opened it provides a wash basin, with running water, and has a compartment for combs, brushes, and the like, and a shelf for towels. The hinged panel of the lower compartment, which is swung upward when the lavatory is in use, has a mirror on its inner side. The water for the lavatory is carried in a tank on the top of the car.

Rack For Drying Photos. A convenient device for drying on engineers' prints by suspending them from the self retaining jaws of a rack has been put on the market. The construction of the rack is such that the insertion of the print into the jaws will hold it securely in position and a touch of the finger will release it. The device occupies but small space and enables a number of prints to be dried at the same time without crumpling or wrinkling.

PERFECT SPHERES

With All His Scientific Skill Man Cannot Produce Them.

THE CURVING OF A BASEBALL

It is Possible Only Because the Ball is an Imperfect Globe, and in Comparison With Its Size Much Rougher Than the Surface of the Earth.

The real reason why a baseball can be thrown so that it will describe wonderful curves during its progress through the air is that every such ball has a surface made up of mountains, valleys, craters, canyons, gorges, plains and other irregularities of the surface that, when the difference in size is taken into consideration, makes the surface of the earth seem like plate glass.

If it were possible to make a perfect sphere—if it were possible to make a baseball with an absolutely smooth surface and an exact sphere—no pitcher in the world could make it curve. The very best pitchers baseball has ever known or probably ever will know could not make the ball deviate a hair's breadth in its flight.

And so while it is partly in the art or knack the professional pitcher has in holding and releasing the baseball as he throws it, it is also due to the fact that a baseball has a wonderfully rough surface against which the air catches and turns it that gives it the curve.

If you pass your hand over a plate glass it moves smoothly with nothing to retard it. If you pass your hand over an unplanned board you can feel the roughness—splinters we call them. You cannot move your hand as easily over the board. This is the same principle with the baseball. There is a roughness in its surface that catches in the air and forces one side about or retards that side. This has but one result—to make the baseball leave its straight course, and in doing this it describes a curve.

This does not detract in the least from the cleverness of the pitcher who can so accurately judge his muscular control as to make a baseball curve up or down, right or left. But the fact remains that it is the roughness of the baseball that makes all his pitching cleverness possible.

Take a brand new league ball in your hand. It looks to be a perfect sphere—that is, absolutely even and uniformly round and as "smooth as glass." And it may be as smooth as glass, for glass also has a rough surface.

Put a baseball under the most powerful microscope, enlarge it microscopically 10,000 diameters, and what do you see? The very thing mentioned in the first paragraph of this article. The surface is rough. It looks like the landscape in the Alps or Yellowstone park or any other rough section of the earth. It has peaks, ranges, ridges, valleys, plains and holes, gulches and all sorts of uneven places, and if the earth could be made as small as a baseball it would be practically a perfect sphere and absolutely smooth. This is because the highest mountains of the earth and the deepest valleys would be millions upon millions of times smaller in comparison with the rough uneven places on a baseball if either the earth were reduced to the size of a baseball or a baseball enlarged to the size of the earth.

If this were not true the earth would not revolve so regularly upon its axis. It would perform an "in shoot" or "out shoot" and curve off through space.

Even the billiard ball has a surface much rougher in comparison to its size than the surface of the earth, and we refer to a billiard ball as about the smoothest thing known. "As smooth as a billiard ball" is a well known simile. For the same reason that a perfectly smooth baseball could not be curved, a perfectly smooth and perfectly round billiard ball could not be made to curve on the table. It would not take "English," as billiard players call it when they make a ball go forward and then roll backward or in any direction just by the manner in which they strike it with a chalked cue.

This fact of roughness causing it to spin becomes all too evident when a player forgets to chalk his cue and plays several shots thereafter. If the leather tip of the cue becomes shiny it will slip on the ball. There is no purchase with which it can take hold. But chalk is sticky stuff, and the granules are large, so that a well chalked cue has a very rough surface, and this rough surface of the tip of the cue fits into the rough projections on the ball, and thereby a ball can be given a lot of twist. In order to accomplish this successfully, moreover, the billiard cloth and must be new and therefore rough.

During recent experimentation with regard to the kinetic theory of gases a Belgian scientist desired to find out how perfect a sphere could be made in order that by the clashing of these together an idea might be secured of the effect of the collisions of the spherical atoms that make up a gas. The project had to be abandoned at last because no machinery could be constructed that would turn out a perfect sphere artificially, and nature has no perfect sphere of large size. In all her many forms of matter, perfect disks could be made, but a round ball was beyond the limits of human accomplishment—New York American.

The greatest pleasure is the power to give it.

MEET AT GRAND RAPIDS

Third Annual Meeting of Michigan State Dairywomen's Association to be Held There.

For the first time in the history of the organization the dairy cow will receive her just share of recognition at the thirtieth annual meeting of the Michigan State Dairywomen's Association to be held at Grand Rapids February 10 to 13. Professor A. C. Anderson of the Agricultural College will deliver a demonstration lecture on the evening of February 10 in which he will use two Jersey cows from the herd of Milo H. Edson of Kent county. A milking machine exhibit will also be in operation.

An address will be delivered by Dr. Ward Gilmer of the Agricultural College on "Contagious Diseases of Dairy Cattle," and R. W. Chapin of Hammond, Indiana, will speak on "Economic Reasons for the Dairy Cow."

Prizes with a total value of $300 will be awarded for the high scores of butter and cheese and to the winners in the buttermakers' judging contest and starter contest. Seven silver cups and cash prizes will be awarded for market milk.

GRANGE WORK IN THE COUNTY

Evidence of Excellent Work and Results in Every Section.

Officers Installed With Great Enthusiasm—Social Side of Grange Exemplified.

Deer Lake and Harmony granges held a joint installation of officers at Deer Lake grange hall Jan. 3rd, at which there was a good attendance of both granges and a short program and a fine supper. Mrs. Lumley was installed master of Deer Lake and Miss Mildred Lefler master of Harmony grange. Both granges expect to do good work the coming year under the leadership of these two enthusiastic ladies.

Wilson Grange, No. 719, held their installation ceremony January 10th, one of the principal features being the presence of a large number of visitors, mostly from Harmony grange. Wilson grange has a fine hall and under the leadership of Robert Shepard, who has been a faithful member of Wilson grange since its organization, the success of the coming year is assured.

Peninsula grange held its meeting for installation January 15th, coming together at eleven o'clock a. m. and serving a fine dinner before proceeding to business. Peninsula grange has perhaps the finest grange hall in the county. Martin Ruhlman, who has presided as master for many years, retired and John Heller was chosen to fill the place. They received four applications for membership that day, with prospects of many more soon.

Boyer River grange was the next to receive the services of the installing officer, January 17th. Fred Wagner was placed in the master's chair for the ensuing year and with a good corps of assistants the grange is bound to prosper.

Boyer Valley grange met on the evening of January 31 to have their officers installed. Otto Seiler, who has been there before, was again placed in the master's chair.

In each of these granges H. L. Willson acted as installing officer and gave a report as delegate to the State Grange. He was assisted in the work at the different places by Mrs. H. L. Willson, who was also a delegate, and on occasions when she was unable to be present by J. A. Newville, L. D. Willson and Hon. Wm. Nease, who was Pomona delegate.

On each of these occasions the social side of the grange was exemplified by the serving of good things, which the grange ladies know so well how to make, and the fraternal feeling manifested and the encouragement offered by the work and activities in various lines reported from the State Grange all combine to make the prospect for growth in the coming year very encouraging.

Pomona Grange.

The Charlevoix Pomona Grange will hold its next meeting with Wilson Grange Thursday evening, February 12th. All subordinate granges report for the fourth quarter of 1913 should be in the hands of the Pomona secretary before that meeting.

Marion Grange.

Marion Center Grange, No. 936, met in regular session at their hall Friday evening, January 30th. All the officers were present with the exception of the overseer, treasurer, lady assistant steward and gatekeeper. After the regular order of business a good program was enjoyed by all. The next regular meeting will be held Wednesday evening, February 11th, instead of Friday evening, February 15th.

Ironton Grange.

Ironton Grange, No. 707, met in regular session January 27th with thirty-five members and three visitors present. For new business a motion was made and carried that the master, secretary and executive committee were to get a list of by-laws for the grange.

After the regular order of business the grange was turned over to the lecturer. The program consisted of songs, stories, readings and recitations and a talk by worthy Pomona Master J. Chew and one by Sister Chew from Peninsula Grange. The lecturer and gatekeeper resigned and Bro. Claud Bowen was elected and installed as gatekeeper and Sister Clara Nowland as lecturer.

For good of the order a motion was made and carried that there be a dance at the Ironton Grange hall Friday evening, February 6. Bros. Eugene Lewis, Ben Nowland and Matthew Saunders were appointed the committee.

Grange closed to meet again in two weeks.

SENIOR BENEFIT A SUCCESS

Large and Appreciative Audience Greeted Ray K. Immel at Theatre.

On last Tuesday night Ray K. Immel entertained a large and appreciative audience with his clever impersonations of the characters Shakespeare's play, "The Merchant of Venice," and also gave several light readings.

The impersonations from Shakespeare were the heat ever given in this city and their merit was quickly recognized by the audience, in which were many close students of Shakespeare. Mr. Immel showed a remarkable talent and great ability to handle all classes of readings. The light readings, which were for the most part humorous or philosophical, greatly added to the pleasure of the evening's entertainment. The Senior class is the largest in the history of the school and consequently the expenses of graduating will be large and help on the part of the citizens was and will be appreciated.

Make Kitchen More Attractive

The public is awakening to the fact that better farmhouses are needed, and the special feature which many farm papers now issue as a "House Building Number" prove its interest to thousands of readers.

The Office of Farm Management of the Department of Agriculture has now undertaken to investigate this problem systematically and to evolve, if possible, practical improvements for the benefit of the farmer's home.

Certain features are often overlooked in providing economical arrangements for the household when they might be easily provided for. One of the specialists of the Office of Farm Management learned from a woman in Pennsylvania who had broken down from overwork, that she had been carrying coal from the barn for years. When the husband was asked if there was any reason why a coal bunker could not have been provided near the cook-stove and filled directly from the wagon, he answered that there was none, but that no one had ever thought of it. This one detail had been found neglected in other cases where it could have been easily remedied if only someone had thought of it.

After economy in the construction of the building and in the housework has been attained, attention will be given to developing beauty. Simplicity in line and good proportions are meant by the use of this word beauty, and not so-called applied "ornaments." This simplicity is entirely in keeping with a general plan of economy.

Economy, however, is not a synonym for cheapness. Double strength glass may even be more economical in a tenant house than single strength, so withstanding its greater first cost. A kitchen sink may be a paying investment, although it excludes a bay window or a fireplace which has been the pet notion of the housewife. Screened-in kitchen porches, sleeping porches, double or triple windows and kitchen conveniences are fine economical features which even the smallest house plans may well consider. Separate dining rooms for families that generally eat in the kitchen are less important, as are "parlors." These separate rooms may have complete systems of plumbing, heating and lighting which involve additional expense. The kitchen is the most important room in the farmhouse.

For the average farmer economy bars a room especially reserved for weddings and funerals. A back stairway in small houses is an unnecessary luxury. Large halls which are never used to live in, but merely as thoroughfares, are a feature which can be dispensed with in the interest of a smaller outlay of money.

Other features that should give way to a comfortable and convenient kitchen are narrow porches, filigree work, numerous angles in walls and roof, useless doors. There should be an intelligent purpose for every cubic foot of space and for every piece of material about the building if possible.

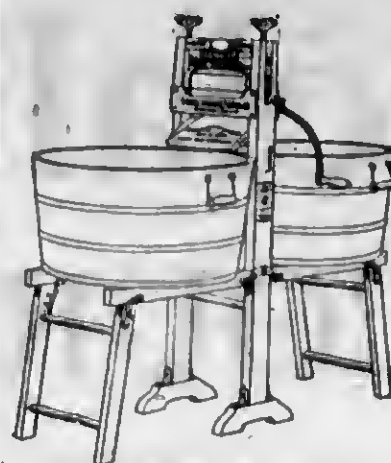

It may not be found practicable for the Department of Agriculture to furnish plans and specifications of farmhouses worked out for particular individual needs. However, it is believed to be desirable to work out plans and specifications for the general needs of farmers and to illustrate and explain the plans so that the farmer may understand the principles involved and apply them when he remodels his present house. The Office of Farm Management is endeavoring to help the farmer and the farmer's wife along these lines.

PUPILS LEARN FARMING

Country Schools Begin Work in Agriculture Throughout the State.

Agriculture will be taken up this month, in every rural eighth grade in the state of Michigan as the State Course of Study requires the teaching of this subject for at least half a year in the rural schools. Last year was the first time this subject was specifically taught and despite the fact that few teachers were qualified to handle it, the results were most encouraging. This year bulletins issued by the Department of Public Instruction and the Michigan Agricultural College are available for the teachers.

The most effective work in agriculture by untrained teachers last year was in districts where the teachers frankly admitted their lack of expert knowledge but worked with the pupils in learning from bulletins, magazines and other available material and in doing actual experimental work in testing and planting seeds, and in the use of the Babcock tester and other

OPENING GUN IN CITY POLITICS

Candidates File Petitions for the Various Offices to be Filled.

HARRY NICHOLLS FOR MAYOR

Present Incumbent Will Ask Citizens for a Second Term.

But Two New Names Appear on the Republican Ticket—Primary March 4th—Election
April 6th.

The first gun in the opening of the battle in city politics was fired Tuesday by the filing of petitions for the various offices to be filled at the April election. Up to this date scarcely a rumor was heard on the street as to whom the candidates would be and very little interest has been manifested regarding the matter.

In this city the Republicans generally have a cinch at elections and a nomination at the primaries is almost equivalent to election. Thus the main fight centers on the nomination and the candidates of this party are always first in making their announcements.

To those not familiar with the new primary election law we would state that there will be no new enrollment required this spring. Primary day will be on March 4th and the regular spring election the first Monday in April, which occurs on the 6th. Candidates must file their petitions 21 days before the regular primary day, the date of which was today (Wednesday) at four o'clock. On both primary and election day the same election procedure as heretofore will be gone through.

For the office of mayor on the Republican ticket the present incumbent, Harry Nicholls, will ask for another term, as will also E. J. Miller for clerk and John Cook for treasurer. These three men have given the city excellent service and will undoubtedly be re-elected.

In the first ward George W. Priest has filed his petition and will ask for a second term as alderman. The petition of O. K. Wilbur, former mayor of the city, was also filed this morning for alderman in this ward.

Dr. W. R. Barney, the present representative of the second ward, has filed his petition asking for re-election and, no other petitions having been filed, will without doubt again represent this ward.

Charles Carey, who is serving the unexpired term of Alonzo Powers in the third ward, has placed his name before the people for election as alderman.

There seems to be no itching for the office of supervisor in the first and second wards. The present incumbents, F. J. Meech and Charles Zettler, have both filed their petitions and will probably carry their wards this year as they have in the past.

In the third ward W. F. Graham has filed his petition for the office of supervisor.

These men will be opposed at the primaries by the following men in the Democratic party, who filed petitions for the various offices as follows:

Mayor—Dr. J. A. Auld.
Clerk—Harry E. McHugh.
Treasurer—The field is left open to Mr. Cook, the present incumbent and candidate on the Republican ticket.

Aldermen—First ward, Joseph H. Howard; 2nd ward, Frank M. Harris; 3rd ward, George Anderson.
Supervisors—First ward, Adolph Faulkner; 2nd ward, Alex. Cameron; 3rd ward, W. H. Miller.

The vote cast for secretary of state at the election in November, 1912, reveals but little difference in the strength of the Republican and Democratic parties. Democrats claim they will poll as many votes at the coming spring election as were polled at that time. The total vote of the various parties at that time was as follows: Republican, 159; Democratic, 143; Progressive, 140; Socialist, 78.

Another important matter which the electors of the city will have an opportunity to vote upon this spring is the abolishment of the Board of Public Works. Petitions are being circulated for the signatures of the number of legal voters necessary and at the April election the proposition will come to an issue. Those who have followed the affairs of the city during the past year are almost unanimous in their opinion that better and more efficient work could be done by the council, as in most cases they have been obliged to take the initiative regardless of the existence of the Board of Works.

In an interview with Mayor Nicholls in regard to the abolishment of the Board of Public Works he expressed himself as being in favor of submitting the question at the spring election.

Conditions at the present time are very undesirable, as there seems to be no responsibility on any matter concerning the water and light plant, as under the law all such matters should first be passed upon by the Board of Public Works, but, as a matter of fact, most people interested go first to the Common Council. This causes friction and the person having some matter vital to him is lost in the shuffle.

Youthful Robbers Arrested.

Seraps of a torn notebook pasted together by the chief of police led to the arrest of two Petokey young men charged with burglarizing the Bump & McCabe hardware store three weeks ago. The torn notebook was found near the hiding place of the plunder, accidentally discovered by boys at play.

The boys are now in the Emmet county jail awaiting trial in circuit court.

COLLEGE LIFE FRIDAY NIGHT

Knights of Pythias' Musical Comedy to Be Hit of Season.

Well-Known Vocal Talent in Cast—Chorus of Forty Young Men and Women.

Pine Lake Lodge, No. 122, Knights of Pythias, have completed all the arrangements for the big production, "College Life," which is to be presented by a cast and chorus of 50 people at the Charlevoix Theatre Friday night. The reserved seats go on sale at Herman's Drug Store Thursday morning at 9:30.

From the fact that every member of the lodge has been furnished with tickets to sell and that there is a contest among the girls of the chorus for a prize, there is every indication that the theatre will be filled to capacity and that there will be a rush for reserved seats when the advanced sale goes on.

"College Life" is directed by Messrs. Clyde P. Steen and Otis E. Mann. These gentlemen arrived here last Wednesday and rehearsals with cast and chorus began the same evening. Mr. Steen reports that he is more than pleased with the progress made and believes the Charlevoix production will eclipse the others in this section of the state.

"College Life" is a musical comedy and is just as the title implies. Music and comedy predominate. Some of the best musical talent in the city will participate in the musical numbers, which are all catchy and have the proper jingle. They include: "Honeymoon," "Teasing Moon," "Good Resolutions," "Castles in the Air," "When the Maid You've Made Your Sweetheart Is the Maid Who's Made For You," "No One Knows But

SCHOOL SYSTEM OF PRESENT DAY WAS BUILT FROM THE TOP DOWN

Many Look at School as an Individual Affair, a Thing That Concerns Only Teacher, Pupil and Parent—What is Good for the Child is the Thing
the Child is in Need of.

We are apt to look at school as an individual affair—a thing that concerns the teacher and the pupil, and possibly the parent. We are apt to measure the school by the amount of progress that is made by the pupil in the respective subjects; his ability to read and write, to know the world and its processes, his growth in manners and promptness and industry. This is a very narrow range and we need to have our conception of the school enlarged so that we can see that (what is good for our child is the thing that the child as a whole is in need of.) If society is to be true to itself, it must be true to its children, and in that occupation one former is worth a thousand reformers.

The modification that is going on in the school to-day is the result of the changed conditions in society. It is the effort of the people to meet the changing conditions in modes of industry and commerce. The change that comes first to mind is the industrial. The application of the modern invention to the present day commerce and manufacture has utilized the forces on an extensive scale. The methods of man in reference to transportation have kept pace with this modern miraculous growth in the industries. One can hardly believe that there has been such a revolution in history so rapid and so extensive in its scope. The people are gathered together in great cities, the conditions of life have been altered with startling abruptness, the search for the truths of nature has been greatly stimulated and their application to industry greatly enlarged. Our ideas of religion have been greatly changed. That this great revolution should not affect education would be a very peculiar thing.

Ours is a day of factory life and back of that we find that only two generations ago the household was the great center and from it the clothes came and all the necessities of life. Candles were manufactured even to the raising of the cattle to make the tallow. Each household was a factory in itself and all were independent. But now this is all changed and we have the modern factory system with all its benefits and its drawbacks.

In the old system everybody had their share of the responsibility and as the children grew they, too, were initiated into the mysteries of the several processes and became a part of the little self-sufficient community, with his assigned work which was for the benefit of all. We cannot overlook the discipline that this gave, the kind of character it built and the training in habits of order and industry and the responsibility that it developed in the boys and girls of that day. In all the processes there was a continual training in observation, in constructive ingenuity, of imagination all born of first-hand information, with realities. No amount of lessons used for the purpose of observation and development can be compared with these lessons which were learned in the community days when things were done with a purpose behind and a real outcome ahead.

But it is useless to bemoan the good old days, for they have gone and they have brought us many blessings, but the problem still remains, what shall we introduce into the school that will give the personal responsibilities that were present in the old household system?

The modern school is marked by the introduction of manual training and domestic science in the secondary schools and of weaving and sloyd knife work in the elementary schools. What can be the reason for their introduction? These are the arguments generally advanced by the people at large. They make the boys more alert, active in place of passive, teach him a trade, make him a carpenter or machinist, make the girls better seamstresses and teach them how to manage a home when they get one. Even if they do not have to do the cooking it teaches them how it should be done. These are all very good reasons and should be sufficient to place any subject in the curriculum of the school, but the introduction of these subjects have a greater meaning and a greater influence than the ones mentioned.

Our school system was built from the top down. In the early ages education was for the few, for those who wished to read the store of knowledge that was in the old manuscripts, the history of the people of the past generations, if you please. There was then a distinct educated class whose title was of great use and who served the people in many respects as monks and doctors and were the advisers of the people. But the invention of printing drove away with this system and a larger number of people came into the possession of the secrets of learning. Then we had a larger class which we are permitted to call the cultured class, who, having acquired the culture of the ages, were better able to cope with the conditions of life. Their knowledge

DEATH OF MRS. WRISLEY

Former Charlevoix Resident Dies at Her Home in Kendallville, Indiana.

Mrs. Sophia Wisley, aged 64 years, a former resident of this city, died at her home in Kendallville, Indiana, Saturday evening after an illness of three weeks from paralysis.

Mrs. Wisley was born at Rose, New York, January 11, 1850, and was the wife of George Wisley, who was drowned at the time of the burning of the steamer Champlain 28 years ago. She leaves three children—Hessie, a teacher in the public schools at Kendallville, with whom she made her home, and two sons—Frank of Columbia, Ohio, and Ralph of Detroit.

The remains were taken to the home of Charles Carey, where short services were held at 8:30 this morning. Burial at Brookside cemetery.

STOLE PAIR OF SHOES

Fred Durkey Tries to Sell Stolen Goods to Chief of Police Alcock.

Fred Durkey, hailing from no particular place, going nowhere and born somewhere, was picked up on the streets yesterday by Chief of Police Alcock, with a pair of stolen shoes in his possession.

Durkey accosted Alcock, not knowing who he was, and asked him if he did not want to buy the shoes, stating that he had bought them in Petokey, and they were to sell for him. Alcock at once became suspicious, and made the round of the stores to see if any of our local merchants had lost a pair of shoes. After covering the various stores in the city, he found that the shoes had been stolen from Millers' store.

He soon found Durkey and placed him under arrest. This morning Durkey was taken before Justice Feltz and upon examination, stated that he had been out of work for some time and had stolen the shoes with the intention of using the money from the sale to buy food and lodging. He said he was willing to work if he could find a place, otherwise would not object to thirty days or so in the county jail, where he was sure of something to eat and a place to sleep. He stated that if he could get to St. Ignace he thought he could find work. The justice finally decided to give him this opportunity, and a ticket was purchased, it being thought the most economical method of disposing of the case.

NEW THEATRE OPEN

John T. Foskett Moves Picture Show from Opera House to First Floor.

After a week of hustling and getting the building ready for occupancy, the moving picture show owned by John T. Foskett, which has been located in the Charlevoix Theatre for the past four seasons, was moved to the first floor of the opera house block and opened for business Saturday night.

While the new location is not as convenient as it was while on the second floor, the room has been put into good shape and will seat close to four hundred people. Mr. Foskett will continue to show the excellent pictures in the new location as he has in the past and will undoubtedly receive the same patronage a show of this character deserves.

Inspiration Institute a Success Despite

Many Excellent Lectures Given on Leading Topics of the Day.

Lack of Interest Shown by Patrons a Disappointing Feature of the Meeting—
Other Institute News.

In spite of the stormy weather which prevailed, over one hundred of the teachers of the county attended the Inspiration Institute held at East Jordan February 2nd and 3rd. Superintendent L. A. Butler of Hoyce City was appointed by the department as conductor and gave three very able and interesting addresses during the meeting.

In his discussion of the subject of Nature, Study Professor Butler took up a study of the evergreens of Northern Michigan. He proved conclusively to those present, first, that this subject can be made very interesting, and second, that very many of us really see but very little as we go on our way. He had branches from the ten evergreens which are common in this county and showed the teachers of the county some of the ways in which each one differed from all of the others and by which each particular one could be correctly classified.

It is really astonishing how very little we really know of the common things about us. It may be true, as claimed by some, that being able to name plants or evergreens will not mean much to us in the matter of dollars and cents, but if we could teach our children the habit of observing things we would establish with them one of the greatest sources of information and education. It is in the establishing of this very desirable habit that nature study has its great value.

His talks on primary arithmetic and on geography were equally interesting and many valuable suggestions as to the teaching of these subjects were given to the teachers of the county.

Prof. Vandenberg of the Central State Normal gave three very excellent lectures. His discussion of "The Measuring Rod in Education" left a new and clearer idea as to how we should measure our value to a community as teachers. He made it very clear that taking a class from decimals to measurement in one term was not necessarily doing a valuable work for the class. His other addresses were full of good things to think about. He is certainly a very practical educator. He studiously avoided high-sounding theoretical propositions and confined himself to a discussion of ideas that could be actually worked out by the average teacher in her school. The very close attention of the teachers to his talks is ample proof of his ability in presenting a subject to an institute.

Prof. Harrop gave four addresses the last day of the meeting. We will not attempt to say much about Prof. Harrop. Ask those who heard him. He is all that Gov. Ferris said he was and more. One teacher said: "I learned more in half an hour about the Civil War than I ever knew before." Professor Harrop is a polished, scholarly gentleman; he is an orator of ability, very entertaining, yet very earnest in his work.

MICHIGAN WOMAN'S STOMACH ILLS ENDED BY A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Mrs. Beamer of Flint Is Delivered From Headaches by Just a Few Doses.

Mrs. Guy A. Beamer of 1307 North street, Flint, Mich., was for a long time a victim of stomach and digestive troubles. One of the serious effects was bad headaches, which attacked her almost daily.

She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy; then she wrote:

"I thank you very much for what your medicine has done for me. I never saw anything work such wonders as just the three bottles have. There was never a day in my life that I did not have my head tied up with a cloth and I have not had a headache since. I had been doctoring by specialists, too, and received very little benefit."

Just such stories are told by thousands who have used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It is known all over the United States. It cleans the digestive tract of mucoid secretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings a swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of its success there are many imitations, so be cautious. Be sure it's Mayr's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing among people they know—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting street, Chicago, Illinois, for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

For sale at all druggists.

A Dubious Compliment.

A Turkish pasha lay dying. He summoned to him the youngest and fairest of his forty-six wives and said to her in a low, weak voice:

"Put on your richest costume, your most brilliant jewels. Deck your hair with pearls and brighten your finger tips with diamonds."

The young wife blushed. Even in her grief she was flattered.

"And why, my lord," she said, "do you desire me to make this sumptuous toilet?"

"So that death when it comes," the man replied, "seeing you so beautiful, may perhaps carry you off instead of me."

Sociologist Defined.

"Uncle Henry, what is a sociologist?" "A sociologist, my boy, is a person who can inspect a garbage can and find enough material in it for a lecture on the needs of society."—Chicago Tribune.

IN PETOSKEY

Statements of Petoskey Citizens Are Always of Interest to Our Readers.

To many of our readers the streets of Petoskey are almost as familiar as those of our own town and we are naturally interested to read of happenings there. The following report from a well-known and respected resident will be helpful to many of our men and women here in Charlevoix:

L. A. Labadie, 333 Petoskey street, Petoskey, Michigan, says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills for kidney complaint and back and aching back and have found them to be a splendid remedy. I first used Doan's Pills about a year ago, when I was suffering from a weak and lame back. My kidneys were giving me considerable annoyance, too, by acting too freely. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they acted promptly in bringing me relief. I have taken them since, then, when in need of a kidney medicine, and they have always acted just as represented."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Labadie had. Foster-McLure Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON

"WOE UNTO YOU, PHARISEES!"

Luke 11:37-54—Feb. 15.

"Be not deceived: God is not mocked." Gal. 6:7.

AMONGST the Jewish sects of our Lord's day we have every reason to believe that the Pharisees constituted the one most loyal to God. The Sadducees professed no faith in a future life. They were infidels and politicians. The Essenes were a small sect not mentioned in the Bible, a kind of Higher Critics, of little faith and confused by mixing paganism with Judaism.

The Pharisees were what might be termed orthodox Jews. Their name signifies "holiness."

In today's Study Jesus, not deigning to mention the other sects, which had entirely departed from God, addressed Himself to the Pharisees, pointing out wherein, with all their boasted holiness, they came far short of what would be acceptable to God.

A Pharisee invited Jesus to dine at his house. Jesus passed in and sat down without the formality of washing, customary to the Pharisees. "The host thought of Jesus as a holy man, and remarked that it was strange that he had not washed. Jesus then pointed out that much of what even the holiest Jews practiced was merely ceremonial, not true religion. Onwardly they were clean, but inwardly their hearts were unclean—given to extortion—spiritual wickedness. In God's sight the heart is the important matter. The inside of the cup should first be cleansed.

From our Lord's expressions, apparently one of the Pharisees' great failings was covetousness. According to the Greek, Jesus called them "money-lovers." One of the Pharisees told him that this covetousness led them dishonestly to disregard others' rights. He said, "Ye neighbour widows' houses," meaning that they took advantage of widows to accumulate property for themselves. Apparently many Pharisees were rich.

Jesus pointed out that with such wrong heart conditions God could not be pleased, even though they ever so carefully observed the outward regulations of the Jewish Law. While they were particular to the even the small seed of which they grew but a trifling quantity, yet they neglected the weightier matters of the Law—to deal justly and to love mercy.

A Pharisee Invites Jesus to Dine.

Their covetousness took the form of pride, as well as dishonesty. They wanted to be very prominent in things religious, and to be hailed as "Rabbi"—master, learned one. Jesus declared that they were like sepulchres, outwardly clean and whitewashed, but inwardly full of corruption. They were holiness people merely in the outward form or ceremonial.

Some of the Pharisees, especially educated, well-versed in the Scriptures, were styled lawyers—Doctors of the Law, equivalent of what today are termed Doctors of Divinity. Jesus upbraided them, saying that they placed previous burdens upon the common people, which they themselves would not bear. He meant that they gave such hard interpretations of God's Law as discouraged the people—setting before them standards of perfection which they themselves did not try to live up to. Apparently they wished to impress the people with the sanctity of the clergy. They built sepulchres for the Prophets, forgetful that their fathers, whose spirit they had, were the ones who killed those Prophets.

Woe! Woe! Woe! Woe! Woe!

We are not to think of Jesus as condemning the Pharisees to eternal torment, or as intimating that this would be the woe coming upon them. The woe was that the Pharisees were about to miss the great blessing which God had promised Israel—chief association in Messiah's Kingdom. (Genesis 22:18.) And there been enough "Isaiah's indeed" to complete God's fore-ordained Elect, the Kingdom offer would not have gone to the Gentiles.

The Pharisees were in the most favored place for attaining joint-heirship with Messiah, but they recognized not what they were losing. Jesus' expression, "Woe unto you," is therefore to be regarded sympathetically. This thought is borne out by the context, which foretells the great time of trouble which came upon Israel at Jesus' crucifixion and reached completion in A. D. 70, in the total destruction of their city and polity.

As Jesus declared, that trouble was a settlement of Jehovah's account for all righteous blood for which no expiation had been made. Little did those Pharisees know that their hypocrisy hindered from preparation for a place in Messiah's Kingdom both themselves and the people Jesus refers to this, saying, "Ye have taken away the key of knowledge."

Bible students very generally believe that the trouble which closed the Jewish Age pictured the Time of Trouble which will close this Gospel Age and bring upon many modern Pharisees, as well as tribulation upon all evil-doers, as a prelude to the Messianic Reign of Glory.

The Eclipse.

They were young and romantic, and, although the moon was pointing in 12 o'clock, they stood upon the porch gazing at the stars.

"That's Jupiter, dear, isn't it?" she murmured.

"Yes, pet. And that is Saturn," he replied, pointing to another star.

"Are you serious?" she asked.

"The kissed her; then, pointing upward, he said:

"That's Mars, dear."

"And that's Venus," she whispered as a footstep sounded inside the doorway.

And immediately that particular son disappeared from view. — St. Louis Post-Dispatch.

A Romance of the Panama Canal

REX BEACH

CHAPTER III.

Panama Next Stop.

SAY! Anthony raised himself excitedly on one arm, but was forced to lie down again without delay. "If this is a ship I must have come aboard. How did I do it? Where? Where?"

"You came on with two men, or rather, between two men, about 8:30 this morning. They put you in here, gave you a ticket to the purser and went ashore. The slim fellow was crying, and one of the deckhands had to help him down the gangway."

"That was Higgs, all right. Now, doctor, granting just for the sake of argument that this is a ship and that I am Jefferson Locke, when is your next stop?"

"One week."

"What? Kirk's eyes opened wide with horror. "I can't stay here a week."

"You will have to."

"But I tell you I can't—I just can't. I bought a new car the other day, and it's standing in front of the New York theater. Yes, and I have two rooms and a bath at the hotel at $15 a day."

The physician smiled heartlessly. "You must have been drinking pretty heavily, but I guess you will remember everything by and by."

"I can't understand it," groaned the bewildered invalid. "What ship is this—if it is really a ship?"

"The Santa Cruz. Belongs to the Consolidated Fruit company. This is one of the bridal suits. It is 11:30 p. m., Nov. 21. We are bound for Colon. Good night. That capsule will make you sleep."

When the officer had gone Kirk turned over and fell asleep. Morning showed him the truth of the doctor's information. He awoke early, and, although his head still behaved queerly and he had moments of nausea, he dressed himself and went on deck.

A limbo, only seen stretched out before his bewildered eyes. He touched the rail with his hands to verify his vision. He felt as if he were walking in his sleep. He realized that a great fragment had suddenly dropped out of his life's pattern.

Although Anthony was a youth of few responsibilities, he awoke suddenly to the fact that there were a thousand things that needed doing, a thousand people who needed to know his whereabouts, a thousand things that were bound to go wrong. For instance, there was his brand new French car, standing with motor blanketed beside the Forty-fifth street curb.

What had happened to it and to the urchin he had left in charge of it? He owed $1,000 on its purchase, which he had promised to pay yesterday. That remittance from his father had come just to the nick of time. Suddenly he recalled placing the check in his bill case, and he searched himself diligently, but found nothing. It was simply imperative that he get some word ashore.

He let his eyes rove over the ship in desperation. Then a happy thought came to him.

"The wireless!" he said aloud. "Bonehead! Why didn't you think of that long ago?" A glance at the rigging showed him that the Santa Cruz was equipped with a plant, and a moment later he was hammering at the operator's door.

"I want to send a message right away!" he cried excitedly. But the "wireless" shook his head, with a smile.

"We're installing a new system. The old apparatus wasn't satisfactory, and it's being changed throughout."

"Then you—you can't send a message—possibly?"

"Nothing doing until the next trip."

Kirk strode forward and stared disconsolately down upon the freight deck in a vain endeavor to collect his thoughts. He recalled the incidents of that wild night and began to have a disquieting doubt. Did that chance meeting with the chap from St. Louis have anything to do with his presence here, or had he really decided in some foolish, drunken whim to take a trip to Central America? He recollected that Jefferson Locke had not impressed him very favorably at the start.

The sound of a bugle, which Kirk interpreted as an invitation to breakfast, reminded him that he was famished, and he lost no time in going below. Upon his appearance the steward made it plain to him in some subtle manner that the occupant of suit A needed nothing beyond the mere possession of those magnificent quarters to insure the most considerate treatment. Kirk was placed at the captain's table, where his hunger was soon appeased, and his outlook grew more cheerful with the complete restoration of bodily comfort.

"Gettin' your sea legs, Mr. Locke?"

inquired the man at his right.

"My name is Anthony."

"I beg your pardon! The passenger list said—"

"That was a mistake."

"My name is Stein. May I ask where you are bound for?"

"I think the place is Panama."

"Going to work on the canal?"

"What canal? Oh, of course! Now I remember hearing something about a Panama canal. Is that where it is?"

"That's the place," Stein replied dryly.

"Oh, I've heard it mentioned."

"Well, you won't hear anything else mentioned down here. It's the one and only subject of conversation. Nobody thinks or talks or dreams about anything except the canal. Everybody works on it or else works for somebody who does. See this fellow coming down the stairs? Anthony beheld a slender, bald headed man of youthful appearance. "That is Stephen Cortlandt. You've heard of the Cortlands?"

"Sure! One of them pitched for the Cubs."

"I mean the Cortlands of Washington. They're swell people, society folks and all that." He broke off to bow respectfully to the late comer, who seated himself, opposite. Then he introduced Kirk.

Mr. Cortlandt impressed Anthony as a cold blooded, highly schooled person, absolutely devoid of sentiment. He seemed by no means effeminate, yet he was one of those immaculate beings upon whom one can scarcely imagine a speck of dust or a bead of perspiration.

"By the way, we're getting up a pool on the ship's run," Stein told his new acquaintance. "Would you like to join?"

"Yes, indeed. I'm for anything in the line of chance."

"Very well. I'll see you in the smoking room later. It will cost you only $5."

Kirk suddenly recalled his financial condition and hastened to say, a trifle lamely:

"Come to think about it, I believe I'll stay out. I never gamble."

To glance up at the moment he found Mr. Cortlandt's eyes fixed upon him with a peculiarly amused look and a few minutes later he followed Mr. Stein to the deck above.

Once in his own stateroom search showed Kirk that even his watch was gone and that his only asset, evidently overlooked by the billiardist Higgs and his co-partner in crime, was a modest three stone finger ring. He had neither baggage, nor money. He was regarding his ring speculatively when the purser knocked, then entered at his call.

"I've just heard that there's a mistake about your ticket," the newcomer began. "It is made out to Mr. Jefferson Locke, but the doctor says you insist your name is something else."

"That's right. My name is Anthony."

"Then how did I get this ticket?"

"I'm sure I don't know."

"Have you any baggage?"

"I don't know."

"What is your destination?"

"I don't know. You'll pardon my limited vocabulary?"

"But I don't understand."

"Neither do I. But I must have some baggage. I need a clean shirt and collar."

"If you are not Mr. Locke the ticket is no good."

"Hurry! Put me off."

"You don't understand—the ticket is good, but—"

"Pardon the personal nature of the question—but what size shirt do you wear?"

"Seventeen."

"Saved! Let me have about six. Will you?"

"Certainly not," returned the other.

"I need all I have. I'll have a look for your baggage, Mr. Anthony, and I'll see the captain about this ticket also. I'll look you up later."

He departed, shaking his head as if this were a form of insanity he had never before encountered. A moment later Kirk followed him and made a round of the deck, starting at each man he met and mentally estimating the girl of his neck. Then he made his way toward the smoking room, determined to enlist the help of his new acquaintance, Stein.

Midway after he paused. A girl had emerged from the deckhouse ahead of him, whose appearance was sufficiently striking to divert him, momentarily at least, from his quest. She was well above the usual height, quite slender, yet of an exquisite rounded fullness, while her snug fitting tailor made gown showed the marks of taste. Kirk let his eyes follow her, then retraced his way around the deck in the hope of meeting her face to face.

But when they had met and passed he went his way vaguely disappointed. Instead of a girl, as the first sight of her youthful figure had led him to expect, he had seen a woman of perhaps forty. She was certainly not so handsome as he had imagined from a distance. Yet the face was attractive. The eyes were wide set, gray and very clear, the mouth large enough to be expressive. Her hair shone in the morning sun with a delicate bronze luster like that of a turkey's wing.

He dismissed her from his thoughts and continued his search for a number seventeen shirt and collar to match. But he did not fare well. He found Mr. Stein in the smoking room, but discovered that his size was fifteen and a half, and there was no one else to whom he could apply.

For a second time Stein importuned him to buy a chance on the ship's run, and, falling in this, suggested that they have a drink together. Had not Kirk realized in time his inability to reciprocate he would have accepted eagerly, for his recent disputation had left him curiously weak and nervous. At the cost of an effort, however, he refused.

Stein laughed. "Don't get sore. All ships are alike. We have to talk about something. Sorry I can't help you with the shirt question. Denied carelessly of them to lose your luggage."

"Yes. It makes one feel about as comfortable as a man with a broken arm and the prickly heat. Something's got to be done about it, that's all." He glared enviously at the well dressed man about the room.

Over in a corner, propped against the leather upholstery, was Mr. Cortlandt, as pale, as reserved and as saturnine as at breakfast. He was sipping Scotch and soda, and in all the time that Anthony remained he did not speak to a soul save the waiter, did not shift his position save to hearken for another drink. Something about his sour, introspective aloofness displeased the onlooker, who shortly returned to the deck.

The day was warming up, and on the sunny side of the ship the steamer chairs were filling. Two old men were casting quarts; a nobby quartet was playing shuffleboard. After idling back and forth on deck for a time Kirk selected a chair and stretched himself out.

"Do you wish this chair for the voyage, sir?" asked the deck steward.

"Yes, I think so."

"I'll put your name on it."

"Anthony, suit A, third floor front."

"Very well, sir." The man wrote out a card and lifted it to the back of the chair, saying: "One dollar, if you please."

"I haven't got a dollar."

The steward laughed, as if to humor his passenger. "I'm afraid, then, you can't have the chair."

"So I must stand up all the way to Panama, eh?"

"You are joking, sir. I'll have to pay myself if you don't."

"That's right. Make me as uncomfortable as possible. By the way, what size collar do you wear?"

"Sixteen."

Kirk sighed. "Send the purser to me, will you? I'll fix up the chair matter with him."

While he was talking he heard the rustle of skirts close by, and saw the woman he had met earlier seating herself next to him. It annoyed the young man to realize that out of all the chairs on deck he had selected the one nearest hers.

Then the purser appeared. "Did you send for me?" he inquired.

"Yes. There was a strange man around just now, and he wanted a dollar for this chair."

"Well?"

"I want to establish a line of credit." The purser grunted.

"And, say?" Kirk ran on seriously. "I've been all over your little ship, but the passengers are boys' size. I can't wear this collar any longer."

"And I can't find any baggage of yours. I've seen the captain about that ticket matter," he went on, "and he says you must buy another. If you are joking you've carried this thing far enough. If you are really strapped, as you say you are, how does it happen that you are occupying the best seat on the ship?"

"It is a long story."

"Humph! You will have to give up those quarters and go forward."

"Why? You have your money for that ticket?"

"Yes, but you're not Mr. Locke."

"Well, sir, now that I come to think it over, I believe my name is Locke, after all." He grinned. "Anyhow, I love my little room, and I think I'll keep it. Please don't be peevish. I want you to do me a favor."

He removed the ring from his finger and, handing it to the purser, said: "I want you to get me two diamonds and a ruby's worth of shirts and collars and also a safety razor."

The officer unblinked to any, with dignity. "You wish to raise money on this, I presume. Very well, I will see what can be done for you, Mr. Locke."

CHAPTER IV.

New Acquaintance.

AS he turned away Kirk became conscious that the woman in the next chair had let her book fall and was watching him with amused curiosity. Feeling a sudden desire to confide in some one, he turned his eyes upon her with such a natural, boyish smile that she could not take offense and began quite as if he had known her for some time.

"These people are money mad, aren't they? Worm-bunch of gold diggers I ever saw." Surprised, she half raised her book, but Kirk ran on: "I hope you don't mind my speaking to you. I'm awfully lonesome. My name is Anthony, Kirk Anthony."

Her face showed that the name conried no significance.

"I understood you to tell the purser your name was Locke," said she in a very low pitched, well modulated voice. "I couldn't help overhearing."

"But it isn't really. It's Anthony. I'm the undisciplined heir to the stocks and bonds of an old party by that name who lives in Albany."

"Darwin K. Anthony?" questioned she quickly. "Is he your father?" Her face lighted with a flash of genuine interest.

Kirk nodded.

"It's funny, isn't it, with all his credit that I can't get a shirt until I put up a diamond ring?"

"You are joking, are you not?"

"No, indeed. I didn't intend to take this trip. I didn't even know I had baggage than a robin."

"Really? How did it happen?"

"Well, to be perfectly honest, I got drunk—just plain drunk. I didn't think so at the time, understand, for I'd never been the least bit that way before. Hope I don't shock you."

His new acquaintance shrugged her shoulders. "I have seen something of the world. I'm not easily shocked."

"Well, I was perfectly sober the last I remember, and then I woke up on the Santa Cruz. You see, it was a big night—football game, supper and all (Continued on page 6).

WOULDN'T it be a good plan to bury the Board of Public Works at the coming spring election? They are as near dead as possible now and the sooner the city is rid of them the sooner such questions as the adoption of new water rates, the installation of meters for all water consumers, and other needed reforms will be enacted.

If public officials were only as effective after they get into office as they promised to be during the preceding campaign there would be no need of reform movements and no popular clamor for greater efficiency in the administration of government.

It is quite apparent that when the city council wants to rid itself of some more or less important question they refer it to the Board of Public Works. In their hands it is a hundred to one that it will not be acted upon within six months.

If some of the people in Charlevoix thought as much of the town as they do of themselves it would not be long before every civic want would be filled and the apex of prosperity reached.

It is announced that Chase Osborn will not be a primary candidate for the governorship. Chase is about the only prominent Republican in the state of whom this can be said.

NOW that the total income tax exemption for married couples is placed at $4000 instead of $3000, what inducement is there for a woman to support her husband?

GOVERNMENT reports say there is a shortage of fur-bearing animals, but one does not notice any diminution in the number of alley cats.

HAVE you noticed the tone of

The Tossing of Fate

Now We Go Up and Now
We Go Down

By MILLARD MALTBY

When Fred Hartley was graduated from the scientific department of his college at the head of his class, though he did not know it, he was at the apex of that eminence which is measured by the plaudits of one's fellows. Every one predicted that he would have a brilliant career, though no one seemed to have any well defined idea as to how it was to be brought about. He had astonished his classmates and instructors by his mechanical ingenuity and had invented several contrivances which, though of no especial value, indicated his ability in that direction.

The next most important feature to a man's career is the wife he gets. At the marriage age there are no instructors to tell him which girl will be the helpmeet for him that he needs or the girl unfitted to supply his requirements, and if there were such they would doubtless make many lamentable failures in pointing out the right girl. In

NOT A WORD DID SHE UTTER, BUT SANK INTO HIS ARMS.

this most important matter Hartley made a mistake, but no greater mistake than the girl who married him.

Anna Blanchard was no prominent among girls as Fred Hartley was among men. She was a co-ed with Hartley and stood well in her classes.
She was one to look up rather than down. Her girl friends remarked that she would take a prominent place among women. But a woman is likely to be more dependent on her husband for her opportunities than the husband is on the wife for that steadfast backing which he is at times sure to need. When, therefore, the attachment between Anna and Fred was uttered all said: "That's just the kind of man Anna needs for a husband, and she is fitted to be the wife of a brilliant man."

It was a love match anyway. Every one said when the couple were married that whatever happened they would be devoted to each other. But who can predict when a class of young men or young women go forth from the alma mater on to the stage of actual life to act the parts for which they have been rehearsed which shall become "stars" and which shall constitute the end as "villagers," to clasp their hands when the hero and heroine enter or exit?

Hartley on leaving college accepted a position with a large manufacturing company, where his scientific knowledge was likely to be useful. He married his fiancée soon after this, and all was going well with the pair when the establishment by which Fred was employed failed. The failure came while Fred was at work on a machine needed in the business which would work wonders if successful. So the young inventor determined to keep on with his work independently.

Ten years passed, and the Hartleys found themselves in a position exactly the reverse from what had been expected. Instead of taking a high stand they had taken a low one.

Meanwhile his wife was yearning for that sphere for which, nature had intended her. When she was married every one had envied her her future.
Now the few who had kept in touch with her pitied her. "It's too bad," they said, "that Anna should be tied to so impracticable a man. She should have married one of prominence—one who could give her a sphere to show what there is in her."

No one realized this more than her husband. One day he went away, leaving a note for her in which he said he would no longer stand in the way of her taking the position in the world to which she was entitled. "Apply for a divorce on account of desertion," he said, "and I will not oppose it. If you prefer to act independently of me without breaking the marriage tie, do as I will never trouble you."

Which of these two alternative this wife had in mind when she went forth to take her affairs into her own hands she did not say, but she sent a note to her husband saying that she agreed with him that the time had come when they had better act independently of each other, for a time at least. If she found it possible to acquire an income she would write him and they could come together again. This did not interest him, for he was too much of a man to accept the earnings of a woman.

How Mrs. Hartley managed it her husband did not know, but he soon heard of her as a prominent woman.
She not only became notable in women's associations of various kinds, but took a stand socially that other women could not achieve without being backed by a fortune. In a few years the name of Mrs. Hartley was one of the best known of any woman in the city where she lived, and her fame extended to other localities.

But fortune—pecuniary fortune—did not come. Yet even this was easy of achievement if she chose to put off one husband and take another. This she found hard to do. She wrote Hartley to know if he was in condition to support her. If so she would return to him. If not she would apply for a divorce to marry one of several rich men who wanted her. Hartley wrote back that he was still in the position of one who was about to make a large fortune. This decided her. She applied for a divorce, secured it and married a wealthy banker, becoming Mrs. Eldridge.

For ten years Mrs. Eldridge led the social world of her city and was at the head of numerous women's associations. No woman's enterprise was launched without her approval; no new family was admitted to the chief social circle without her consent. She was the most envied woman in her sphere, though no one wished to depose her, for there was no one who could hope to take her place.

But her contract with the world was like Faust's agreement with Mephistotopheles. At the end came the infernal pit. One morning the social and business world was shocked at the announcement that the great banking house of Eldridge & Co. had failed.
The doors of the office were closed, and there was talk before the private residence of the head of the firm. He was an old man, and his physique was crushed under the ruin of his fortunes.

During the decade of Mrs. Eldridge's supremacy Fate, who is never content to let affairs alone, but must needs be tossing them up just for the fun of seeing them come down again, having left Hartley on the ground for twenty years, instead of catching the Eldridge ball on its descent for another toss, let it roll away in the dirt and, picking up Hartley, threw him so far up in the air that he must have got entirely away from gravity, for he never came down again as long as he lived.

Hartley, after years of experimenting, evolved a process in metallurgy that halved the cost of manufacture.
Experience had taught him how to reap the benefit of an invention, and he forced a large manufacturing concern to pay him half the saving for a term of years. One year's royalty made him rich, and every year after that his fortune increased by arithmet-ical progression.

Mrs. Eldridge retired from the limelight more rapidly than she had entered it. After the failure of the banking house she found herself with an invalid husband and no income. She had no talent for money making and could not compete in any of the fields open to her sex with younger women. With her husband she sank into oblivion.
How they managed to live no one knew, and of all those who had angled for an approving smile from the wife during the period of her glory not one cared.

One day Hartley, sitting in the rear seat of his $10,000 auto car, coming at a crossing upon a hearse followed by two or three carriages, directed his chauffeur to stop till the funeral had passed. In the chief mourner's carriage he saw a face so pale, so thin, so sad, that at first he did not recognize it, nor could he realize that it was the same face that had looked up lovingly at him on his wedding day nearly thirty years before.

Her eyes met his and saw in them the same affection, to which was added a world of sympathy that she had seen in him on that memorable day.
There was no other evidence of recognition between them. In a moment the little cartage had passed. Hartley's car crossed the street and sped away, and a person of those who wait ed to pass on recognizing the sad culmination of ambition they had witnessed.

That same evening when the widow was lighting the lamps in her tumbledown cottage there came a knock at the door. She opened it and there stood the husband of her youth. Not a word did she utter, but sank into his arms.

Later, when having dismissed the past they were looking to the future,
the husband said:

"I dreaded, sweetheart, when we were married that I should fall to do all for you that was expected of me.
I knew the sphere for which you were fitted and felt that your not being able to enter it would be a crying injustice.
Thank heaven, I am now able to do for more for you than the wildest hopes might have suggested. You are still young enough—"

"For heaven's sake, don't!"

"Do you mean that you are tired of leadership?"

"I hate leadership. I hate the world, and I regret that you are rich and I am deprived of an opportunity to atone for my past error."

STEAMER ARIZONA SUNK

While Transportation Company's Boat Now Lies at Bottom of Chicago River.

The steamer Arizona, owned by the White Transportation Company of Boone City, was rammed by a large boat which broke loose from her mooring during a big elevator fire at Chicago Sunday night and sent to the bottom of the Chicago river.

The Arizona was one of the best lumber boats plying the waters of the great lakes and at the time of the accident was in winter quarters.
She was purchased three years ago by the White Transportation Company and had a carrying capacity of a quarter of million feet of hardwood lumber and three quarters of a million feet of softwood. Her value is estimated at $20,000.

Sunday and Monday's storm has been the worst so far this winter as far as snowfall is concerned. Nearly a foot of snow fell from midnight Saturday to Monday evening and since then the thermometer has hovered around zero. Pine and Round lakes are frozen to a depth of from six to ten inches. The weather resembles March instead of February.

A merchant in a neighboring town states that his newspaper advertising last year cost him 54 cents for every hundred dollar's worth of goods sold. He used a half page for his business announcement each week. There's a man possessed of a good head and it there were more of them in the smaller towns the big catalogue houses would be driven out of business.

She laid the still, white form beside those which had gone before. No sob, no sigh forced it way from her heart, throbbing as though it would burst. Suddenly a cry broke the stillness of the place—one single heartbreaking shriek; then silence; another cry; more violence; then all silent but for a guttural murmur which seemed to well up from her very soul. She left the place. She would lay another egg to-morrow.

A story, the truth of which is not denied, is reported as coming direct from Charlevoix, where a number of foreigners were taking out naturalization papers last week. During the examination of one of the aspirants to American citizenship, an story runs, the judge quizzed: "Who makes the laws?" Without a second's hesitation came the answer: "Ford Robbins, the sheriff."—Petoskey Evening News.

TRACKED HOME BY BLOOD HOUND

John Cunningham Helped Diminish His Neighbor's Wood Pile.

Case Reported to Under Sheriff Coon, Who Put Dog on the Tracks—Now Serving Time.

For several nights during the past week Homer Davis had noticed that his wood pile was rapidly diminishing and came to the conclusion that someone was keeping themselves warm these cold nights at his expense. Monday night he was again visited by the night prowler, and in the morning reported the case to Under Sheriff Coon with the request that he at once place the man-trailing blood-hound on the newly made tracks.

Upon arrival at the scene where the theft had taken place, the dog immediately took the trail, which led to the home of John Cunningham, two blocks south of the Catholic church. When the accusation was made, Cunningham admitted his guilt, and was placed under arrest.

He was taken before Justice Feltz, where he stated that he had helped himself to the wood on several occasions, and that he had been forced to an account of having no money and was unable to obtain work. He also confessed that he was guilty of the theft of 56 pounds of butter from the creamery, stolen some time ago.

The confession of the butter theft came as a surprise, as at the time it was stolen the authorities were not able to obtain any clue as to the guilty parties. He was given a fine of $25 or thirty days in the county jail and, being unable to pay the fine, will serve the jail sentence. Upon the expiration of his time he will probably be re-arrested on the wood-stealing charge.

KEEP VILLAGES UP TO STANDARD

Concerted and Immediate Action Only Remedy.

SANITATION USUALLY BAD.

Streets Unkept and Buildings Lack Coherence—Saloon Often a Potent Influence—"Live" Men in Charge Best Antidote For Such Conditions.

T. L. Hineckley of the Westchester county (N. Y.) research bureau suggests the following program for village betterment:

"To the village the physical setup is usually defective. Streets are but partially, often improperly, paved, and there is no street plan. Buildings are only half kept up. Rotten tenements may, usually be found in villages and typical 'east side' living conditions. Sewers are apt to be defective, and 'sanitary' conveniences are often decidedly insanitary. Population is congested along 'Main street' and sparse in the rest of the village. In contrast with English and European villages the American village is often poorly articulated, even shabby. It lacks coherence and individuality.

"The average village should have a good engineer and architect go over the village with a view to adopting a 'village plan' of some sort. Time should be taken by the forelock and road-cut, open spaces laid out, building standards adopted, etc., before the village becomes the town and the town merges into the city. What crimes against municipal art and beauty would have been saved this muddle by a few weeks, even days, of thoughtful 'village planning'.

"Village administration is a one man job if there ever was one. Get a good village clerk, pay him a decent salary and let him be at his desk all day long every day in the year. Half the inefficiency and waste in village government is due to lack of information, following the 'part time' evil. With a wide awake, capable administrative officer keeping the village books up to date and having a constant eye on the community's affairs the chances for 'steals', shoddy finance, etc., will be reduced to a minimum.

"The health problem in villages is not so much the framing of new health codes or the adoption of the latest wrinkles in public health work as it is in the enforcement of such rules as do exist, with addition of special regulations only where they are actually needed. Thus the perfunctory testing of milk, the inspection of dairies and of food shops, sanitary disposal of garbage and the screening of stables can probably easily be 'read into' the existing sanitary code. The doing away with cesspools and privies depends upon sewerage facilities and must be a step contingent upon the extension of the drainage system.

"Socially the crying need of the village is systematized, sane recreation. This is required primarily as a counter balancing force against the village saloon. Athletic fields and clubs, with contests free from professionalism, are wanted here as nowhere else, for, contrary to belief, the nearness of the country does not appeal to the average village youth, as he has the delusion of amphibiousness and is more likely to haunt the poolroom than to explore the rural byways in his spare hours. Recreation centers are badly needed and, most of all, a 'live' supervisor who can show people how to amuse themselves.

"In conclusion the village problem offers one further suggestion: Cannot the state organize its villages, stir them into active life, make them keep awake, clean and efficient? Cannot each commonwealth 'standardize' village improvement in all particulars? Surely a 'village reference bureau' is needed here! Inasmuch as the village is the recruiting station for the city, the entire state teaches its citizens the modern lessons of efficient and enlightened self government and progressive social action the easier will be the task when the larger units of government are concerned. And the result will be that of all the citizens of the state, even those of the entire nation."

FOUND DEAD IN BED

Charles Lancaster Dies Suddenly Tuesday at Home of His Brother.

Chas. Lancaster, who has for some time been visiting at the home of his brother, J. B. Lancaster, Lincoln avenue, was found dead in bed on Tuesday morning. He had been in good health for some time and upon retiring for the night made no mention of being ill. Tuesday afternoon a postmortem examination was held by physicians and the cause of his sudden death was found to be hemorrhage of the brain.

Mr. Lancaster had been a resident of Petoskey for a number of years and was an inventor of some prominence. He was 65 years of age and a widower. He leaves two daughters and a host of friends to mourn their loss.

The remains were taken to Petoskey to-day for burial.

that, "I remember everything up to a certain point, then—certainly! I was out for twelve hours and sick. That's the funny part; I'm still sick. What I can't understand is this: It took all my money to pay for the supper, and yet I wake up with a first class ticket to Panama and in possession of one of the best suits on the ship. It's a problem, play."

"You say you were sick afterward?"

Kirk turned his eyes upon the speaker mournfully. "My head isn't, right yet."

"You were drugged," said the woman. "By Jove!" He straightened up in his chair. "I'm beginning to see. It "Is he your father?"

was Locke. That's how I got his name. This is his ticket. Oh! There's going to be something doing when I get back."

"You did not impress me as a college student," said the stranger.

"I'm not. I graduated four years ago. I barely made it, but I did get through."

"And you have never been to the tropics?"

"Not since I had my last row with the governor. Have you?"

"Many times. It will prove an interesting trip for you. At least you have that consolation."

"What is it like?"

Evidently the artless effrontery of the young man had not offended, for his neighbor talked freely, and in a short time the two were conversing as easily as old acquaintances.

When at last she rose, after an hour that had swiftly sped, she was gratified at the look of concern that came into his eyes. She looked at him with genuine approval as he bowed and said:

"Thank you for the pointers about Panama. I hope I may have the pleasure of talking to you again."

When she had disappeared he murmured admiringly:

"Jove! She's a corker! And she's not so old, after all. I wonder who she is. He leaned over and read the card on the back of her steamer chair. "Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt, Suite B." It was lettered straightening up, he grumbled with genuine disappointment: "Just my blamed luck! She's married."

By pledging his one article of jewelry Kirk became possessed that afternoon of several shirts, collars and handkerchiefs, likewise a razor, over which he exercised a sort of household privilege. The purser made it plain, however, that he had not sold these articles, but merely loaned them, holding the ring as security for their return, and this arrangement allowed Kirk to spare cash whatever. Even with all his necessities paid for, he surprised him to find how many channels remained for spending money. He suffered most, perhaps, from the lack of tobacco, but even in the matter of cigarettes he could not bring himself to accept favors that he could not return.

Kirk was of a peculiarly sensitive temperament that required much to ruffle and looked upon the whole matter as a huge joke. It was this perhaps that enabled him to make friends in spite of his unsocial habits, for the men liked him. As for the women, he avoided them religiously, with the exception of Mrs. Cortlandt, whom he saw for an hour or two morning and afternoon as well as at meal times. With her he got on famously, finding her nearly as entertaining as a male chum, though he never quite lost his dislike for her husband. Had she been unmarried and nearer his own age their daily intimacy might have caused him to become self-conscious, but under the circumstances no such thoughts occurred to him, and he began to look forward with pleasure to their hours on deck.

The Santa Cruz was four days out before Cortlandt joined them, and when he did he merely nodded casually to Kirk, then, after exchanging a polite word or two with his wife, slipped into his customary slumber, while Mrs. Cortlandt continued her conversation without a second glance in her husband's direction.

A man evidently possessed a wide knowledge of current events, a keen understanding of men and things, yet he never opened up. He listened, spoke rarely and continued to spend three-fourths of his time in that isolated corner of the smoking room, with no other company than a lone glass and a siphon.

One day when Kirk had begun to feel that his acquaintance with Mrs. Cortlandt was well established he said to her:

"Sheila told me today that your husband is in the diplomatic service."

"Yes," said she. "He was consul general to Colombia several years ago, and since then he has been to France and to Germany."

"Are you diplomating now?"

"In a way. We shall be in Panama for some time. Colonel Johnson will be interested in you."

"I don't see the point."

"Your father is one of the most powerful and aggressive railroad men in the country. Perhaps you know something about the railroad opposition to the canal?"

Kirk smiled. "Well, to tell you the truth," said he, "the governor doesn't consult me about his business as much as he ought to. He seems to think he can run it all right without me, and we've only been speaking over the telephone lately."

"One of the strongest forces the government had to combat in putting through the canal appropriations was the railroads. Colonel Johnson has no reason to love your father."

"By the way, when are you going into business with him?"

"Oh, not for a long time. You see, work doesn't really appeal to me, anyway. I suppose if I had to hustle I could, but what's the use?"

Mrs. Cortlandt let her eyes dwell upon him curiously for a moment. Then she said:

"Have you no ambition? Is there no girl for instance? Have you never been in love?"

"Oh, see here, now!" Anthony blushed in a manner to excite the envy of any woman. "I don't like 'em. I'd rather play football."

"You lack stimulus. If you should meet the right woman"—Then, seeing the amusement in his face, "Believe me, I know what I am talking about. I know what a woman can do. Your life has been too easy and placid. You need some disturbing element to make it ferment."

The Santa Cruz was now rapidly drawing out of the cold northern water and into a tropic warmth. The nights were perfect, the days divine. The passengers responded as if to a magic draft, and Kirk acknowledged to a reluctant enjoyment of the change and found himself less eager to go back.

Mrs. Cortlandt joined him as usual on deck after dinner, and they did a mile around the promenade, chatting idly of many things. The evening was too glorious to permit of early retiring, and a late hour found them leaning over the rail, side by side, while Anthony bewailed the fact that he knew nothing of the country just beyond the dark horizon ahead of them. They talked about the canal.

"It is a big task, Mr. Anthony, and the mere digging of the ditch is the smallest part. There is a great deal more to be done. You see, as men of our culture, they require more than mere food and drink and bedding, and in the same way, as millions of men to greatness, they require more than mere territory—they reach out and absorb power and prestige. Our decision to build the Panama canal is like the heading of another Columbus; the conquest is to follow. After that will come—who knows what? Perhaps more wars, more pillage, more injustice, just as in the old days of Central and South America."

"You talk like a man," Anthony said admiringly. "I had no idea you looked at things in such a big way."

Mrs. Cortlandt hesitated slightly as she changed the subject. "I heard you tell the purser the other day about your financial troubles, and it occurred to me that Mr. Cortlandt might assist you."

"Thanks, awfully," Kirk hastened to say, feeling himself flush uncomfortably. "But I shan't need anything. The old gentleman will wire me whatever I ask for. Does Mr. Cortlandt know how I am fixed?"

"No."

"Please don't tell him. I'm a little bit ashamed of myself."

Mr. Cortlandt was awaiting his wife and rose cautiously as she entered their suite.

"Did you send Abner for me?" she inquired.

"Yes. I thought you had forgotten the hour. We rise at 11."

"My dear," she returned coolly, "I was quite aware of the time. I was talking to Mr. Anthony."

"By the way, some of the passengers are remarking about your friendship for him."

Mrs. Cortlandt shrugged. "I expect that. Does it interest you?"

The man favored her with his wintry smile. "Not at all."

"If he should need assistance while in Panama I should be obliged if you would accommodate him."

"Don't you think that is going a bit too far? You know I don't fancy him."

"Mrs. Cortlandt frowned slightly. "We won't discuss it," she said. "I assured him he was at liberty to call on us for anything, and naturally that ends the matter."

"Naturally," he agreed, but his colorless cheeks flushed dully.

When Kirk came on deck early the following morning he found the Santa Cruz nodding her way into Colon harbor. A land for observant his view somewhat, but through it he beheld a low, irregular line of mountains in the background and close at hand a town. The ship came to anchor abreast of a point upon which he described a small little spider-legged lighthouse and long rows of frame dwellings half hidden behind slender palm trees. Beyond were warehouses and docks and the funnels of many ships. On either side of the bay was a dense tropical wilderness. "Will you go over to Panama city or will you stay in Colon?" asked Cortlandt.

"I think I'll remain on the ship. Then she can't get away without me," Kirk answered. But when he explained his desire to the purser that worthy replied:

"I'm sorry, but you'll have to arrange that with the agent. We make a charge, you know, just like a hotel."

"I'm going to cable my old man for money."

The officer shook his head with finality. "Nothing doing, Mr. Locke. If you want to stay aboard you'll have to pay in advance. I don't intend to be stuck for your bill."

"All right, then. I shall throw myself upon the mercy of strangers."

THE KITCHEN CUPBOARD

SOME SUMMER FISH.

Breakfast Menu.
Cereal. Cream.
Baked Mackerel.
French Fried Potatoes. Popovers.
Cocoa.

In summer it is better to eat fish than meat, for it is nutritious and much less heating than the latter. Among the fish now in season the following are popular and inexpensive:

Baked With Cream.
Baked Mackerel.—Split and clean two small mackerel. Place in a buttered dripping pan, sprinkle with salt and pepper and pour over one-half cupful thin cream. Bake in a hot oven.

Broiled Flounder With Sauce.—Clean and skin a flounder, sprinkle both sides with pepper and salt and squeeze over it a little lemon juice. Dip the fish in warmed butter, cover well with finely grated bread crumbs, place on a gridiron and broil over a clear fire, turning to brown both sides equally. Bone an anchovy, put the flesh into a mortar with a small lump of butter and pound it; then place it in a small saucepan with the strained juice of a lemon and stir over the fire for a few minutes. When cooked place the flounder on a hot dish, pour the anchovy sauce over it and serve.

For Sea or Fresh Trout.
Baked Trout.—Take two pounds of trout, a tablespoonful of butter, a tablespoonful of onion juice, a tablespoonful of flour, a cupful of milk, a teaspoonful of salt, a dash of paprika and a tablespoonful of chopped parsley. Brush pan with dripping, lay on it the fish, which has had scales, head, tail and backbone removed. Cover with cream sauce and bake thirty minutes. Serve on a hot platter sprinkled with chopped parsley.

Fish and Cereal.
Bluefish With Rice.—Five cupfuls water, two cupfuls boiled rice, quarter cupful of olive oil, a pound of bluefish, some salt and pepper. Place olive oil in a deep vessel and bring to the smoking point on a moderate fire. Add the water gradually and when this comes to a boil put in the rice, place the fish over the rice, season to taste, cover and leave slowly boiling till all the water has evaporated. Serve hot.

Mama Thompson.

A Slap at Mother.

Dinner was done, and the family was assembled in the sitting room. Mother had taken up the evening paper and was reading an account of how a highwayman had been operating in the suburbs. Father was on the floor playing with Willie.

"Papa," Willy remarked the good boy, glancing toward his husband, "there is a story about another man who was caught. Do these holdups always stop you with a pistol and then go through your clothes?"

"Oh, no," carefully replied father, arising from the floor. "Sometimes they wait until you have your clothes over the back of a chair and go to sleep."

The Fact Remains

No amount of misrepresentation by the peddlers of alum baking powders, no juggling with chemicals, or pretended analysis, or cooked-up certificates, or falsehoods of any kind, can change the fact that

Royal Baking Powder has been found by the official examinations to be of the highest leavening efficiency, free from alum, and of absolute purity and wholesomeness.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for making finest and most economical food.

MONEY FROM TURKEYS.

One Woman's Great Success With Flock of Bourbon Reds.

"For a number of years I have been interested in raising turkeys," says a woman writer in Farm and Fireside. "I began operations on a small scale, finding it a very profitable experiment and a pleasant pastime. I have enlarged the number of my breeding stock each year. Now I get orders from all most every state in the Union."

"I keep only the Bourbon Reds, and I consider them far ahead of any other kind. As to size, they run well up to the hronze. They are hardy and healthy and are very gentle and easy to manage."

"Until the turkeys are about a month or two old I yard the busy mother with her pouls. After that I let them have the run of the pasture through the daytime, bringing them home each evening to roost. They soon become accustomed to coming home at evening, at which time we give them a good feed of small grain, such as wheat, Ruffin corn or millet, with all the clabber cheese that I have to spare."

"My roosting house opens to the south, with a wire front. I roost them there until they are large enough to fly upon a large outdoors frame. I like to get them to roosting outdoors as early as possible, for the outdoor life is the natural life of the turkey. Plenty of clear fresh water is necessary to the turkey at all times. After the pouls have had their fill the surplus water is emptied and the house cleaned for the next watering time."

"Since beginning to keep Bourbon Reds I have had no serious trouble with disease. I know nothing of black head from experience. The warding off of disease is easier than the curing of it. I do this by putting a little food, carbolic acid in the drinking water, once a week. A large percentage of turkeys that die are from two to three weeks old. They need at that age careful handling, good nourishing food and exercise. As soon as they seem strong enough I turn them out to rustle for themselves, when they can get bugs and worms to eat."

"My nesting house is a long shed with a wire front. My turkeys all lay in there, so I have no trouble in gathering the eggs."

"I try to have early hatching, so that by the 1st of November I begin shipping them and continue so long as my supply lasts. Each year the number of orders have exceeded the supply."

HOW TO MAKE THE FARM PAY.

Do! things the modern way—that's what makes farm business pay. Paint the barn and mend the fence, use common sense in horse care; change crops, conserve soil, get the sure reward for toil, help nature make her yields from the fresh and rested fields.

Mulch the Strawberry Bed.
A strawberry shortcake, evenly ripened, in a splendid stock food for family use and most people prefer it to the ordinary strawberry shortcake of the market. This is mentioned now so you will remember to mulch the strawberry bed this fall.

GENERAL FARM NOTES.

Water plowing seems to be gaining in favor.

Now that the general field work is over keep the manure spreader in daily use.

Barnyard manure, cottonseed meal and well phosphates are excellent fertilizers for Irish potatoes.

This is a good time to cover the bare spots in the pastures with manure, to be needed early next spring.

Since alfalfa is a permanent crop, the ground should be prepared with more care than ordinarily, making it level, free from stones or other obstructions.

Clover is rich in nitrogen, and in homogeneous soils it develops tubercles which attract nitrogen from the air where it is stored in the fibrous root quantities.

In large pastures the animals roam from one especially attractive patch of grass to another, traveling all over the field, and trampling down more than they can eat.

SCHOOL SYSTEM OF PRESENT DAY

was not always practical, but it gave the required culture and put them in a class by themselves.

Our system to-day is the result of the past ages and we have come to look upon the method of getting knowledge out of books as the only means of getting culture and therefore the school provides only the means for us to satisfy our thirst for knowledge, through the medium of books and many times this has lost all the connection it ever had with real life and may be very dry material both for the teacher and the pupil, and the only reason for its introduction is that it has a cultural value. There is no denying that but what it has value, but the manner of presentation is so antique as to make a more modern method desirable. What is called for today is a more vital connection between the school and the practical affairs of life.

Besides the value that has been mentioned in the earlier part of this discussion manual training, and the allied subjects have the power to make the school a real community, a place of social intercourse where the primal necessities of community life are shown in place of a building set apart for the reciting of lessons.

Have you ever entered a shop where thirty or forty boys were all working? Is it not like a community where everybody is doing what helped along the whole? In one shop the boys were all working for a single aim—they were building a model house, complete in every respect, from a plan drawn by one of their number. Each part must be perfect or the house would not stand the test of the inspector, who was the best and smartest one in the class. Have you the least doubt but that each boy did his best to make his house the best possible? Did he not know that the whole class was watching the development and that if he wished to have the respect of his fellow workers that his best must be put in the work he had to do? In the classroom the discussions took the form of what materials to use, counting price and service and beauty. Here the boy must learn the value of these materials and where they were manufactured and the forest conditions where the various trees grew. A study in economics, in manufacture, in history, and all for a purpose. He was not learning these without an aim. Can you doubt for one minute that the boy had an interest in the work that was greater than if he had studied the development of the lumber industry in a course in phytagography for the development of the wood structure in the botany class both from books and with very little vital connection to everyday life? This is only one illustration, and they might be multiplied indefinitely. The weaving processes might be connected with history, and the development of our own country into great sections, and the great struggle that resulted from this very division. In fact the whole history of the American people should be centered around the cotton industry. The best part is that it would be so natural that the child would discover the most of this for himself with a little help from the instructor.

Would not the introduction of such courses help to vitalize the schools and bring back some of the old conditions that were existent in the old community days? Make the boys and girls realize that they must live in a community and do something for it, for are not the most of us toilers and will not the most of the children that go from our schools have to perform some service for the community in order to earn their daily bread? Would it not tend to help more than one percent of our school children to secure the advantages of the higher education, more than five per cent, to attain to the grade of our high school and more than half to continue their education beyond the fifth grade? Look into the fields, for they are already white with the harvest. It is the duty of everyone to help gather this harvest of boys and girls and to employ every means that would secure that end. This is a day of advancement along every line and if education is to meet the present day needs it must make corresponding advances.

Timing Her Finish.

"You certainly have grown thinner in the last few months, my dear. Are you taking an anti-fat cure?"

"Goodness, no! It's only the answer the new cook is causing me that does that."

"And are you not giving her notice?"

"Of course not. I want to worry down to seventy kilos. Then out she goes."—Magendoff's Blatter.

FAIR DIRECTORS' ANNUAL MEETING

Weather Did Not Prevent Every Member from Being Present.

PREMIUMS TO BE INCREASED

New Speed Committee to be Selected Within Next Thirty Days.

School Day to be Thursday, September 10—Many New Attractions for Betterment of Fair to be Added.

It requires more than 37 degrees below zero to quench the ardor of our county fair directors, which was evidenced by the fact that every member of the official board was present at the annual meeting held at the Russell House, East Jordan, February 12th.

In view of the many suggestions offered by the citizens of the county for the improvement of the fair, the energies of the fair officials were vigorously renewed in making our 1914 fair a distinct improvement over all previous exhibitions, particularly with regard to attractions, amusements and instruction. It was thought best not to purchase a high-priced attraction of short duration, but rather to arrange a varied and continuous program running throughout the fair to interest and delight its patrons. Every day of the fair will be made to claim an interest peculiar to itself. While public entertainment will be given special attention this season, yet every department of the fair will be given careful attention with the object of securing increased satisfaction to both the exhibitor and the general public.

President H. L. Olney was empowered to select a speed committee within thirty days from date, which fact will assure added convenience and comfort to all interested in the races, which will be made for the same liberal purses as offered last year.

To increase premiums $100 was appropriated for apportionment between divisions—cattle, swine and sheep—and suitable floors will be placed in the stalls, which will greatly add to the comfort and appearance of the exhibits. Competent judges will be secured and every possible effort will be made to remedy the past lack of interest, shown in these divisions and the finest exhibition of live stock ever shown to Northern Michigan should result.

The premiums offered in the fancy work department will be thoroughly revised by its superintendent and submitted to the secretary before May 1st. All interested in this division who have any suggestions to offer should confer with the superintendent at once. A number of valuable special prizes will be offered the best exhibit of certain farm products.

All granges will be required to have every portion of their exhibits in place on the first day of the fair.

The liberal plan of giving complimentary passes to all school children in the county who are either absent or tardy during the spring term of school will be continued and the program for School Day, Thursday, September 10, will be especially interesting to the great crowds that will attend. The usefulness of the fair as an educational factor through co-operation with the public schools will be encouraged in every way possible. Meritorious school work not listed will be awarded discretionary premiums and a more systematic method will be employed in the arrangement of the exhibits, which will enhance the attractiveness of this important display.

A Grange Day, not only in name but in fact, will be conducted under the auspices of Charlevoix County Grange, No. 40, and every farmer and citizen in this section may rest assured that he will be more than repaid for effort to attend on that day.

The executive committee of the fair association will meet occasionally between now and the date of the next fair, Sept. 8, 9, 10 and 11, 1914, to complete details and inaugurate new plans for the betterment of the event. All who have suggestions to offer should communicate them to the president, secretary or some member of that committee to receive prompt attention.

The following officers were chosen for 1914:

President—Herbert L. Olney, East Jordan.

Vice-President—Horace B. Hipp, East Jordan.

General Superintendent—R. B. Ward, Charlevoix.

Secretary—R. A. Brin'nell, East Jordan.

Treasurer—Martin Ruhlning, East Jordan.

Executive Committee—R. B. Ward, H. B. Hipp, Robert Price.

Finance Committee—Richard Lewis, John A. Newville, Richard Shapton.

Superintendents—Division A, Nat Burns, Charlevoix; B, R. Shapton, Charlevoix; C, Martin Staley, East Jordan; D, Sam, R. Robert Price, K, same; G, Herman Harber, Boyne City; H, John A. Newville, Boyne City; I, Mrs. E. B. Ward, Charlevoix; J, Mrs. Martin Ruhlning, East Jordan; K, Mrs. E. B. Ward; L, E. B. Ward; M, J. H. Milford, East Jordan.

The report of the finance committee agreed with that of the secretary and showed that with the balance of Feb. 13th, 1913, subscriptions and gate receipts amounted to $4,816.94.

Of this amount $1,569.31 was expended for advertising, general expenses and improvements, leaving a net balance on hand of $3,247.63.

Has Papers for Angling Permits

Non-Resident Fishermen Must Get Them to Enjoy Sport in Michigan.

Allowed Privilege of Shipping One Day's Legal Catch Outside of State.

Free fishing in the inland lakes and streams of Michigan has passed for the great hordes of summer sojourners who annually trek to the resort zone with wonderful anticipations for piscatorial sport. The law passed by the legislature, which went into effect this month, requires that every male angler over 18 years old who is a non-resident of the state shall be required to purchase an angler's license at so much per. If he wants a general license for all kinds of fish excepting some species of trout it will cost three dollars for the calendar year. If he is satisfied to try his luck with only one kind of the finny tribe, excepting again the game trout, the fee will be $1.

County Clerk Lewis has received license blanks and is now prepared to issue them. A miniature Bertillon system is employed in getting an accurate description of the fisherman and after all has been said and done as required by the new law it is necessary for the applicant to swear to it all. The clerk then takes out 10 per cent for his trouble and sends the rest of the money to the state treasurer to be credited to the game and fish warden's department.

Each licensed fisherman is handed two shipping coupons or tags which entitle him to take or ship without the limits of the state one day's legal catch as provided by the fishing laws. All such shipments must bear these tags.

It is provided by the act that any person violating the provision of the law shall upon conviction be fined not to exceed $50 for each offense or be committed to the county jail not to exceed 30 days.

Licenses issued under this act confer no fishing rights or privileges not enjoyed by residents of the state except the right to ship or take a day's legal catch outside the state.

EXPERIENCES ON MY JOURNEY TO NORTHERN MICHIGAN 50 YEARS AGO

Facts from the Pen of John J. Joffe Pioneer Settler

In the years of 1862-3 the section of Michigan which was at that time called the Grand Traverse Region was wonderfully advertised for settlement, as all new countries are. This wide publicity attracted many people, including some in Jefferson and Waukegan counties, Wisconsin, the community in which the writer lived, who came to this region to investigate.

Some of the people from the localities above named who came to this territory were Hon. Richard Knight and family, J. Lean and family, R. Lean and family, and C. Lean, J. Parsons, Joseph Harwood and many others from other quarters, who took back wonderful reports of the promised land. Upon meeting Mr. Harwood he urged me to join the party, stating at the time that a man was a fool if he did not grasp the opportunity to become an owner of some of the land, as it was excellent and the timber unsurpassed. He also stated that public conveyance was just at hand; as the G. R. & I. Railroad at this time was making its way to this country as fast as possible and the State of Michigan had surveyed a line for a state road from Grand Rapids to the Straits of Mackinac, which was to be built by the state with the object of opening up this territory for settlement. He also stated that a steamboat line was about to be established to make weekly trips between Traverse City and Chicago.

Further arguments were presented to me and I finally agreed to become a member of the party and, as the lands upon which we were to settle were to be located upon our arrival, we decided to start for our new home the following February, 1864.

In January, 1864, we had the coldest weather ever known in that part of the country, the mercury falling to 40 below and then freezing upon the people did not know just how cold it was. I had some stock well stabled and taken care of that froze to death and there was hardly a cellar but what Jack Frost entered and destroyed everything. But later on when we reached Traverse City we were informed that the coldest it had been there during this time was but 18 below, on New Year's Day.

We started our journey to Michigan on the third day of February, 1864. What I most personally dreaded was the trip by boat across Lake Michigan from Milwaukee to Grand Haven. The party consisted of four members from Jefferson county and two more who were to join us at Milwaukee. We also had a yoke of good oxen, sleighs and other necessities, such as implements, bedding and food. Upon reaching Milwaukee we stayed there a few days while the boat, which was the Caldwell, was being loaded. We left Milwaukee in the evening and reached Grand Haven at daylight the following Sunday. It was snowing and bitterly cold when they landed us on the north side of the river, opposite to where the city was then located, a very barren place where there was nothing but a railroad track, big sand hills and the woods. (I am writing this from memory, so you must look at it as I do—a review of the time, fifty years ago this month, when I was but the age of 27.)

Our next move was onward to our destination. We could not get across Grand River that day, as we had been landed on the south side of the river, and our route led us northward. The only method of crossing the river was over the railroad bridge. Lucky for us, it was Sunday and no trains. We finally made the crossing safely and traveled about two miles, when we came to a little burg named Ferryville, which I understand today is quite a city and noted for its manufacturing industries. At Ferryville we obtained directions to the next city on the route, which was Muskegon, located a distance of some 13 or 18 miles. We arrived there that evening, a little burg at that time, but now a large thriving city.

We spent the night there and during the evening met an old gentleman who, when he found out where we were going, gave us this advice: "When you get there, boys, and get settled you want to raise all the young cattle you can, and this is the way to winter and feed them: Raise all the rutabagas you can. Make a big trough out of a bass-wood log and put the bagas in the troughs. Make a meal as heavy as you can handle and mash the bagas with it. By using this method in feeding you will lose no stock by being choked, which will surely happen if you do not use this precaution."

We thanked him kindly for the advice and bade him good bye. In the morning when we were ready to resume our journey a member of the party, Billy P., said he had lost the sole of his shoe, but he told us to start and he would soon overtake us. At this point we were obliged to cross Muskegon Lake, which was perfectly safe, as teams were hauling great loads of logs across on the ice.

DEATH OF MRS. ELMER POOLE

Remains Brought Here for Burial, Which Took Place Last Saturday.

Word was received Thursday of the death of Mrs. Christina Poole, wife of Elmer Poole, a former resident of this city, which occurred on Wednesday evening at her home in Ottawa, Ohio, after a lingering illness.

Deceased was born at LaCrosse, Wisconsin, August 23rd, 1864. In April, 1903, she was married to Elmer Poole and for ten years previous to moving to Ottawa lived in this city. She is survived by her husband, a little daughter, Almeda, aged nine years, and three brothers—Reuben Andrew and David Gilder.

Her remains were brought to this city Friday and taken to the home of Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Poole. Funeral services were held from the family home Saturday morning at 10:30 o'clock.

PLAYED TO WELL FILLED HOUSE

"College Life" Proved to be a Success in Every Respect.

Those Who Took Part Greeted With Applause from Rising of Curtains to End of Play.

A real home talent production that "smacked" of the professional, with tinkling music of the catchy sort pretty choruses drills and a subliminal plot made "College Life" given at the Charlevoix Theatre Friday night under the auspices of the Knights of Pythias, a decided success.

From the rising of the curtain until the end of the play the action was lively and spirited, the music and choruses well distributed, and the scenes free from any heavy acting which, considering the nature of the production, would be a variance with the idea carried throughout the entire play.

A simple sympathetic plot made the play all the more likable, yet there was comedy in abundance, furnished principally through Olaf Neilson, the Swede, who was brought to college to play football rather than to study. This role was taken by Harry Porter of East Jordan, who handled the part in a very creditable manner.

Lee Smith brought down the house in his role as Percy Wilkins, especially in his impersonation of Olaf, from Ottumwa. Miss Peterson as Mrs. Poore, who conducted the boarding house; William Scroggie as Prof. Gaskill and H. C. McCarty as "Tin Star Shine," the village constable, carried the remaining comedy roles and all were especially clever in their respective parts.

The more serious parts, those of "Bill" Eggleston, the baseball hero; Minerva Gaskill, niece of the professor; Forgotton, the loan shark; Ethel Wilkins, Mary and Jane, co-eds, were splendidly portrayed by Everez Nordrum, Helen Meech, Dean Scroggie, Mildred Johnson, Marjorie Miller and Annette Nordrum respectively. Mr. Stern, himself carried the part of Frank Harley.

The solo, "Teasing Monn," by Edna Noble and chorus, at the closing of act one, was one of the catchy numbers. Every musical number brought applause from the audience, and were well rendered in every particular. One of the most pleasing features was the rendering of the song, "Castles in the Air" by Marjorie and Milo Miller, and "In Vacation Time" by Charlie Hamlin and chorus.

As a whole the play afforded a most splendid evening's entertainment.

50TH ANNIVERSARY

Knights of Pythias to Celebrate Event Thursday Evening With Appropriate Program.

Thursday evening, February 19, the Order of Knights of Pythias will celebrate the 50th anniversary of the founding of the Order. The first lodge of Knights of Pythias was organized at the city of Washington on the evening of the 19th of February, 1861. For the first few years the order grew slowly. Today the membership has reached the tremendous total of 750,000 with nearly 8,000 subordinate lodges.

Appropriate services will be held in the castle hall beginning at 8:30 in the evening, and all members are requested to be present with their families or a friend.

DEATH ENDS HER SUFFERINGS

Mrs. Myrtle C. Young Passes Away Monday Afternoon at 3 O'Clock.

Was Well Known in Business Circles and Leaves a Host of Friends to Mourn Their Loss.

Death came shortly after 3 o'clock Monday to Mrs. Myrtle C. Young after an illness covering about a year's duration. While the news was not unexpected, it was a shock to the entire community that a strong and beautiful life was ended. During the fourteen years of Mrs. Young's residence in this city she had endeared herself to all with whom she came in contact. She possessed the unusual combination of great executive ability and rare womanly charm and was one of the successful business women of this region and attained her prosperity through her own well-directed efforts. For the past ten years she had been at the head of what is now known as Myrtle C. Young & Son and during this period of years had conducted a most successful business.

She was born at Fenton, Michigan, December 10, 1863, and later moved to Manistota, where she lived until her removal to this city in 1900. Mrs. Young's influence was felt as soon as she came to Charlevoix, for she accepted every line of work in which she felt there was a need. She was active in church work and joined the Congregational church many years ago. Her work in the Eastern Star, of which she was a most beloved member, had been especially helpful and her death is a great blow to this order. As a member of the Macabees she had always been at the head of all movements pertaining to its welfare.

She is survived by two sons—H. E. Bowen of Detroit and Karl A. Young of this city—and a brother, A. J. Bachelier of Portland, Oregon.

The funeral services were held from the home Wednesday afternoon at 2:30 o'clock, in charge of Rev. C. K. Taggart, assisted by Rev. Quinton Walker, the ritualistic ceremony of the O. E. S. also being conducted. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

EDUCATION MAKES FARM PAY DOUBLE

Educated Farmers Make More Money Than Those of Lesser Schooling.

NO PLACE FOR THE WEAK

Or for the Man Who is too Lazy or Unable to Get Out and Work.

Those Who Turn to the Farm With the Idea of Reaping Large Incomes Are Sure of Disappointment.

Farmers with a high school education make nearly double the average income of those with merely a common school education, and those who start earliest make the most profits according to the Department of Agriculture's investigators. The department's Office of Farm Management has been conducting a series of investigations in the corn-belt which have brought out many details that should be of practical value to all agriculturists. These results have just been published in a new bulletin.

Under average conditions the farm, according to this bulletin, is no place for the weak or for those unable to direct work. The man who intends to spend his working life in the country should start early, for success is not gained in a moment but by many years of persistent effort. It is true that some farmers have made small fortunes in a short time, but this usually through a phenomenal rise in land values. Those who have done so usually needed a lifetime in which to work. Through skill in management and by hard labor a comfortable living and moderate profits may be expected. Those persons who are turning to the farm with the idea of reaping large incomes are doomed to severe disappointment.

Those making the poorest incomes were 28 years of age when they started farming and were past 30 when they became owners. On the average the oldest men are making the least profits.

Many farmers with very little schooling succeed, but these same men would do better if they had the opportunity of further training. No one ever hears a farmer regret that he spent a part of his early life in school.

Farming is a business, the same as any other industry, and until our schools teach some of the fundamental principles governing profitable farming the farm boy is likely to seek work elsewhere. Considering that the farm boys of today will be the farmers of tomorrow too little attention is given to their training.

Many boys leave the farm because they see no future in it. Another important reason is the lack of profitable work at home. A moderate sized farm is necessary to give employment to the farmer and his sons. The small farm does not provide work, hence the boys must find employment elsewhere. Let them fully understand how farm profits and losses are made and there will be an incentive to remain.

First make our farms profitable and the question of keeping the boys there will solve itself.

Successful farming is an individual, economic problem. The farm is a combination of enterprises and their individual organization will determine in a large measure its profitability. Sufficient area and a proper organization of well-selected farm enterprises to permit the maximum use of men, horses and machinery are the essential characteristics of the most successful farms.

JACKSON MAN EATS A SQUARE MEAL AFTER WAITING 15 YEARS

A. W. Hobbs Ends Stomach Suffering Quickly with Mayr's Wonderful Remedy.

"A. W. Hobbs of 1801 East Main street, Jackson, Michigan, after some fifteen years of suffering from derangements of the stomach and digestive tract, took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. He got the surprise of his life—and swift relief. Mr. Hobbs has told his own story in a letter, part of which is given here:

"After taking three doses of your stomach remedy I am in perfect condition. I have not felt so well for fifteen years.

"I can eat anything now and it does not distress me. I hope three affected as I was will proceed to get your remedy at once."

The first dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy convinced sufferers of its merit. Many have found only one dose sufficient. Mr. Hobbs' experience is typical. Thousands have taken this remedy with remarkable benefit. It is known everywhere.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucus, acid, and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles, and many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations. Many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the wonderful success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. Be sure it's Mayr's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know of in your town—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects. For sale at all drug stores.

IT TAKES YEARS AND HARD WORK

Pulling Together is the Real Secret in Building Up the Modern City.

Everyone Should Put Their Shoulder to the Wheel and Push and Pull to Unison.

City building is an evolutionary instead of a revolutionary process. It takes years and hard work on the part of the citizens of any community to bring it up to the highest plane of modern development. There is a constant readjustment of conditions going on in the world that has to be taken cognizance of by those who are laboring in the interests of better conditions.

In the northern part of the lower peninsula the towns were built a long time in harmony with the lumber industry and now that the day of the woodsman has passed these towns are facing a readjustment along industrial lines that cannot be accomplished in a day or a year.

There is a process that must be gone through and its successful working out depends entirely upon the adaptability of the citizens themselves to accept the new standard and put them into actual working order. The same procedure was gone through by the cities in the southern part of the state and most of them came out of the changing process in far better condition than they were before the readjustment.

One of the things that hampers development is the fact that a majority of the people expect too much with too little effort. They are always talking in favor of better times, yet they themselves are not willing to get into harness and pull in the direction of their ideas. It takes united effort to bring results and when the people work harmoniously in one particular direction they are certain of success.

Progress cannot be obtained by finding fault with present conditions and when people get into this state of mind they will find upon investigation that they themselves are the ones who are to blame if business is not moving in progressive channels. When all the people in any community make up their minds that they want to get out of the old rut and put their shoulders to the wheel and push and pull in unison for the fulfillment of their desires the battle is readily won.

Getting together and sticking together is the great secret of community success and the sooner this lesson is learned and applied the sooner will the town in which this method of procedure is put into operation start forward on the upward path to prosperity and industrial success.

Little Child at Boyne City Thought Sugar-coated Pills Were Candy.

Little Hattie Smith, the three year-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Ed. Smith of Boyne City died Thursday morning a few minutes after having been discovered by her mother eating pills prescribed for rheumatism and containing a large amount of strychnine.

The pills had been placed away in the bureau, where it was supposed they were found by the child, mistaking for candy and eaten. More than a half box had been consumed before she was discovered.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal

BY

REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hired. Jefferson Locke insinuates himself into the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broken" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks.

American consul.

CHAPTER V.

Kirk Anthony is Surprised.

Kirk was delayed but an instant by the customs officials, then made his way out through a barlike structure to the cable office, where he wrote a message, only to have it refused.

"We don't send C. O. D.'s," the operator told him.

"Must have come in advance, eh?"

"Yes, sir."

"I left my gold purse on the dresser," Kirk said cheerfully. "I'll be back later." Then he wandered forth again, resolved to enlist the services of the American consul.

After some wandering he found the consul's house and knocked at the door, whereupon a high pitched, querulous voice from inside cried:

"Come in. Dammit, don't stand there hammering!"

Kirk entered to find a huge, globular man clad in soiled linen sprawled in a musty Morris chair and sipping a highball. The man's face and neck were of a purplish, apoplectic hue; he seemed to radiate heat waves like a hose burner.

"Is this Mr. Weeks?" Kirk inquired.

"That's me."

"My name is Anthony."

"Glad to meet you," wheezed the fat man, extending a limp, moist hand without rising. When Kirk had grasped it he felt like wiping his own palm.

"Have a seat." The speaker indicated a broken backed rocker cluttered with damp clothes, newspapers and books. "Just dump that rubbish on the floor; it don't matter where." Then he piped at the top of his thin, little voice: "Zeelab! Hey, Zeelab! Bring some more ice."

In answer to Mr. Weeks' shout a slatternly negress with dragging skirts and overrun shoes entered, carrying a wash bowl partly filled with ice. "Just get in, Mr. Anthony?"

"Yes, sir, on the Santa Cruz."

"Fine ship." Mr. Weeks rose ponderously and wiped out a glass with a bath towel.

"You'll like that," he predicted.

"There's one good thing we get in Colon and that's whisky." With a pained hand he presented the glass.

"I came in to ask a favor," Anthony announced. "I suppose every tourist does the same."

"That's a part of a consul's duty."

Mr. Weeks pointed, while his soft cheeks swelled with every exhalation.

"That's what I'm here for."

"I want to cable home to my father for money."

"A little piker came up the way down, eh?" He began to shake his derisively.

"I'm broke, sud, they won't take a collect message at the cable office. You see, I didn't know I was coming; some of my friends gave me a knock-out and shipped me off on the Santa Cruz. The wireless wasn't working, we didn't stop at Jamaica, so this is my first chance to get word home."

"What do you wish me to do?"

"Cable for me and see that I have a place to stop until I get an answer."

A look of distrust crept slowly into the consul's little eyes. He began to complain. "I don't know you, Mr.—" what's the name again? Anthony? I'm a poor man, and I've been an easy mark for every tropical tramp from Vera Cruz to Guayaquil. Your father may not be able to help you, and then I'll be holding the bag."

"I think you don't understand who he is. Did you ever hear of Darwin K. Anthony of Albany, N. Y.?"

Mr. Weeks' thick lids opened, this time to display a far different emotion.

"Certainly. Why didn't you say so?" he bubbled.

"I'm here to economize—"

he bubbled. "I'm here to economize—"

he had ever met. There were young fellows from the railroad office, merchants from the town, engineers from the BIG JOB, the proximity of which made itself felt like a mysterious presence. They were all men with work to do; there were no idlers; there was no class distinction. One topic of conversation prevailed.

Weeks did himself credit as a host. Both the food and the wine were well served, and the consul's half dozen guests soon became mellowed and friendly. When finally they arose some one proposed a game of draw poker and insisted upon Kirk's joining. He was about to refuse when Weeks drew him aside to say:

"Don't let the money question stand in your way, Kirk. You're my guest, and your I. O. U. is as good as a government bond, so go as far as you like."

A considerable portion of Anthony's time in college had been devoted to a course in draw poker. But he soon found that these men had forgotten more about the game than he could ever hope to learn at any university, and when the crowd broke up at midnight he stowed his name to a tab for $40.

Early the next day the following cablegram was left at the American consulate:

Weeks, Consul, Colon:
Anthony absent, returns Friday.
COPLEY.

"Copley is the governor's secretary," Kirk explained. "That means that I'll miss the Santa Cruz and have to wait another week."

"I'm delighted," the consul said heartily.

"Perhaps you could stake me to a ticket. I'll remit when I get to New York."

"My pay isn't due for a fortnight," Weeks explained after an instant's hesitation. "You see, I'm interested in so many ventures it keeps me—well, broke. Anyhow, you can't go until we have arranged an investment for your father."

Not wishing to embarrass his host, he refrained from pressing the matter and resigned himself as best he could to an extension of his exile. Meanwhile he decided to visit the canal.

But his plans were upset by the weather. On the following day it began to rain, and it continued to rain day and night thereafter until Colon became a sodden, dripping horror. The soil melted into a quagmire, the streets became sluices, the heavens closed down like a leaden pall, and the very air became saturated. It was hot and sticky.

It was too much for Kirk, and he deferred his trip over the "line," spending his time instead at the Wayfarers' club. In his daylight hours he listened to Weeks' unending dissertations upon the riches of the tropics. At night he played poker with such uniform bad luck that his opponents developed for him an increasing affection.

But all things have an end, and Friday morning broke clear and hot.

"We'll hear from the old gentleman today sure," he told Weeks at breakfast. "He's regularly himself. The train dispatchers set their watches by him." He then declared his determination to avail himself of the good weather and see something of the town. The prospect of squaring his account with the fawning fat man filled him with relief, and once away from the consulate he strolled until late in the afternoon. It was nearly dark when he strolled in to inquire:

"Well, did you get an answer?"

"Yes. Here's the message; read it yourself."

Kirk read as follows:

Weeks, Consul, Colon:

Your guest an impostor. Have no son. ANTHONY.

"Well, I'll be blanked!" he ejaculated. "This is a joke!"

Weeks was beginning to pant. "A joke, hey? I suppose it was a joke to impose on me?"

"Don't you believe I'm Kirk Anthony?"

"No, I do not. I just discovered today that your name is Jefferson Locke. Stein told me."

Anthony laughed lightly.

"Oh, laugh if you want to. You're a smooth article, but you happened to select the wrong millionaire for a father this time, and I'm going to give you a taste of our Spiggoty jalks."

"You can't arrest me. You offered to take me in."

"You can't get out of it that way," cried Weeks at the top of his little voice. "I've fed you for a week. I put you up at my club. That very suit of clothes you have on is mine."

"Well, don't burst a seam over the matter. My governor doesn't know the facts. I'll cable him myself this time."

"And live off me for another week, I suppose? Not if I know it! He says he has no son. Isn't that enough?"

"He doesn't understand. Will you lend me enough money to cable again?"

"More money? NO!" fairly screamed the other. "You get out of my house, Mr. Kirk Anthony, and don't you show yourself around here again. I'll keep the rest of your wardrobe."

THE time is approaching when a man plans to get up with the birds in the morning to make garden. In the "good old summer time" with the mercury standing at ninety in the shade the beautiful gardens of early spring dreams will most likely be a waste of luxuriant weeds and the man will feel little like heeding the call of the feathered songsters.

ONE lone member of the Board of Public Works made his appearance at the regular meeting scheduled for Monday night. How much longer will the people of Charlevoix stand for this useless appendage to the city council?

"MICHIGAN is facing a crisis," declares State Food Commissioner Helme. His ability to find a crisis at any time when others might step on it and not see it is just one of the things about Jim Helme we like.

CONGRESSMAN Lindquist has gone to a milk sanitarium to recuperate, though we have never heard of any one beating Joe Farndy by taking the milk cure.

PUBLIC opinion of the esteemed board of public works seems to be in the nature of a prolonged indignation meeting.

NATURAL decay is said to be killing the board of public works, but something quicker is desired by most people.

WILD geese are flying northward, which, of course, indicates that summer will arrive when it gets here.

Probate Court Matters.

February 6th—Anna Marvin of Wilson township adjudged insane and committed to Traverse City State Hospital.

February 9th—Archie J. Crago appointed administrator of the estate of Samuel D. Waldron, deceased.

February 11th—Addie See appointed administratrix of the estate of Ephraim See, deceased.

Wijherall-Brodie.

Mr. C. M. Wijherall of Boyne City and Miss Edith Brodie of East Jordan were united in marriage by Rev. Quinton Walker Wednesday, February 11. They will make their home in Boyne City.

No one expects a small grocery store which has only a few customers a day to be a great financial success. The total amount of business is insufficient to earn the operator a substantial income. Exactly the same is true with the small farm. The volume of business is limited by the area in crops and the capital invested. The small farm furnishes a home as well as much of the produce consumed by the family. If it were not for these factors the men on the small area would hardly be able to live.

The farmer may have sufficient area and grow the right kind of crops, yet not be successful, owing to the poor quality of his entire business. Poor crops that do not pay the cost of production and the feeding of these unproductive live stock are common causes of failure.

Diversity of the farm business—improper organization of a large farm limits its possibilities, just as area limits limit the small farm. Single crops or single live stock enterprises seldom utilize farm labor of its maximum. By having several crops there is not only better distribution of labor but the chances of total loss from crop failures are lessened. Fortunately, corn, oats and wheat utilize the farmer's time pretty thoroughly through the growing season.

Equally important in the selection of enterprises to permit the maximum use of labor is the consideration of the profitability of each. Dairy cows and cash crops may utilize all of the farmer's time, but in certain regions, possibly, dairy cattle under the best management could hardly be made to pay a profit. Markets and other conditions have to be carefully considered in choosing the enterprises which are to constitute the main sources of income. Fitting the right crop to the soil and selling it to the proper markets or feeding it to the right kind of live stock are important factors.

The essential characteristics of the more successful farms are a sufficient area and a proper organization of well-selected farm enterprises to permit the maximum use of men, horses and machinery.

A Complete Surprise.

Twenty-five friends of Miss Louise Walker called at the parsonage Tuesday evening to remind her that she had not reached the age where she ceased to have birthdays. To give weight to the many kind words and wishes that were expressed, a set of butter-spreaders and some pieces of cut glass were presented. All present claimed they had the time of their lives.

FINE PROGRAM WAS ENJOYED

W. C. T. U. Met Last Friday at Home of J. M. Saunders.

Mrs. C. T. Taggart Presides, Owing to Illness of Mrs. S. J. Alcox.

There was a good attendance at the meeting of the Women's Christian Temperance Union, which met at the home of Mrs. J. M. Saunders last Friday afternoon. Mrs. Taggart presided, owing to the continued illness of Mrs. Alcox. Mrs. Burdick read a message from Mrs. Alcox to the union expressing love and appreciation of a message sent by the union to her at the last meeting. It was suggested that this letter be placed on file.

The program in charge of Mrs. Burdick was an excellent one. Quotations from Miss Willard were read by those present and the readings were all excellent. Margaret and King Saunders played an instrumental duet, which was so well enjoyed they were recalled. King handles the violin nicely, and with Margaret at the piano, the two blended nicely. Miss Himes gave an interesting paper which we hope to have put into the columns of this paper for others to enjoy as well as those who attended the meeting.

Several subscriptions to the Union Signal, the national organ of the W. C. T. U., were secured and hopes are entertained more may conclude to take this splendid temperance paper. Wilma Stevenson and Margaret Saunders played a piano duet, which closed this excellent program.

Happiness.

"I've an idea," says Old Man Brown, "There hasn't much use in chasin' nroun' To find yer happiness, 'cause you won't Find joy in any such half-baked stunt. From the time you're born till you're on the shelf You've got to make happiness all yourself. One thing I'll tell ye, right first crack, What you give out you're goin' to get back. If you go round giving out gobs of gloom And lookin' like the inside of a tomb, And being pessimistic as you go, You're going to get back a lot of woe. If you go around passin' a word of cheer, And makin' folks glad that they are here, Contentment is bound ter come to you. And stick to you always jes' like glue. Happiness ain't in no certain place, It ain't in chasin' no pettler face. It ain't to be caught by runnin' around And coverin' a knob-durned lot of ground. Fer happiness is just the same as self— It ain't no good 'less you make it yourself. It's something no mortal man kin buy No matter how hard he roys search and try. For happiness 'tain't on use in room, You're more apt to find it right to home."

AN ESKIMO DINNER

It Was Not Very Dainty, but It Was a Satisfying Feast.

SEAL MEAT AND BLOOD SOUP.

The First Course Was Served Out of Hand, and the Second in Musk Ox Horn Drinking Cups—The Hospitality Extended to Explorer Stefansson.

An interesting description of the hospitality of Eskimos is given by Vilhjalm Stefansson in his paper, "My Quest in the Arctic," in Harper's Magazine. At one stage of his adventures the writer found himself among Eskimos who had never before seen white people. He says:

"Like our distant ancestors, no doubt, these people fear most of all things the evil spirits that are likely to appear to them at any time in any guise, and next to that they fear strangers. Our first greeting had been a bit doubtful and dramatic through our being mistaken for spirits, but now they had test of us and talked with us and knew we were but common men. Strangers we were. It is true, but we were only three among forty of them and were therefore not to be feared. Besides, they told us they knew we could harbor no guile from the freedom and frankness with which we came among them; for, they said, a man who plots treachery never turns his back to those whom he intends to stab from behind."

"Before the house which they immediately built for us was quite ready for our occupancy children came running from the village to announce that their mothers had dinner ready. The houses were so small that it was not convenient to invite all three of us into the same one to eat; besides, it was not etiquette to do so, as we now know. Each of us was therefore taken to a different place. My host was the seal hunter whom we had first approached on the ice. His house would, he said, be a fitting one in which to offer me my first meal among them. For his wife had been born farther west on the mainland coast than any one else in their village, and it was even said that her ancestors had not belonged originally to their people, but were immigrants from the westward. She would therefore like to ask me questions."

"It turned out, however, that his wife was not a talkative person, but motherly, kindly and hospitable, like all her countrywomen. Her first questions were not of the land from which I came, but of my foregear. Weren't my feet just a little damp, and might she not put my boots off for me and dry them over the lamp? She had not boiled seal meat for me, but she did not boiled seal fat, for she did not know whether I preferred the blubber boiled or raw. They always eat it in small pieces and ate it raw themselves, but the pot still hung over the lamp, and anything she put into it would be cooked in a moment."

"When I told her that my tastes quite coincided with theirs, as in fact they did, she was delighted. People were much alike then, after all, though they came from a great distance. She would accordingly treat me exactly as if I were one of their own people come to visit them from afar."

"When we had entered the house the boiled pieces of seal meat had already been taken out of the pot and lay steaming on a sideboard. On being assured that my tastes in food were not likely to differ from theirs, my hostess picked out for me the lower joint of a seal's foreleg, squeezed it firmly between her hands to make sure nothing should later drip from it, and handed it to me, along with her own esker-bladed knife. The next most desirable piece was skillfully squeezed and handed to her husband, and others in turn to the rest of the family."

"As we ate we sat on the front edge of the bed platform, holding each his piece of meat in the left hand and the knife in the right. This was my first experience with a knife of walrus copper. I found it more than sharp, enough and very serviceable."

"Our meal was of two courses—the first meat; the second, soup. The soup is made by pouring cold seal blood into the boiling broth immediately after the cooked meat has been taken out of the pot and stirring briskly until the whole comes nearly but never quite to a boil. This makes a soup of a thickness comparable to our English pea soup, but if the pot be allowed to come to a boil the blood will coagulate and settle in the bottom. When the soup is a few degrees from boiling the lamp above which the pot is swung is extinguished and a few handfuls of snow are stirred into the soup to bring it to a temperature at which it can be freely drunk. By means of a small dipper the housewife then fills the large musk ox horn drinking cups and assigns one to each person. If the number of cups is short two or more persons may share the contents of one cup or a cup may be refilled when one is through with it and passed to another."

"After I had eaten my fill of fresh seal meat and drank two pint cupsful of blood soup my host and I moved further back on the bed platform, where we could sit comfortably, and had up mental bundles of soft caribou skins, while we talked of various things."

WANT BETTER SERVICE

Committee of Twenty-One to Make Effort to Get Better Phone Service in Charlevoix.

The meeting of the Committee of Twenty-One held at the council chambers, Monday afternoon, was well attended and considerable business was transacted.

W. J. Rachow was chosen chairman and after the reading of the minutes of the last meeting reports were called for from the various committees.

J. S. Baker reported work on the new Charlevoix booklet as progressing finely and submitted a report on its cost and the plans of the committee as to raising money for the printing.

Other committees made their reports and upon motion of one of the members it was decided that the Committee of Twenty-One present a petition signed by as many of the users of the Michigan State Telephone as was possible to obtain protesting against the poor service Charlevoix has had for the past two years and the high toll rate charged. The subject was freely discussed by those present and the universal sentiment was that the service we have now is the poorest the city has had in years, regardless of a recent raise in phone rentals.

A committee was also appointed to take charge of a three-day produce exhibition to take place some time in the fall along the same lines as has been put on by the retail merchants.

APPRECIATE GIFT

Historical Society Express Thanks for Portrait of Father, Charlevoix.

On January 23rd, 1914, Mr. Brayton Saltonstall read a paper before the Historical Society upon the subject "Father Charlevoix" and on that evening presented to the society a splendid enlarged portrait of the distinguished missionary and explorer.

The Historical Society wishes to express to Mr. Saltonstall its appreciation of this valuable gift, supplemented as it is by a paper which represents deep study and extensive historical research.

This portrait has been hung in the Public Library of the City of Charlevoix, where it may be seen, not only by the members of the society, but by the entire community. It is believed that this picture will serve as a means of inspiration, of courage, conviction and perseverance to the people of our community.

It is ordered at this regular meeting of the Historical Society, February 6th, 1914, that this expression of appreciation be spread upon the minutes of the meeting and that a copy of this resolution, signed by the president and secretary of the society, be given to Mr. Saltonstall, and to the local press for publication.

"You get out of my house!"

a fast of twenty-four hours would seriously weaken a man, and, rather than make the experiment, he again called up the Tivoli, rejoicing anew in the fact that there was no toll on fatman messages. But again he was disappointed. This time he was told that the Cortlands were doubtless spending the night out of town with friends.

CHAPTER VI. The Reward of Merit.

Soon after Kirk's second return to the park the concert ended, the crowd melted away, and he found himself occupying a bench, with a negro of about the same age as himself. For perhaps an hour the two sat there, harkening to the dying noises of the city; then Kirk, unable to endure the monotonous longer, turned sharply on his companion and said:

"Why don't you go home?"
"Oh, I can't go home."
Kirk reflected that he had found out only the right place, but also fitting company for his vigil.

"What does a person do in that case?" he asked.
"Oh, he goes to work, sir?"
"For the night, I mean. Are you going to stay here until morning?"
"Yes, sir. If the policeman will admit of it."

The fellow's dialect was so strange that Kirk inquired: "Where did you come from?"
"Jamaica, sir. I was born on the north coast of the island, sir."

"Did you just arrive here?"
"Oh, I don't. I have been a liver here for two years. Sometimes I labor on the docks, again in the office. Last week I lost my position, and today my room is vacant. Landladies is bad fellows, sir, very common."

"Well, it seems to me in the same boat this beautiful evening. I have no place to sleep, either."
"Oh, that me true, morn."

"I am chatting you true. I'm an outcast of fortune like yourself."
"Such talk! You make I laugh this house. Bless God, you, I appear like a gentleman."

"I trust this little experience will not permanently affect my social standing. By the way, what is your name?"
"H'Allan."

"H'Allan?"
"No, sir—H'Allan."
"Is that your first or last name?"
"Both, sir—H'Allan H'Allan."

"Mr. Allan Allan," said Kirk gravely. "Now, speaking as one gentleman to another, do you happen to know where we can get a hand-out?"
"And out?" inquired the puzzled negro.

"Yes; a lunch. Can't you lead me to a banana vine or a breadfruit bakery? I'm starving. I must get something into my stomach—it's as flat as a wet envelope."

The Jamaican rose, saying: "Step this way, please. I know this place where a very good female is. Perhaps she will make us a present."

"How far is it?"
"Oh, not too far," Allan replied optimistically, and Kirk hopefully followed him.

But at the opposite side of the square they were halted by a sudden commotion which drove all thoughts of food out of their minds. From a building across the street issued a huge call, upon which an indescribable confusion broke forth. A voice in authority shouted orders, each of which was the signal for another huge call. Through the wide open doors the Panamanians could be heard, scurrying around a hose cart, apparently in search of clothes.

"Oh, look, boss!" Allan cried quickly. "There must be a 'ragration.'"
"It's a Spigoty hose company, as I live. Come on!"

Already a glare could be seen above the crowded portion of the city, and the two set off in that direction at a run, leaving the huge sounding in the rear and the 'ragration' still wrestling with their uniforms. They had nearly reached the fire when around a corner bark of them, with frightful speed and clangor, came a modern automobile fire truck, clanging to which was a swarm of little brown men in red shirts and helmets. Without a pause the Yankee machine whizzed on up the street, its gong clanging, its occupants holding on for dear life, the peaceful inhabitants of Colon fleeing from its path.

Kirk and his guide felt in behind and jogged to the scene of the commotion.

A three storied building was already half gutted. Out of its windows poured long, fiery tongues. The structure snuffed and volleyed a chorus to the silent monotony of destruction. The street was littered with the household belongings of the neighborhood. On all sides was a belated which the arrival of the firemen only augmented.

The fire captains shouted orders to the hangers, the hangers blew feebly upon their horns, the companies deployed in obedience to the hangers. Then everybody waited for further directions.

Again the trumpet sounded, whereupon each man began to interfere with his neighbor. A series of quarrels arose as couplings were made or broken. Then, after an interminable delay, water began to flow as if by a miracle; but, except in rare instances, it failed to reach the flames. A ladder truck, drawn by another excited company, now rumbled upon the scene, its arched adding to the general disorder. Meanwhile the steady trade wind fanned the blaze to ever growing proportions.

"Why the devil don't they get closer?" Kirk inquired of his Jamaican companion.

"Oh, I don't know, sir. It's too hot, sir, greatly too hot! It would take a stout heart to do such a thing."

"Nonsense! They'll never put it out this way. Hey!" Kirk attracted the attention of a nearby nigger.

"Walk up to it. It won't bite you. But the valiant fire-fighter held stubbornly to his post, while the stream he directed continued to describe a graceful curve and spatter upon the sidewalk in front of the burning building.

"You're spilling that old woman's bed," Anthony warned him, at which a policeman with drawn club forced him back as if resentful of criticism.

For perhaps ten minutes there was no further change in the situation. Then a great shout arose as it was seen that the roof of an adjoining building had burst into flame. At this the firemen rushed down the street, dragging a line of hose and drenching the onlookers. But, despite their hurry, they halted too soon, and their stream just failed to reach the blazing roof. By now the heat had grown really intense, and the more hardy heroes in the vanguard retreated to less trying positions. The voice of the crowd had risen to a roar rivaling that of the flames.

Kirk pointed to the nearest fireman. "If he'd get up under that wall he could save the roof and be out of the heat. I can't stand this. Let's give him a hand, Allan."

"Here! Help me get a kink in this hose. There! Now you hold it until you feel me pull." Kirk forced his way out through the crowd to find the fireman holding the nozzle, from which a feeble stream was dribbling, and mechanically directing it at the fire.

Kirk held hold of the nozzle and, with a heave, dragged it along with his right hand, guarded ten feet forward. But there had been no huge blown order for this, and the uniformed man pulled backward with all his might, chattering at Kirk in Spanish.

"Well, then, let go," Anthony shook the Panamanian loose, then ran forward across the street until he brought up at the end of the street and felt the hose behind him writhe and swell as Allan released his hold. The next instant the negro was at his side, and the two found themselves half tilted by the heat that rolled out upon them. But the newly ignited roof was within range, and the stream they played upon it made the shingles fly.

The fireman they had despoiled began to drag at the hose from a safe distance, but when Kirk made as if to turn the nozzle upon him he accompanied away amid the jeers of the crowd. A few moments later the American felt a hand upon his arm and saw an angry policeman who was evidently ordering him back. Behind him stood the excited nozzleman with two companions.

"The says you should return the hose where you found it," Allan translated. "Leave us alone," Kirk replied. "You fellows help the others. We'll attend to this." With rapid words and gesticulations followed, in the midst of which a dapper young man in a uniform somewhat more impressive than the others dashed up, flung himself upon Anthony and ordered him to wrench the hose from his hands.

Meanwhile he uttered epithets in broken English which the other had no difficulty in understanding. Kirk promptly turned the nozzle upon him and the full force of a potent water pressure struck him squarely in the stomach, doubling him up like the kink of a mule. Down the newcomer went, their half rolled, half slid across the street as the stream continued to play upon him.

"I guess they'll keep away now," laughed Kirk, as he turned back to his self appointed task.

But an instant later a half dozen policemen advanced in a businesslike manner, and their leader announced, "Come, you are under arrest!"

"What's that for?" "We're doing a lot of good here."

"Come, quick!" "Oh, I don't know, sir. It's too hot, sir, greatly too hot! It would take a stout heart to do such a thing."

"Nonsense! They'll never put it out this way. Hey!" Kirk attracted the attention of a nearby nigger.

upon a wooden platform that ran along the wall, evidently serving as a bed. Near him Allan was huddled, his black face distorted with pain and ashen with apprehension.

"Where are we?" queried Anthony as he took in the surroundings.

"This is the prison, sir." "Gee! I'm sick," Kirk lay back upon the platform and closed his eyes. "Did they hurt you much?"

"Oh, yes. Very considerably." "Sorry I got you into it, Allan. I never thought they'd be so cranky." Again he groaned. "I want a drink."

"Let me get it. These Spigoties will not give it to you."

Allan went to the door and called to the guard. An instant later he returned with a tin cup.

"I guess they knocked me out," Kirk said dazedly. "I never was hit like that before—and jelled! Say! We must get out of here. Call the chief of the man in charge, will you? I can't speak the language."

"Please, sir, if you'll hangar them they'll beat us again."

"But! Not here?" "Oh, yes. They might kill us."

"They wouldn't do that!" "A while man they killed last night, and several of my people have passed away in this prison. Nobody can't see nothing. Nobody knows what happens here."

"Oh, well, they wouldn't dare touch me—I'm an American citizen. I'll notify the consul."

Heeded at the mere suggestion, Kirk staggered to the door and shouted lustily. A sergeant appeared with the command to be quiet.

"Let me out of here!" loudly demanded the prisoner. "I want the chief, or the alderman, or somebody in charge. I want to know what I'm looked for. I want to telephone—telephone, don't you understand—and arrange with Quick, now."

But the officer merely frowned at him, obviously threatening a resort to force if this outburst did not cease at once. Then he went away. An hour passed, and he did not return. Then another hour followed, and Anthony, who had now begun to feel the effect of his dripping more keenly, renewed his clamor, with the result that a half dozen policemen appeared. From their demeanor it looked as though they were really bent upon his life, but Kirk soon saw that an official had come in answer to his call. He felt less reassured when he perceived that the person in uniform who now stepped forward was the same upon whom he had turned the hose earlier in the evening.

[To be continued next week]

RATIONS FOR THE FOWLS.

Any fairly intelligent person may improvise a ration containing all the requisites, provided he has read and thought the matter over enough to understand the different properties of the different grains. Corn is usually the most abundant grain upon the farm, and a great many fall into the error of believing that if fed in proper quantities it will promote growth and development in the young fowls and also cause the hens to lay well.

Experiments and tests have proved, however, that corn alone is one of the poorest grains with which to accomplish the above named results. The reason for this is that corn is a fattening food, and hens allowed free access to it will lay on a surplus of fat, instead of laying eggs.

INSECTS IN STORED GRAIN.

Carbon Bisulphide Most Effective Weapon in Fighting Pests.

The insects most destructive to stored grain are the grain weevils and grain moths. These insects infest such farm products as corn, milo maize, Kaffir corn, millet, wheat, barley, rye, peas, beans, etc. The life history of the grain moth and the grain weevil is a very interesting study. Just before the harvest begins the adult insect punctures the unharvested grain while standing in the field and deposits her eggs, which remain dormant until the grain is cured, harvested and stored. Soon after storing the eggs hatch into little white legless grubs or larvae, which feed on the kernel of the grain.

It is in this stage that the insect does its deadly work, becoming full grown in a few weeks, later changing into a pupa and finally emerging as an imago or adult.

One of the best insecticides recommended for the destruction of insect life of this kind is carbon bisulphide. This compound may be secured from the local druggist at a cost of 25 to 30 cents per pound. It is a colorless, volatile oil, heavier than water, possessing a characteristic odor and having highly inflammable properties. So in using caution must be taken that no fire in any form comes near it.

From one and one-half to two pounds of carbon bisulphide is sufficient to fumigate one ton of grain. It is necessary to have the granary as nearly airtight as possible. Place in the center of the grain heap a small utensil containing oil rags, cotton or tow. Calculate the amount of grain in the bin, and determine the number of pounds of carbon bisulphide necessary to use in fumigation. Measure the chemical compound and pour into the utensil and cover the entire mass of grain and utensil with canvas. A gas will be given off which is poisonous and heavier than air. The fumes take a downward course and destroy the insects.

If the first application is not sufficient repeat at intervals of six weeks until no form of insect life is found. In using carbon bisulphide the milling qualities, taste and odor of the grain are not affected, and the germinating power of seed is decreased very little. National Stockman and Farmer.

MITE PROOF ROOSTS.

Simple Device That Saves Trouble and Expense.

Any one who has tried to clean out the mites from roosts that are built into the henhouse will appreciate the simple plan given below. I make my sets of roosts six feet long, two feet wide and two feet high, with three 2 by 2 inch roosts, says a writer in the Farm and Fireside.

The uprights are set in quart cans of water with a half inch of kerosene on top. Mites cannot get on this roost as they are carried there by the hens, and it can be easily taken through any door and cleaned.

Dashorn the Calf.

Horns have no place on the farm. They are not wanted on the dairy cow now, as they are a dangerous appendage, and the time has gone by when the cow needs them as a defense against the attacks of wild animals. The fact is they are a nuisance, and the best way to get rid of them is to kill the embryo horn in the early life of the calf.

For some years I have used caustic potash to prevent the growth of horns on my calves, says a writer in the Southern Cultivator. The operation is a simple one and can be done by any careful person. Clip off the hair around the little horn from a spot about as large as a quarter of a dollar; then wrap a stick of caustic potash in a piece of paper, exposing the tip of one end. This caution is to prevent burning the fingers. Apply the caustic to the horn—rubbing it slightly until it begins to look red, then grease around the horn to prevent the caustic from spreading and burning where not needed. For this reason care should be taken not to get much water on the horn for it burns wherever it runs.

How to Keep a Spade Bright.

The following suggestion is taken from the Farm and Fireside: If the bird man carelessly puts the spade away without cleaning it you may have a hard time cleaning it next time you go out to dig. But if you have been careful to put the clinders in a nice pile not more than one minute will be required to clean the spade.

Simply dig in the clinders for a minute or so, shoveling them about as you do gravel and cement when mixing concrete, and the job is done. The clinders should be wet, as they are sure to be if exposed to the weather.

We learned this while shoveling clinders into a posthole when building fence. It works like a charm.

A Record Spring Test.

During the course of some recent tests of locomotive spring steel made of vanadium steel a fiber strength of 256,000 pounds per square inch as the elastic limit was developed. This, as far as our knowledge goes, constitutes a record for locomotive spring steel, says the Scientific American. Carbon steel tempered springs showed an elastic limit of 101,000 pounds; chrome nickel, spring tempered springs an elastic limit of 184,500 pounds, and the chrome vanadium oil tempered springs showed a limit of 256,000 pounds.

Hand Washing Pad.

Curled hair, such as is used in upholstering the furr grades of furniture, is much better than a brush for removing grease and grime from the hands. It penetrates the crevices of the knuckles and nails and does not shroud the skin at all. To use simply take a large handful of the hair, apply soap and wet it, then rub over the hands. It will take several days before the hair assumes the form that gives the best results, but once in shape it will last indefinitely.

General van Stauben.

The Revolutionary General Baron von Stauben joined the patriot army in its bitter plight at Valley Forge and set about the discipline which transformed raw and enthusiastic levies into trained veterans. Of his manual of military regulations it is recorded that he wrote it in poor German, then translated it into poor French, further translation carried it into good English, and eventually it was put into good English and then was entirely incomprehensible to the Baron. After the war he retired to his land grant near Ulm, and seven years later congress granted him a pension of $2,400. He died at Staubenville Nov. 25, 1795.

Missed a Chance.

"But, Tommy," said his mother, "you asked for two cakes and I gave them to you. Aren't you satisfied?" "No, I ain't," growled Tommy. "You was so easy I'm k-k-k-k myself now 'cause I didn't ask for four."

WHEN A MAN'S MARRIED

THAT REMINDS ME—

How to Detect the Alum Baking Powder

"Which are the alum baking powders; how can I avoid them unless they are named?" asks a housekeeper.

Here is one way: take the can of a low-priced powder in your hand and read the ingredient clause upon the back label. The law requires that if the powder contains alum that fact must be there stated. If you find one of the ingredients named alum, or sulphate of aluminum, you have found an alum baking powder.

There is another and a better way. You don't have to know the names of the alum powders. Use Royal Baking Powder only; that assures you a cream of tartar powder, and the purest and most healthful baking powder beyond question.

Grange Column

Ironton Grange.

Ironton Grange, No. 707 met in regular session February 10, with all officers present excepting those of Steward and Lecturer.

During the regular order of business a motion was made and carried that Brother Joe Mitchell be reinstated.

Lecturer's program consisted of a song by grange, readings and stories.

Grange was closed in regular form, with 20 members and two visitors present, to meet again in two weeks.

There will be a dance at the grange hall Friday evening, February 20.

Marion Center Grange.

Marion Center Grange, No. 936, held their regular meeting on Wednesday evening, February 11th. On account of the cold weather the attendance was unusually small. After the regular order of business and a good program the degree team did practice work.

Friday evening 25 members from Marion Center went to Ellsworth Grange. The degree team initiated eight candidates in the third and fourth degrees, after which all adjourned to the dining room, where a sumptuous repast was spread, and all joined in pronouncing it the best time ever. Ellsworth is to be congratulated on the efficient manner in which the lecturer arranges the program and each member cheerfully does the task assigned.

Next regular meeting will be held Friday evening, February 27, when a good attendance is desired.

Wilson Grange.

Wilson Grange No. 719, met in regular session Saturday, February 14, with an attendance of 17 members and visitors.

The meeting was called to order by Worthy Master Robert Shepard and during the business session he appointed the following committees:

Executive—J. M. Warden, Thos. Shepard, Frank Smith.
Finance—Curtis Brace, George Jaques, Prudence Smith.

Under suggestions for the good of the Order the members voted to have a contest for gaining new members and a literary contest in connection. Fae Warden, Frank Smith were chosen as captains. The losing side will furnish a treat for the crowd.

The Lecturer's program consisted of readings, recitations, songs and several quotations from Lincoln. The dance committee announced a dance for Saturday, February 21. Grange closed in form to meet in two weeks.

Peninsular Grange.

Peninsular Grange held its regular meeting at the grange hall February 11th, with the worthy master in the chair. Roll call showed each officer present. Twenty-one members were present and three applications were received for membership.

After recess the grange gave the ritualistic work of the first and second degrees to thirteen candidates. At the next meeting they will receive the third and fourth degrees. There will also be an oyster supper served at the close of the meeting, Friday evening, February 20, is the date set for the next dancing party at the hall.

The next regular meeting will be held February 26 at 2 o'clock p.m. Do not forget the dates. Visitors are always welcome.

Bay Shore Grange.

The regular meeting of Bay Shore Grange was held Friday evening, February 13th, with Worthy Master Worth in the chair. The election of officers resulted as follows:

Worthy Master—Ray Kircher.
Overseer—Arthur Zipp.
Lecturer—Mrs. T. W. Cupping.
Steward—Wolfe Glaser.
Assistant Steward—Wm. Long.
Chaplain—Mrs. F. Worth.
Treasurer—Mrs. F. Van Schoick.
Secretary—Dewey Jones.
Gatekeeper—Easper Bailey.
Ceres—Helen Dodge.
Pomona—Kittie Zipp.
Flora—Marion Worth.
Lady Assistant Steward—Beale Tittonson.

In order to bring in old and new members, a red and blue contest was arranged, with E. Burch as captain of the red side and A. Zipp captain of the blue.

The contest will close with the first meeting in April, when the winning side will be given a feast by the losers. A great deal of enthusiasm was shown by the members who were present, and all who were not in attendance should make a special effort to come to the next meeting, which is to be held February 27th. The installation of officers occurs next meeting.

The lecturer's hour was spent in singing songs and later a potluck supper was enjoyed by all.

Grange closed in due form, with eighteen members and two visitors present.

TEN GRANGES REPRESENTED

At Meeting of Pomona Grange Held at Wilson Last Week.

Committees Appointed to Arrange for Grange Rallies During the Coming Season.

Charlevoix Pomona Grange met with Wilson Grange on February 12th with a good attendance, there being about ten granges represented. As the crowd was late in getting there on account of the weather, practically nothing was done before dinner.

In the afternoon, all of the business of the meeting was done, as the evening session was open to the public.

John Knudsen gave a short but interesting report of the State Grange session held in Flint. Mrs. E. R. Clark gave a very interesting paper entitled "The Grange as a Social Center." One candidate was obligated and instructed in the mysteries of the fifth degree, after which a committee consisting of E. R. Clark, William Meara and E. S. Stroud was appointed to arrange for three one-day grange rallies to be held some time in the spring.

It is expected that State Master J. C. Keitcham of Hastings will give an address on grange work at each of these meetings.

In the evening the main part of the program was taken over by the teachers from the schools of Boyne City. Miss Anne Callow, domestic science teacher, gave a very instructive paper on "Handwork for Girls in the Rural Schools," illustrated by specimens of the work of the different grades in the Boyne City schools. Miss Carr, manual training teacher, gave a paper on "Handwork for Boys in the Rural Schools" and Mr. Wheaton a talk on "What Has Been Accomplished in One Half Year of Study in the Agricultural Course in Boyne City High School."

The next meeting of Charlevoix Pomona Grange will be held on Thursday, April 9th, with Ironton Grange.

FORCE OF DYNAMITE.

Explosive Exerts Energy in All Directions With Equal Power.

Dynamite does not exert its force downward with more vitality than in any other direction. The popular belief notwithstanding. The average school-boy and a host of grownups are possessed of the conviction that dynamite tends to wreck that beneath it and leave objects to the side or above virtually intact. This popular belief is based, no doubt, upon the fact that if a stick of dynamite is laid upon a rock and discharged it will shatter the stone, whereas a heavy charge of gunpowder has virtually no effect. This striking difference admits of an easy explanation in theory. General Abbott fired charges of dynamite under water without an upright iron plug carrying mesuring devices on its sides. He found that the force of the explosion was substantially the same in all directions.

Gunpowder consists of carbon and sulphur ground fine and intimately mixed with some other substance (such as nitrate of potash), capable of yielding enough oxygen to burn both the carbon and the sulphur. It is the exceedingly rapid burning of what are known as its particles that causes the explosion.

Dynamite differs from powder in that powder can be burned; dynamite either can be burned or detonated. Dynamite burns rapidly when ignited by flame, but it does not actually explode under these circumstances so long as certain conditions are fulfilled. A certain kind of jar or shock, such as that produced by a proper fulminate cap, will explode dynamite.

An explosion never really is instantaneous. When either powder or dynamite are exploded they produce an enormous amount of gas which rushes rapidly from the explosive center. Dynamite, having the greater force, the gases naturally exert a powerful influence upon any object upon which they rest.

Were dynamite and powder exploded under the same conditions there would be a marked difference in the effects. In cases of dynamite explosions the gases may be contained in a space not one-thousandth part as large as that of the powder, and therefore the force is correspondingly greater.

Political Announcement.

To the Republican Electors of the First Ward:

While the report has generally been spread that the name of O. E. Wilbur would be withdrawn for the office of alderman, we wish to inform the voters of this ward that this report is untrue and that he will be in the race to the finish. It is believed by his many friends that there is no man in this ward who is better qualified to fill this office than Mr. Wilbur. The fact of his being the representative of this ward from 1900 to 1909, and during the following year mayor of the city, would naturally acquaint him with the business of the city and make him a man with whom the taxpayers could safely entrust the handling of their affairs. During a majority of this time he was chairman of the finance committee, thus bringing him in close touch with the affairs of the city. His friends solicit the support of the Republican voters of the first ward in his candidacy for the office of alderman and promise that if elected he will give the very best that is in him to the duties of the office.—Advertisement—71f

To Clean the Surface of a Whetstone.

The uncovered whetstone soon takes on a gloss from dust particles that collect on it. This smooth, glossy surface can be easily removed by applying powdered pumice to the stone just before using it. This treatment removes the grit, and the knife blade will be polished. At the same time it is quickly ground to a good edge. The powder can be kept ready for use in a face powder can with a shaker top.

EXPERIENCES ON MY JOURNEY 50 YEARS AGO

Our next stopping place was White Lake, where we hoped to get lunch. When we arrived there the natives were anxious to learn where we were going and, as it happened, the man I was talking to proved to be a brother of Hon. J. S. Dixon of Charlevoix, called at that time Pine River. The next town en route was Pentwater, but we did not reach there that night, so we stopped at the home of a settler on the road. The country was but thinly settled at the time, but our hosts had been there for several years. We reached Pentwater the following evening and stopped at a hotel. Everyone we met wanted to know who we were, where we came from and also where we were going. We answered these questions, and many others regarding Wisconsin and the county we came from. One man asked me if I was acquainted with a lady who lived at my former home by the name of "Dilly" Baldwin. I replied that I did, also that we had been schoolmates and I was well acquainted with the entire family, which consisted of ten fine-looking girls, and further that my brother F. had married the eldest of the family. We had a good visit after this and he told me he had intended to make "Dilly," whose real name was Ordein, his bride, but was not quite ready just then. He said he wanted to be a little better fixed financially, had invented a little money in hides which in a short time would be shipped to Chicago. Later he loaded several hundred dollars worth of hides on a schooner and started for market, but a bad storm overtook them and hides, ship and all went to the bottom of the lake. So before he recovered from this loss another good-looking man came along and won the affections of "Dilly." This ended our visit.

While at Pentwater I met Hon. John S. Dixon of Pine River (now Charlevoix the Beautiful). He was on his way home and tried to persuade us to come to Charlevoix county, where there were excellent opportunities which would soon be taken up. But you all know the influence of people with whom you are well acquainted, especially the ladies, and the final decision was not to separate and to locate close to each other, as the chances were we would find no better land upon which to settle than in what is now Banks county, Antrim county.

It was then decided that one of the company and myself should take the stage and go ahead of the ox team to see what the country was like towards Ludington. We covered this territory but did not find any land which we considered the place to locate.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

CONCRETE FLOORS FOR DAIRY BARN

Floors of This Kind Pay for Themselves
Many Times Over.

MAKES BARN MORE SANITARY

Method So Simple Any Man Can Do His Own Work.

Plans Given Below Adaptable to Both Old and New Barns—Means Better Milk and Better Prices.

In the voluntary movement of farmers for better milk at better prices the first step toward improvement is the making of the barn more sanitary by laying concrete floors. The method is so simple that any man can do his own work. The cost is so small and the cash returns are so great that the floors soon pay for themselves in preventing the breeding of flies, in the saving of liquid manure, in the reduction of labor and in the increased flow and improved quality of milk. The plan described below is for a barn in which the two rows of cows stand heads toward each other, with a driveway between. It is easily modified to the opposite arrangement. Likewise the method is adaptable to both old and new barns.

For average conditions lay out the stalls on three foot six inch centers and four feet six inches in length from six inch manger wall to drop gutter. The manger is two feet six inches wide at the top and two feet at the bottom, with one face sloping up to the feed alley floor. The depth is seven inches, measured from the stallion setting, and eight inches from the alley floor. The feed alley is four feet six inches wide. The drop gutter has a width of eighteen inches. It is eight inches deep gauged from the stall floor, which is two inches higher than the eight foot driveway. For establishing grade lines a carpenter spirit level (or water level) and a chalk line are very helpful.

To prevent the possibility of floor settling, remove all manure before grading the surface of the earthen floor. Carefully tamp back the dirt around the water pipes and the drains which carry waste water and liquid manure to the water-tight concrete manure pit. Do all filling as long as possible before building the concrete floor. As a foundation for the stall floors proper, place a six inch thickness of coarse broken stone or screened gravel to keep the floor from direct contact with the ground. Since the stall floors are of prime importance it is well to make them first. During this operation the unpaved driveway and alleys can be used as working space. Then finish in order named the feed alleys, the driveways, the mangers and the gutters.

For the plan given, six feet six inches from the center line of the driveway at the edge (and to line and grade) a two by twelve inch plank to serve as a form for the stall floor at the gutter. Likewise set a similar board six feet distant to mold the six inch manger wall and stallion setting. Be sure to mind that the stall floor has a slope of one inch toward the gutter and that the stallion setting rises seven inches above the stall floor. Drainage for gutters and mangers will be provided by sloping their concrete bottoms.

Proportion the concrete one bag of Portland cement to two and one-half cubic feet of sand and five cubic feet of crushed rock or one bag of cement to five cubic feet of clean pit gravel. At one operation lay the full six inch thickness of the stall floor and finish three stalls the same as one section of sidewalk. No surfacing mortar is needed. For setting patented stall divisions follow the manufacturer's directions. For home-made divisions make mortises by tamping the concrete around greased tapering wooden cores, which are withdrawn as soon as the concrete attains. A wooden float is best for finishing the floor. A steel trowel yields a surface entirely too smooth and such a finish should always be roughened by brushing with a stable broom.

While the concrete of the three stalls is still soft mold the stallion setting (six inches thick) upon it. As forms use the projecting seven inch height of the two by twelve piece already in place and two one by six inch boards tacked together so as to provide another seven inch height and a bearing plate to rest on the green concrete. These forms may be made fish-shaped for the swinging stallion. Fill the forms with mushy wet-concrete, trowel the surface, round the corners and set the stallion holders. Repeat the operation until all the stall floors are completed. Feed alleys and driveways are easily built; they are merely rough-finished sidewalks. Place the waste water outlets in the mangers at intervals of twenty-eight feet and give the bottom a slope of one inch toward each outlet for a distance of fourteen feet on each side of it. The drop gutters may be drained in like manner or can be sloped slightly in one direction for their full length. For ease in cleaning round all angles and corners—except at the bottom of drop gutters—by applying a one to two cement-and mortar immediately after removing the forms.

Regardless of the kind of floor, bedding of straw or litter is an absolute necessity. It keeps the cow clean and absorbs the valuable liquid manure. If the help cannot be depended on to bed the cows properly it is advisable to use a removable wooden grating or platform. Cork bricks also give satisfactory results, but are somewhat expensive. They are set in a two inch depression in the floor and are held in position on all sides by the concrete acting as a curb.

With the proportions and thickness given above four bags—one barrel—of cement, ten cubic feet of sand—say three-eighths cubic yard—and twenty cubic feet of crushed rock—about three-quarters cubic yard—will lay 45 to 50 square feet of floor. The usual cost of this quantity of material alone is $2.50. The floor soon pays for itself many times over.—B. F. Hunt in Michigan Farm Herald.

Bureau to Be Established for Purpose of Furnishing Speakers at Public Meetings.

The machinery by which Western Michigan is to be developed into one of the most influential and prosperous sections of the American continent has been under construction for five years and is slowly but surely reaching a standard of high efficiency. One of the latest improvements to be added is the invention of the school men at Ludington and Boyne City. It is hard to say to which town the real credit belongs, because the improvement has appeared in both places almost at the same time. The new piece of machinery is the high school extension idea. For twenty years we have heard of university extension, and the professors connected with the great schools of learning have gone out to the smaller cities scattered over the country and given university lectures. But now a plan is evolved whereby the people in the rural districts are to be reached up to be given comprehensive and yet understandable information upon the subjects in which they are vitally interested. For several months Supt. Frank E. Miller of the Ludington Union School, along with his teacher in agriculture, has been visiting the grange halls and school houses in the country tributary to Ludington, giving lectures upon dairying and general farming. He has taken with him a Babbcock tester and given demonstrations, that the farmers might learn how to determine whether their dairying propositions were profitable or not. These meetings have been successful.

At Boyne City, the idea of helping the people in the rural districts, is being organized an elaborate basis, under the direction of Supt. L. A. Butler. A bureau is being established for the purpose of furnishing speakers for such grange meetings and other gatherings as may be held in the eastern part of Charlevoix county. According to Supt.

Facts from the Pen of John J. Solittie
Pioneer Settler

In my article of last week I concluded with reference to our scouting expedition in the neighborhood of Ludington. Finding nothing that suited us we rejoined our party and continued northward. The first place we came to after leaving Ludington was a little village called Lincoln, now the well known assembly grounds, a suburb, as we might say, of Ludington. From there we went to Manistee. We crossed the lake just above the river and put up at a place called the "Manistee." The place at this time was a nice little town, which in a few years grew to be one of the largest lumbering towns on the shores of Lake Michigan. From Manistee we continued on our journey north toward Frankfort, but did not go to this place, as the route or rather trail, was a little east, more toward Benzonia. The roads were very good for some distance, where they had been used in lumbering operations, but after leaving the more settled district, where there had been no travel the snow bothered us a great deal, being of considerable depth.

We talked the matter over between us and it was decided to send me on ahead to look up a place to stay over night. I pushed on, keeping a sharp lookout for a settlement, but night overtook me in the thickest timber I have seen for years. But there was nothing to do but to keep on, so I stuck in the trail and finally came to a shanty, built probably by some one who had been working in the woods. The place was unoccupied, but I thought some one must live close by, so began looking around. Finally I discovered a light at considerable distance to the westward, and kept on through the deep snow until I arrived there. It proved to be the home of some settlers, and after telling them of the position I was in asked them if I could stay overnight. They extended me that kind of welcome which in the early pioneer days was the custom, stating that what conveniences they had were at my disposal. Upon entering the house I was informed by my host that several members of the party had been having small pox, but as they were about over it, they assured me that they thought there would be no danger of my getting it. We visited for a while, and when the time came to turn in, my bed fellow turned out to be a member of their party, who had had the terrible disease a few years previous. We retired for the night, but you may rest assured that I did not sleep very much, and can remember that night to this day as being the longest one I ever put in. The next morning I went back over the trail of the previous day to see what had become of the other Butler's plans, not only will the teacher in agriculture be at the call of the people of the rural sections, but also the teachers of domestic science and manual training, and such others as are conversant with subjects that are of general interest.

One of the big problems that has to be solved in the developing of Western Michigan, is that of raising the intellectual standard of the people of the territory. But now that this work has been taken up by the school men, the solving of the problem is a simple one. Eight of the high schools in Western Michigan today have teachers of agriculture, and without question, at each of these schools, an extension bureau will be established. Furthermore, many of the county school commissioners have caught the spirit of the times, and are headed and are using their energies to help along the general program.

STEAMER MANISTEE

Twenty Thousand Dollars Being Spent in Fitting Her Up for Summer Business.

Twenty thousand dollars has been spent on the steamer Manistee of the Northern Michigan Line to fit her for the summer trade. The interior of the boat has been re-decorated and new boilers installed and she will be put on the same run as last year, the Chicago-Harbor Springs-Georgian Bay, making this port twice a week during the height of the summer season.

members of our party. I found them after traveling some distance. They had found a place to house themselves but no place for the oxen, who had been taken a short distance from the shanty, the snow shoveled clear from the ground, making a bank about five feet high on all sides, and made as comfortable as the condition of affairs would allow.

On account of the traveling being bad and the snow so deep, we decided to stay there for a while. We put up our stove and patched up the shanty a little, making things as comfortable as possible. During our stay the snow continued to fall and became so deep that when we decided to resume our journey it was impossible for the oxen to be yoked up double, so we took the sleighs apart and made single yokes and shafts and hitched them up single.

We found that while we had been at the shanty the mail carrier had been over the trail and we started out keeping in the track which had been broken by his pony and sled. After ten miles of travel we came to the home of a settler who had moved in the previous fall and, as it was near night, we asked him if he would allow us to stay with him. We were told that if we could put up with what he had we were welcome. He had no bedding other than that he himself used, but we had the use of the stove and a room, which I can assure you was greatly appreciated. We used our own bedding and slept on the floor with our clothes on and spent a very comfortable night.

In the morning after some discussion, in which we all took part, it was decided that I should leave the party and go ahead as far as Traverse City and purchase feed for the oxen and take up what land we needed.

I reached Benzonia that night and stayed at the post office, or rather at the house of which the post office was a part, of the two being under the same roof. I was forty miles from Traverse City, a distance that I expected to walk the next day. Upon reaching Traverse City I transacted what business I had to attend to and waited there several days for the balance of my party, who arrived in a few days.

While there I was informed that special religious services were being held in a nearby schoolhouse and I decided to attend. I found Rev. Jeremiah Boynton, one of the strongest members of the Michigan Conference of the M. E. Church, in charge of the meetings. He was at that time the first presiding elder of the Grand Traverse district.

After a few days rest we again resumed our journey and reached Elk Rapids the following evening. As it was quite stormy, we stayed here several days and during this

MAKES NEW RULING

State Banking Department to Verify all Depositors' Balances.

During the past year much time has been given to banking and currency legislation. The public in general seems satisfied and business conditions are already reported better.

The State Banking Department has made a new ruling which is for the purpose of safeguarding the funds of all depositors in state banks. Whenever an examination is made by the department of any state bank the examiners are required by the department to take off a list of names of the depositors, their balances on such date and submit them to the department. Then the department sends a printed form to the depositors asking them to verify the amount of such account.

There is nothing in this that will affect the general or income tax of any depositor or in any way become public, it being simply in the interest of safe banking.

In conversation with Charles R. Chow of the Charlevoix State Savings Bank he stated that he considered it a very commendable move and that he was heartily in favor of the idea and hopes that whenever any inquiries are made by the Department of Banking concerning this bank that the depositors will answer them promptly.

GIVEN A SHOWER

Engagement of Miss Dorothy Eddings to George Crouter Announced Saturday.

Mrs. Lisle Shanahan entertained at a miscellaneous shower in honor of Miss Dorothy Eddings, whose engagement to George Crouter of this city was announced Saturday afternoon at the former's home on Michigan avenue.

Sixteen young ladies were present and many beautiful and useful gifts were received by the bride to be.

Adainty luncheon was served with appropriate favors. The color scheme in the decorations was red, with capids and hearts predominating.

Everyone will remember it as a very pleasant occasion.

MOVES FURNITURE STORE

W. F. Graham to Occupy Paddock Building—Repairs Being Made.

W. F. Graham, who for the past year has conducted a furniture store in the Ayers building, will move his stock the latter part of this week to the Paddock building, near the Majestic theatre.

Mr. Graham will improve the interior of the store and also put in plate glass windows. He will carry a full line of furniture and make a specialty of picture framing and upholstery. The building will be a great improvement over his present quarters and will allow him to display his line of furniture to much better advantage.

FIRST MEETING Y. M. C. A. CLUB

Held at the Wolverine Hotel, Boyne City, on Saturday Last.

Sixteen Young Men from Charlevoix, and Boyne City Present—Officers Elected.

The first meeting of the Charlevoix County Y. M. C. A. Club was held at the Wolverine Hotel, Boyne City, Saturday forenoon, at which time the club was permanently organized and officers elected. The club is composed of the Y. M. C. A. leaders of the high schools of the county, numbering about twenty, of whom sixteen were present.

The meeting opened with devotional exercises, conducted by H. T. Glezen, who dealt with "Leadership." The officers were next elected, the results of the vote being:

President—Emory D. Pierce, Charlevoix.

Vice-President—Fred Rfourth, Boyne City.

Secretary—Treasurer—Victor Cross, East Jordan.

After the business session the young men had dinner at the Wolverine and then listened to several inspiring talks by the older men present. A. B. Ball got down under the surface and gave some thoughts which went home to the boys centered around "The Cost and Reward of Leadership." He cited the incident of a Scotch minister who was severely criticized for only converting one boy in a year's work, but it developed that this boy became the greatest scholar and evangelist of his time, the renowned Mott. With this illustration he pointed out that one cannot judge the results of true leadership by immediate results.

Rev. J. M. Gleason followed Mr. Ball with an ambitious stirring talk with "Make the best use of the tools you have" as the theme. He pointed out the Biblical examples of Moses, Samson and David, explaining that if duty is performed in such a way as to receive God's support failure is impossible. Do the best with the materials you have and don't make the lack of the proper training and resources an excuse for non-endeavor.

The young men present were enthusiastic and entered into the new plans with a spirit which precludes the possibility of failure from any standpoint. It is planned to have the club meetings every fortnight, alternating between Boyne City, East Jordan and Charlevoix.

The next meeting will be held at East Jordan Saturday, February 28. Those present from Charlevoix were K. D. Pierce, Chas. Moncho, William Driggett and Dean Scroggie.

DEATH TAKES MOSES BOWDISH

Had Been Confined to His Home Since Last September.

For Twelve Years Drove Stage on Mail Route Between Charlevoix and Eastport.

In the death of Moses Bowdish, which occurred shortly after four o'clock Sunday, Charlevoix loses one of its earliest pioneers and industrious citizens. Mr. Bowdish had not been in good health since last September and since that time has been confined to his bed almost continuously. About three weeks ago he was able to leave the house and several times was able to be down town. Shortly after this he was again taken worse and continued to decline until death relieved him from his sufferings. Heart trouble was the immediate cause of his death.

Moses Bowdish was born in Branch county, Michigan, June 23, 1862, where he lived until he reached the age of 20 years. At this time he drove to Charlevoix county and located near Norwood. He was married to Miss Annie Muxlow of Independence, Iowa, October 31, 1883, in this city. During the first twelve years of his residence in this county, he drove the mail stage between this city and Eastport, and later, after this route had been abandoned, from Norwood to Charlevoix. In 1905, after the rural routes had been established, he moved to this city, where he has since resided.

Mr. Bowdish was an active member of the I. O. O. F. and until recently lieutenant commander of the local Macabbee lodge. For a number of years he had been employed by the Charlevoix Lumber Company and previous to this at the beet sugar factory.

Surviving Mr. Bowdish are his wife and four children—Mrs. Clarence Beattie, Ray, Benah and Neva Bowdish—also five sisters and a brother.

Funeral services were held Wednesday morning at 10:30 from the Baptist church, Rev. John G. Irvine officiating. The ritualistic services of the I. O. O. F. were also conducted at the church and at the grave. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

PRIMARY ELECTION WILL BE HELD

So Decided After Receiving Opinion from Attorney General.

Had Candidates Filed Petitions for All Offices
No Primary Would Be Necessary.

Some question has been raised as to the necessity of holding a primary election this spring, as there are only two tickets in the field and only one candidate on each ticket for any office.

The legal department of the city has had this matter under consideration for some time and has consulted with Attorney General Grant Fellows of Lansing in regard to the necessity of holding a primary election.

It seems that no candidate has filed a petition for treasurer on the Democratic ticket and no person has filed a petition for the offices of constable in any of the wards on any ticket.

This being the case, it will be necessary to hold a primary election to determine who shall run for these offices. Had these petitions been filed and only one candidate for each on each ticket, we are advised that it would not have been necessary to hold a primary election under the new law. However, we are advised that this spring's primary will bring good results, inasmuch as it will educate the voters and the election inspectors for the August primary, which is very important.

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh That Contain Mercury

Mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is tenfold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure—manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Company, Toledo, Ohio—contains no mercury and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free. Sold by Druggists. Price 75c per bottle. We Promise You Relief from All Stomach Troubles Or Your Money Back

We honestly believe we have the best remedy in the world for indigestion and dyspepsia. We urge you to try it at our risk. If it doesn't relieve you—as we feel sure it will—we'll give back your money without a word. You know us—your family druggist. You know we wouldn't dare recommend anything we didn't know about, nor dare to break a promise. Therefore, when we recommend any remedy it is because we believe it to be better than any other to relieve the ailment for which it is made, and when we prove our faith in it and our sincerity toward you by promising to give back your money if it doesn't relieve you and in every way satisfy you, you have no possible excuse for doubt or hesitation.

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets are, we honestly believe, the best remedy made for Indigestion, Dyspepsia and all other Stomach Ills

We Know They're Good

Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, in addition to other ingredients, contain Pepsin and Bismuth, two great digestive aids used by the entire medical profession. They soothe the inflamed stomach, check the heartburn and distress, stimulate a healthy secretion of the gastric juices, aid in rapid and comfortable digestion of the food and help to quickly convert it into rich red blood, and thereby into flesh, bone and muscle. They relieve stomach distress promptly, and, used regularly for a short time, tend to restore the stomach to a comfortable, easy-going, healthy state. They aid greatly to promote regular bowel action.

Delays Are Dangerous

Don't neglect indigestion, for it frequently leads to all sorts of ill and complications. The pain and discomfort is not the most unfortunate part. The fact that when the stomach is not acting right, the material needed to repair the wastes that are constantly taking place in the body is not being given to the blood either in the proper condition or fast enough is far more serious. Nothing will cause more trouble than an unhealthy stomach. The blues, debility, lack of strength and energy, constipation, biliousness, headaches and sores of other serious ailments result from the failure of the stomach to properly do its work.

You Risk No Money

Our willingness to have you use Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets entirely at our risk proves our faith in them. We always sell them this way, and it is because we know that they have greatly benefited scores of sufferers in whom we have sold them. There's no red tape about our guarantee. It means just what it says. We'll ask you no questions. You needn't sign anything. Your word is enough for us. We know that when they help you you will consider it money well spent even if they had cost you ten times as much. If they don't help you, the money you paid for them is yours, and we want you to have it.

Sold only at the more than 7,000 Rexall Stores—the World's Greatest Drug Stores. In convenient boxes—three sizes: 25c, 50c, $1.00

SERIOUS ERROR IN CHARLEVOIX

Charlevoix Citizens Would Do Well to Profit by the following.

Many fatal cases of kidney disease have reached an incurable stage because the patient did not understand the symptoms. Even to-day in Charlevoix there are many residents making the same serious error. They attribute their mysterious aches and pains to overwork, or worry, perhaps, when all the time their rheumatic pains, backache and bladder irregularities are most probably due to weak and ailing kidneys. If you are ill, if your kidneys are out of order, profit by this Charlevoix resident's experience.

Henry Newman, 202 Sheridan St., Charlevoix, Michigan, says: "I was troubled for years by my kidneys. I was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions at night and I also had backache. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at the Ivy Drug Store. They gave me instant relief. I can now rest better and I don't have much backache."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Newman had. Foster-McLure Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal
BY
REX BEACH
COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hired. Jefferson Locke, who has been in the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Hiram, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

CHAPTER VII.
El Comandante.

THE newcomer was a black-haired, black-eyed young fellow of perhaps thirty. While his skin was swarthy even in this poor light, it could be seen that he was of the real Castilian type and of a much better class than the others. He was slender and straight, his mouth small and decorated by a carefully pencilled "little mustache," which was groomed to a needle sharpness.

"Eh! 'Ere you are," he began angrily. "Yes, I want to get out, too. What does this treatment mean?"

The newcomer stepped toward the other occupant of the cell, at which Allan broke out in terror: "Don't you touch me! I'm a British subject."

After scanning the Jamaican carefully, the officer issued an order to one of his men, who left the room.

"And I'm an American," Anthony declared. "You'll have to answer for this."

"Perhaps you don't know who I am. I am Ramon Alvarez, consulante of police, and you dare to throw the water of the 'ose wagon upon my person. Your government will settle for those insults." His white teeth showed in a furious snarl. The commandant's eyes flashed as he asked shortly, "What is your name?"

"Anthony. Your men tried to kill that boy, and when I wouldn't stand for it they beat me up."

"You struck me with the water of the 'ose carriage," repeated the other.

"I didn't know who you were. I was helping to stop that fire when you got batted in. Those rints of yours got handcuffs on me and then beat me up. I'm sick. So's that boy. We need a doctor."

Alvarez shook his head. "You resist the police. Even in your country one must not do that."

"Will you take me to a telephone?"

"It is not permitted."

"Will you notify Mr. Weeks?"

Receiving no reply to this request, Kirk broke out: "Well, then, what are you going to do? Let us stay here all night?"

"What is your business?"

"I haven't any."

"You don't work on the canal?"

"No. I'm a tourist. My father is a big railroad man in the States. I'm telling you this so you'll know how to act."

"Where do you leave—what hotel?"

"I've been stopping with Mr. Weeks."

Senior Alvarez's attitude became somewhat less overbearing.

"In due time he will be notify of your outrage to my person," he announced.

The fellow who had left the room a moment before now reappeared, carrying a bucket of water and some towels, with which he directed Allan to remove the blood from his face and hands. When it came Kirk's turn, however, he objected.

"I think I'll wait until Weeks sees me," he said.

But Alvarez retorted sharply, "It is not permitted." And seeing that resistance would be useless, Kirk acquiesced as gracefully as he could, remarking as he did so:

"You'll have hard work washing off this mud this." He indicated the traces of the handcuffs and the gash in his scalp.

The commandant turned to his men and addressed them at some length, calling them to task, as Allan later informed his companion, for using their clubs in a manner to mark their prisoners so conspicuously. Then he followed them into the corridor, closing the grating behind him.

The hours passed, and daylight came with it word from the American consul. By this time the two prisoners were really in need of medical attention. Their contusions pained them severely. Kirk felt as if one or more of his ribs were broken, and his suffering, combined with hunger, prevented sleep. He became feverish and fretful, but his demands for communion with the outside world were calmly ignored, although he felt certain that his wishes were fully understood. When the morning had passed without his being arraigned for a hearing he grew alarmed. Evidently he had been flung into confinement and forgotten. Eventually Kirk and Allan were given food, but still no one came to their relief.

The afternoon wore on without an encouraging sign till Kirk began to think that Weeks had refused to intercede for him and intended to leave him to the mercies of his enemies.

It was considerably after dark when a visitor was at last admitted. He proved to be the English consul, whom Anthony had never met.

"What are you doing here?" the newcomer inquired. Then when the facts had been laid before him he exclaimed, "Why, I heard that a Jamaican negro had been arrested, but I heard nothing about mistreatment of a white man."

"Doesn't anybody know I'm here?"

"I'm sure no one does. Those heathens lied to you. They never communicated with Weeks or anybody. They're afraid. This is an old trick of theirs—manhandling a prisoner, then keeping him hidden until he recovers. If he doesn't recover they get out of it on some excuse or other as best they can. But I'll have Allan here out in two hours or I'll know the reason. England protects her subjects. Mr. Anthony, and these people know it."

"I guess Uncle Sam is strong enough to command respect," said Anthony.

"Well, I know the circumstances now, and I'll go straight to Weeks. He can arrange your release without trouble. If you were an Englishman, I'd have you out in no time and you'd collect handsome damages too. This boy will."

True to the consul's prediction, a little later the Jamaican was led out of the cell, and from the fact that he was not brought back Kirk judged that the British intervention had been effectual. But it was not until the next morning, the second of his imprisonment, that the cell door opened once more, this time to admit the portly figure of John Weeks and the spruce person of Senior Ramon Alvarez.

Kirk told his story as briefly and convincingly as he could. But when he had finished the consul shook his head.

"I don't see what I can do for you," he said. "According to your own declaration you resisted a police officer. You'll have to take your medicine. You'll be tried as soon as they get around to it."

"Look here!" Kirk showed the marks his assailants had left upon him. "Will you stand for that? I've been here two nights now without medical attention."

"How about that, Alvarez?"

The commandant shrugged his shoulders. "If he required a doctor, one shall be secured, but he is not severely injured. I'll have explain the frightful indignity to the honor of my person, yes? As for me, pooh! It is forgot."

He waved his hand gracefully and smiled sweetly upon his fat visitor.

"I guess you ain't hurt much," and Weeks, eying his countryman coldly, "You didn't get any more than was coming to you."

"I won't stand for this!" cried the prisoner hotly. "The English consul got that nigger boy out and I want you to do the same for me."

"You don't understand. I've got business interests in this country, and I can't dash about creating international issues every time an American gets locked up for disorderly conduct."

"Are you really afraid to do anything?" Kirk inquired slowly. "Or is it because of our row?"

"Oh, there's nothing personal about it. Of course, I'll see that you have a fair trial."

The commandant spoke up with ingratiating politeness. "The prisoner may be as roach man's son."

Weeks snorted indignantly. "He gave you that fairy tale, eh? He said his name was Anthony, and his father was a railroad president, didn't he? Well, he imposed on me, too, but his name is Locke, and as near as I can learn, he practically stowed away on the Santa Cruz."

"Ah-h!" The officer's eyes widened as he turned them upon his prisoner. "He is there, what you call tramp."

"All I know is he stuck me for a lot of bills. I'll have to see that he gets fair treatment. I suppose, because he's an American, but that ends my duty."

"Is this the best you'll do for me?" Kirk inquired, as Weeks made ready to go.

"Yes."

"Will you cable my father?"

"At 25 cents a word? Hardly!" The speaker applied his face, exclaiming,

"There's no use of talking. I've got to get out in the air. It's too hot in here for me."

Half an hour later the commandant returned to the cell, and this time he brought with him a number of the little policemen, each armed with a club. Feeling some menace in their coming, Kirk, who had seated himself dejectedly, arose to ask, "What's coming off?"

Alvarez merely issued some directions in Spanish, and chain handcuffs were once more snapped upon the prisoner's wrists.

"So, you're going to hold my trial, eh?" cried Kirk.

But the other snarled, "Senior Locke, you 'ave force' the water of the 'ose wagon upon my body for making the people laugh. Bueno! Now I shall laugh." He seated himself, then nodded at his men to begin.

Mrs. Cortlandt answered her telephone for the second time, repeating with some impatience, "Tell the man I can't see him."

But he refuses to leave—says he must see you at once. It's important. Come the voice of the clerk.

"Oh, very well. I'll come down." She hung up the receiver with a snarl. In the hotel lobby she was directed toward a very ragged, very woebegone young black on the rear porch, who at sight of her began to fumble his hat and run his words together so excitedly that she was forced to calm him.

"Now, now! I can't understand a word. Who are you?"

"I'm Allan, mistress."

"You say some one is ill?"

"Oh, yes, he is very ill indeed, mistress—half covered with blood and his poor hands all cut."

"Who is it?"

"Mr. h'Anthony."

"Anthony?" Mrs. Cortlandt started. "What has happened? Quick!"

Had she been less acquainted with the Caribbean dialects she would have missed much of Allan's story. Rapidly she gathered the facts of the case, while her cheeks whitened and her eyes grew dark with indignation.

"How did you get here?" she asked.

"With my feet, mistress. Sometimes rode I on the train, but the train people are very common; they addressed me rudely and threw me by the way-side."

"Couldn't you telephone?"

"I do not understand how."

"Why didn't he notify me at once? If I had only known—"

"Those careless Spiggotties would not tell me it. Oh, you will assist the poor man! Say it. Praise be to God, he is bleeding in the prison."

"Yes, yes, certainly."

"God bless you, good mistress. He told me to find you and present his respects."

"Here, take this money and go back to Colon by the first train. We may need you. Now go! I'll be there ahead of you."

She ran up the hotel stairs as if pursued, bursting in upon her husband impetuously.

"Young Anthony is in jail in Colon," she panted. "He's been locked up for three days, and they won't let him out."

"The devil! You said he'd gone back to New York. What is it about?"

"I thought he had. They arrested him for some silly thing, and he's hurt." She hurriedly recounted Allan's story, adding, in conclusion, "That black boy came all the way across the isthmus to tell us."

"I'll get the American consul by phone."

But Mrs. Cortlandt interrupted. "Weeks is a fool! He wouldn't do anything. Wait!" She stepped to the instrument and rang violently. "Give me Colonel Jolson's office, quickly. If he is not there, find him. I don't care where he is, find him; it is important. This is Mrs. Cortlandt speaking."

"What do you mean to do?" said Cortlandt.

"Go to Colon at once. This is young Alvarez doing—the whippersnapper—you must lay him out for this. How dare he!"

"Better go carefully. Remember General Alvarez is his father."

"I understand. But we are bound to come to a breach sooner or later."

"I hardly think so. I believe we can bring him around all right—anyhow, I haven't lost hope. Anthony chose the worst possible time for this escapade. I suppose it will mean diplomatic difficulties and all that, and once we lose old Alvarez—"

"We will lose him anyhow," snarled the woman. "I've seen it coming, although you could not. I'll break Ramon for this."

"Then you'll break us. Do you think Anthony is worth it?"

"My dear Stephen, they nearly killed that poor boy, and I shan't allow it. Don't allow Alvarez is not the only presidential timber in the republic. If he breaks with us it will cost him dearly. You think he is friendly, but I know that deep down in his crafty old heart he despises all us Americans. The moment he dares, he'll turn against us."

Cortlandt's frosty countenance showed signs of unusual agitation as he answered: "You're mad! You threaten to ruin everything. You understand perfectly—there's no use of my explaining. Let me call on him this afternoon. He will instruct his son."

"No! He would procrastinate as usual. There would be the customary delays and excuses, and meanwhile Anthony would be in jail at Colon. They would have a defense all prepared. Besides, if it's to be a fight we must have all the weapons possible—and this affair may prove a good one. Anyhow, you mustn't ask a favor of him at this time; he must ask, not you."

The telephone rang, and the speaker snatched the receiver from its hook.

LOCAL OPTION MOVEMENT

Many Counties in State to Vote on Proposition of Election This Spring.

The following counties now wet will vote on local option this spring, namely: Ingham, Lapeer, Arenac, Ogemaw, Roscommon, Chippewa. The dry counties in which similar elections will be held are Benzie, Kalkaska, Wexford, Mecosta, Shiawassee, Eaton, Clare. With the exception of Ingham, Lapeer and Wexford the counties to be contested for are among the smaller ones of the state. Ingham county will be the hottest battle ground on account of its having the state capital located there. The drys will make a desperate effort to take it out of the wet column, while the wets will not only fight hard to hold it but to break the prevailing drouth in Wexford.

MR. AND MRS. LINCOLN ENTERTAIN

Program of Historical Society Greatly Enjoyed by Those Present.

Carefully Selected Responses and Well Written Papers Showed Careful Study.

One of the most pleasing events since the organization of the Charlevoix Historical Society was that held Friday evening at the Masonic temple, when the members of the society and their friends were entertained by Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln.

Over a hundred were present and after mingling a short time prior to the opening program in the lodge room they slowly filed to the banquet hall, where they were announced by the colored butler to Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln and other historic characters. Dr. F. H. Wilkinson and wife as Mr. and Mrs. Lincoln acted their parts in a most creditable manner, as did L. M. DeVoe as George Washington, Mrs. L. H. Bartlett as Mrs. Washington, Rev. C. E. Taggart as General Sherman, Judge S. A. Correll as James Russell Lowell, Mrs. R. B. Armstrong as Susan B. Anthony, Dr. A. M. Wilkinson as Henry W. Longfellow, Miss Bon as Miss Longfellow, W. H. Miller as Thomas J. Edison and E. C. Craig as Charles Dickens.

Each character responded with carefully selected responses or well written papers as they were called upon by Mr. Lincoln. Among those that deserve special mention are those of Susan B. Anthony, General George Washington, Miss Longfellow and a short sketch of Dickens' "Martin Chuzzlewit" by Mademoiselle Vandermade and Wilkinson. In fact every number brought applause from those present.

After the program a three course luncheon was served by the ladies of the Eastern Star.

Whether a dog is the best friend of man cannot be answered by me, but of all the animals which have become domesticated the dog has been shown to be the only one that never knows the difference of caste, class, wealth or habitation. New and Inexpensive Method of Keeping Your Water Pipes from Freezing.

One of the most annoying and troublesome things to be met each winter in farm life is the question of frozen water pipes, writes a contributor to the Country Gentleman. Each winter for several years I was given all kinds of trouble and extra work in this way as soon as the temperature dropped to the freezing point or lower. After much experimenting I finally hit upon the easiest, most inexpensive and surest way to keep the frost off the pipes. Melt equal quantities of vaseline and paraffine wax together and, after wiping the pipes perfectly dry, apply with an old brush a thick coat of this mixture while it is hot. An old lamp or torch will easily keep it in a liquid state. You will find that no matter how cold the weather may get the frost cannot penetrate this coat of grease. I have used this on water pipes that ran along the top of the ground unprotected and not once during the coldest weather did they freeze up or give me the least trouble.

If there is any significance of evil in the combination mentioned then the superstitions should be on their guard, for March 13 falls on Friday also.

According to an article in a recent issue of the Grand Rapids Press, Rev. A. E. Nagler, a former pastor of the M. E. church of this city, emphatically states his views on the popular dance of the day. He says: "The dancing foot and the prayer knee rarely ever belong in the same company." The modern dance according to Mr. Nagler is both "irreligious and immoral."

Postmasters of all classes have been notified by the first assistant postmaster general to look for good roads. "The department's attention has been attracted to proclamations issued from time to time by the governors of states designating certain days as 'good roads' days and postmasters as representatives in their communities of the national government are expected to maintain as active an interest in this movement as is consistent with the proper performance of their official duties."

Gossiping has done Central Lake more harm than all the sickness that it has ever experienced. There is a certain bunch of people in this town who make a specialty of juicy bits of information more than often the imaginings of their own diseased minds—and take an insane delight in spreading scandal. This pernicious custom has caused more broken and bleeding hearts than any other five things. If you know any gossip, for Heaven's sake get it! Central Lake Torch. Good advice, Brother Editor. It can be applied in more places than Central Lake, too.

TOWN PLANNING.

The following nine problems are given as the things to be encountered by a town planning commission:

First.—Public control over the industrial frontiers of a modern city.

Second.—City planning—streets, parks, playgrounds, etc.—as it applies to these suburban divisions individually and as part of the greater city.

Third.—Taxation and the private exploitation of leasing land values.

Fourth.—Demand for capital for home building at low rates of interest.

Fifth.—Home ownership and the workers' mobility.

Sixth.—Recreational and social requirements of the outlying communities.

Seventh.—Unemployment as affected by isolated industries.

Eighth.—Perplexing questions of social self dependence and industrial intercity.

Ninth.—The relation between the satellite and the common civic and community purpose of the industrial district.

GRAND JUNCTION'S MOVE.

Colorado City to Have Municipal Light and Power Plant.

The city of Grand Junction, Colo., is to have a municipal hydroelectric plant for the development of light and power for the use of its citizens, for its public utilities and for the municipality. A preliminary permit for a conduit on a nearby national forest has just been granted by the secretary of agriculture.

The development proposed by the municipality is considered to be especially interesting at this time because of current reports that the Grand Junction Electric, Gas and Manufacturing company, which now furnishes power to the city and the surrounding country, is trying to sell its entire holdings to the city.

Officials of the department of agriculture express particular interest in this development because it bears on the recognized federal policy of cooperation with states, counties and municipalities for the common welfare—protecting city water supplies and favoring progress for publicly owned power projects. They find in Grand Junction, one of the first cities in Colorado to establish a commission form of government, a progressive and prosperous community located in a region of great agricultural possibilities, since it is the center of the fruit section of the state where many of the favored projects of the department are being worked out—specialized crops, intensive culture and co-operative farming and marketing.

HOME ECONOMIC CLUBS.

Great Field For Their Work, Says University Professor.

"Time and money could be profitably spent in sending teachers through the states to organize clubs for the systematic study of foods, sanitation, hygiene and kindred problems which make for better living," C. E. Binzel, instructor in the home economics department of the University of Wisconsin, voices this opinion.

For a number of years demonstrations in the woman's department of the farmers' institute have, by successfully conducting cooking schools in a large number of the villages of the state, done an important and much needed work along this line. During the past year additional service has been given by agricultural extension workers and residents of the communities in which home economic clubs have been formed or instruction in home-making has been given, having been well pleased with the results.

Among other things these meetings have given opportunities for social intercourse and exchange of helpful ideas and opinions, and many housewives have been made acquainted with new devices and methods which have been found great economizers of time, energy and money.

As there are hundreds of girls who will never have the opportunity of attending schools where special training is given to prepare them for their life-work, the field for more work of this nature seems almost unlimited.

TOWN PLANNING PAYS.

"Cut the Lots For Occupant," Says Well Known Authority.

In discussing the town planning theory George B. Ford writes:

"If the lots were cut for the occupant instead of the occupant being trimmed to the lot, if streets and road ways were designed in location, direction, character and width for use not according to obsolete precedent; if transit lines were designed with the same efficiency that the manufacturer exhibits in designing his own plant; if people could only realize that money spent to scientifically designed recreational facilities is paid back in many ways to the community, then the well known residential area, instead of being an eyecore and a disgrace to the community, would be what the English garden suburbs now are, the most charming and efficient housing areas to be found anywhere in the world.

"The problem is simple. It requires first, merely an appreciation of the fact that town planning pays, and, second, it requires a cooperative effort on the part of the workmen to secure such scientific town planning."

"GO-TO-CHURCH" MOVEMENT

Churches in Many Cities Making Great Efforts to Have Larger Attendance.

Here in Petoskey there has been quite a revival in the matter of church going and people who have not been to church for ages can now be seen in attendance at almost any of the churches. Men are naturally religious, but he has various and peculiar ways of sometimes giving it expression. The "go-to-church-Sunday" movement, which is spreading all over the country, has interested him and affords him an opportunity to give his labor God-fearing nature a chance to arouse and "do things." Every church and any church will give him a cordial welcome and the comforts and enjoyments of a church home. Minister, rector and priest will be glad to see him, and the faithful wife, in many instances, will be overjoyed if husband, who has long neglected the great religious opportunities, will partake of them with her. It is a great movement, the effort to get men to attend divine worship regularly, and every true man should give it added impetus by personal effort.—Petoskey Evening News.

No better movement could be started in this city than work along this line and we believe that the first day's attendance would be a great surprise to the leaders of our many churches.

Overworked G. R. & L. Brakeman Sits Down on Track and Goes to Sleep.

Roy Emory of Pellston, a brakeman on the freight run from Elmira to Mackinaw City, came near freezing to death Saturday night. He had been working to the full limit of sixteen hours for nearly a week, and left Mackinaw City on the late train for his home at Pellston. He intended to get off at Pellston, but went to sleep and was carried to Bratus. He left the train there and carrying his suit case started to walk to Pellston. On his way he became tired out and sat down to rest, and soon became so cold to resume his journey. He was discovered Sunday afternoon by a crew on the snow plow and taken to his home. One foot was badly frosted and his right hand may have to be amputated.

Dr. Adams' Lecture Pleases Large Audience at the Charlevoix Theatre Monday Night.

The lecture given at the Charlevoix Theatre Monday evening under the auspices of the Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course was largely attended and much enjoyed by those present.

The lecturer, Dr. H. V. Adams, dwelt upon the power of thought and suggestion over material conditions and gave many illustrations to prove his points. He contended that a man can overcome inherited traits and shape his life by the power of thought and will and gave an interesting illustration to this effect which was convincing proof that "as a man thinketh so is he."

CHAPTER VIII.

SPANISH LAW.
SEÑOR RAMÓN ALFARÉZ was considerably confused when his two distinguished visitors made known the nature of their errand. Cortlandt did most of the talking, his cold hauteur serving a good purpose and contrasting strongly with the suppressed excitement of his wife.

"Pardon me, there is no necessity for delay," he said, as the commandant endeavored to formulate an excuse. "I trust I need not insist upon seeing the prisoner?" He raised his brows with a stare of inquiry that caused the other to reply hastily:

"Of a certainty not, señor."

"Then take us to him."

"I will spare your lady the painful sight of the prison house. The prisoner shall be fetched with all dispatch."

"We will see him alone."

Again the commandant hesitated, while his bright eyes searched their faces with a sudden uneasy curiosity.

"He is resists the officer by force, he is in league with the police—it is nothing. One is truly foolish for resists the policeman, yes?" He shook his dark head sadly.

"I think we understand the circumstances."

Instead of clinging for an orderly the commandant excused himself, then, after a seemingly interminable delay, returned with Anthony and several policemen.

At sight of his friends the young man made for them eagerly, crying:

"Jove, I'm glad you came! I'd about given you up."

"Allan only found me today," Mrs. Cortlandt replied. "Did he tell the truth? Have you been abused?"

The young man turned a pair of smoldering eyes upon his enemies. He looked ill and haggard; although, except for the wound half concealed beneath his hair, he showed no marks. Then he held out his hands with a grim smile, and the woman uttered a low cry at what she saw. "They gave me another good beating yesterday," he said.

"That's the fellow yonder."

"While you were in jail?" Cortlandt queried incredulously. "God?"

"That's the fellow yonder," Kirk pointed to Alfarez, whose smile had disappeared.

"Oh, the man is mistake," the latter hastened to aver. "He is crazy."

"I gave you a warning in public, and—"

"Silence! That is correct, señor Cortlandt. He insult my person and fight my soldiers. He is very off person."

"Did you know he had been maltreated in prison?" Cortlandt demanded.

"Oh, señor!" Alfarez raised his hands in horrified disclaimer of the very thought, but his victim said:

"He's in jail. He ordered it, then sat there and enjoyed it."

Kirk made a threatening movement in the Spaniard's direction, despite the half dozen soldiers, but Edith Cortlandt checked him.

"Wait, please," she said. Then to the commandant: "This is a serious matter, and if what he says is true your government will find itself in trouble."

"But we have no idea he is friend of yours. If he should only ask your father's name, all would be different. For my part, I can prove he is traitor with the 'lightest' courtesy and kindness in my presence. Every man in the prison will testify to those facts."

"Why did you keep him locked up so long? Why didn't you try him?" said Cortlandt.

"Ah! For that I shall inquire also. I am informed, however, that the what you call justice is weak."

"We'll look into that later. We're here now to arrange for Mr. Anthony's release."

"The alcalde will be please to accommodate at the earliest. I myself shall see to it, tomorrow."

"There will be no tomorrow about it," Mrs. Cortlandt exclaimed, positively. "If you cannot arrange the hall yourself, my husband will take up the matter with the zone government, and Colonel Johnson will call upon the president of the republic within an hour. He is waiting word from us now."

Senior Ramón Alfarez became suddenly galvanized. He broke into offensive apologies for even so small a delay as had already occurred. While, to be sure, no power was vested in him, and his willing hands were most miserably tied, nevertheless he would so far exceed his authority as to provide instant freedom to the prisoner.

He hastened forth to set in motion the proper machinery, and while he was absent Kirk told his story. He left the woman white-lipped and incoherent, and roused even the icy Cortlandt to genuine wrath.

"Of course," the latter said. "Alfarez will prove by his men that it's all imagination on your part and that your injuries were sustained at the time of your arrest. He'll assume a righteous indignation and start a Spitznagel investigation. You see, his father is the governor of Panama province and one of the strongest men in the republic, so Ramón will probably make good his position. Even so, you may recover damages."

"I don't want damages," Kirk replied. "I want to get him out alone some time."

"For heaven's sake, don't think of it!" Mrs. Cortlandt exclaimed. "All the American influence on the isthmus wouldn't help you then. Fifty men would perform themselves to convict you."

"No. That method doesn't work here," her husband agreed. "You're lucky to escape so easily. He'll arrange bail, never fear, and you will probably not come to trial. He'll never forgive you, of course, but that won't matter to you."

The first part of Mr. Cortlandt's prediction was soon proved true, for the sick alcalde recovered sufficiently to appear on the scene within half an hour. Then, after upon signing of official documents and certain other formalities, Kirk Anthony walked out of the Colon jail in company with his friends.

In the midst of Kirk's expressions of gratitude for the timely intervention of Cortlandt and his wife, the former surprised him by saying in a genuinely hearty tone:

"My wife has told me all about you, Anthony, and I want you to come over to Panama as my guest in the hotel until you hear from your father."

When Kirk informed him of the telegram that had cast him adrift in Panama, Cortlandt replied reassuringly:

"Oh, well, your father doesn't understand the facts in the case, that's all. You sit down like a sensible person and write him fully."

Seeing a warm second to his invitation in Mrs. Cortlandt's eyes, Kirk accepted gracefully, explaining: "You know this is the first time I was ever up against hard luck, and I don't know just how to act."

"We've missed the 4:35, so we will have to return the way we came," said Cortlandt. "I'd like to stop at Gatun on a business matter of some importance, and if you don't mind a half hour's delay we'll do so."

"They pursued their way to the station. But here an unexpected embarrassment arose. As they made ready to board Colonel Johnson's motor car they were annoyed to find that Allan insisted on going too. He insisted, moreover, in such extravagant fashion that Mrs. Cortlandt at last was moved to say: 'For heaven's sake, let the poor thing come along.' And thereafter the Jamaican boy sat on the step of the machine."

Once more the little automobile took on the dignity of a regular train and sped out of the network of tracks behind Colon. As it gained speed Mrs. Cortlandt, to divert her guest's mind from his recent ordeal, began to explain the points of interest as they passed.

She showed him the old French workmen where a nation's hopes lay buried, the mechanical ruins that had cost a king's ransom, the Mount Hope cemetery, whither daily trains had borne the sacrifice before science had rubbed the fever of its torments.

"Will they really finish the canal?" he asked. "Won't something happen?"

"It is already dug. The rest is merely a matter of excavation and concrete. The engineering difficulties have all been solved, and the big human machine has been built up. What is more important, the country is livable at last. Over at Ancon hospital there is a quiet herd, working medical men who have made this thing possible. When the two oceans are joined together, and the job is finished, his will be the name most highly honored."

"It must be nice to do something worth while," Anthony mused vaguely.

"To do anything," his companion observed, with a shade of meaning; then, "It is amusing to look back on the old Spanish statement that it would be impious to unite two oceans which the Creator of the world had separated."

As Kirk dropped asleep that night after the fatigues of a bath, clean clothes and a most comfortable dinner, he reflected contentedly that, after all, things have a way of coming right in this world for those who accept them cheerfully as they come.

On the following morning Kirk dispatched a long letter to his father, explaining, as well as he could, how he came to be in Panama and giving a detailed account of the events that had befallen him since his arrival. Although he took this means of relieving his father's anxiety, he was far from resigning himself to a further delay of his return. On the contrary, he at once began an inquiry as to sailing dates; discovering, to his intense disgust, that no ship was scheduled to leave for New York within several days. He planned to borrow the passage money from his friends when the time came, and accompany his letter northward. Meanwhile he devoted his time to sight-seeing with his hosts.

Edith Cortlandt was a woman very sure of herself in most things. A situation that might have proved embarrassing to one less careful she accepted quite as a matter of course, rather enjoying the exercise of her influence and never doubting her power to keep the friendship upon any footing she chose. Kirk's frank, boyish gratitude for the favors he had received made it easy for her to encourage the growth of an intimacy that she acknowledged "harmless, while she sincerely believed that he would be helped by it. Finding him responsive, she deliberately set herself to please him. She was no longer brilliant and chilly, but gay, smiling and unaffected."

Once in a while Cortlandt went with them, but he was usually uncommunicative, and they scarcely felt his presence. When he did talk he talked easily and well.

Several days passed thus, during which Anthony fully recovered from his experience at Colon. Then a ship arrived from New York, but before he had summoned courage to ask his friends for a loan he received a letter forwarded from Colon by the American consul, a perusal of which not only dumfounded him, but entirely altered his plans.

It was typewritten on plain stationery; there was neither heading nor signature, yet he knew quite well from whom it came. It read as follows:

"Don't cable again or the stupidity of the police may fall to protect you. The others set away safely, and you would be mad to return alone. I can't and won't help you now. This time you went too far. You have made your bed, now lie in it. I don't believe in miracles, but if you can straighten up and make a man of yourself I'll help you face this trouble, otherwise don't call on me for anything. I'm through."

Kirk read this amazing epistle several times before its full significance struck him; then, when he realized what it meant, he felt himself broken into a sweat of apprehension. That plain clothes man had died! The police were looking for him. There could be no other explanation, else why had Higgins and the rest fled the country? Perhaps he was already indicted. Kirk saw himself accused of manslaughter, arrested and tried. What could he do if his father refused to help? Evidently that once the young man knew that explanations would be futile. Even the letter he had sent would do no good. When Darwin K. Anthony said he was through he was through.

Finding a secluded corner of the veranda, he sat down to think this matter out, but the more he reflected on it the more serious it appeared. Of one thing he became quickly convinced: New York at present was no place for him.

But, the rose quickly and entered the hotel, where he bought all the latest New York papers and found an account of Mr. Padden's efforts to disprove his connection with an assassin upon the person of a digestive named Williams, who had come from St. Louis. But nowhere was there a word about the present condition of the plain clothes man, nor the slightest hint toward explaining the conduct of the mysterious Jefferson Locke, for whom he had been searching. Who the devil was Locke, anyhow? The article did not even state the charge upon which he was to be arrested. In another paper Kirk found something that relieved his mind a bit. Evidently Williams had not died prior to the time of going to press, although he was reported in a critical condition.

One thing was clear, at least. He could stay here no longer as the Cortlandts' guest—he had already incurred an obligation which he would have difficulty in discharging.

Confronting his sense of humiliation as best he could, he called up the Cortlandts' suit.

Edith answered saying that her husband was out. Then, in response to his request, she came down herself.

"What has gone wrong? Why this face of tragedy?" she inquired as she seated herself beside him.

"I've received my declaration of independence. I've heard from my father. He told her everything without reserve, then showed her the letter and the newspaper in his hand. She scrutinized them with a quiet seriousness that seemed to make his trouble her own. Finding her bright eyes upon him, she inquired: 'How does it feel to be disinherited?'"

"Blamed uncomfortable," he must tell Mr. Cortlandt at once.

"Let me," she offered, quickly. "I would not show any one that letter, if I were you, for advertise the fact that you are in danger of arrest. It will be quite enough if I tell him that you have quarrelled with your father—he is a peculiar man."

"I'm going to work."

"Good! Good!" She clapped her hands gleefully.

"Oh, I don't want to," he protested, "but the old gentleman thinks I'm no good, and I'd like to show him he's wrong. After I've done that, I intend to leave again—yes, and I'll know how to keep by that time. Of course, I'll have to pay my debts too. I'm going to start a job this afternoon."

"What sort?"

"Something with big pay and no responsibility."

"Whereas positions are taken—by the army," she laughed. "What can you do?"

"I can take an automobile apart."

"And put it together again?"

"Oh, no! I can sell a boat; I shoot pretty well; I walk nicely; I row, swim and box indifferently; and I play an atrocious hand at poker. Am I hopeless?"

"Dear, no! Experience is a good thing, of course, and ability is even better, but neither is absolutely necessary in government work, if you have influence. I am trying to think of the niche into which you would best fit."

"When a fellow hasn't any of those qualifications, then what? Take me, for instance."

"You have at least one, influence."

"He shook his head. 'My father wouldn't help.'"

"We'll have no difficulty in finding you a position."

"There's not the slightest chance. All paths lead up the mountain, and if you go far enough you will reach the top. It would be quite easy if you knew something about the railroad business, for instance."

"Oh, I do. I've had that drilled into me ever since I was a child. I grew up with it—was sucked in it. My father made me learn telegraphy before he gave me a motorboat."

"Why in the world didn't you say so?"

"Well, I have forgotten most of it," he confessed. "I had a railroad of my own, too, when I was twelve years old. I was president."

"Unfortunately, the P. R. R. has a president, so we can't start you in where you left off."

"He might need an assistant."

Mrs. Cortlandt laughed lightly. "While we are finding that out," she said, "I think you had better go over the line in daylight and really see what this work is like. That glimpse you had at Gatun is only a small part. Now, will you trust me to manage this for you, Mr. Anthony?"

FIGHTING SAN JOSE SCALE.
Lime-Sulphur Wash and Whale Oil Soap Are Good.

For the treatment of trees or shrubs on which San Jose scale has gained a foothold the remedy in most general use is a chemical combination of calcium oxide and sulphur known as the lime-sulphur wash. Formerly salt was added to it, but this ingredient has been discarded. If one has a moderate number of trees to spray the most satisfactory plan is to purchase concentrated lime-sulphur, which is a clear reddish liquid without sediment. To prepare it for use you simply dilute it with water. Usually it is put up in such strength that the proper dilution is one part of the concentrate to eight or ten parts of water. If the dilution is not indicated on the container or if you want to be certain about it buy a hydrometer. Test the specific gravity of your concentrate. It will register from 32 to 35 degrees. The dilution for the 32 degree stuff is one to eight, that for the 35 degree one to nine.

The man with extensive orchards may wish to make his own concentrate.

Bracing Posts of Sheep Corral.

The sheep corral is an important place to fence, for if it should be built strong enough so if the herd should stampede they will not be able to tear it down, says the Iowa Homestead.

A corral for sheep is often made of field fencing at the bottom and several strands of tightly stretched barbed wire at the top.

Smooth posts, such as cedar or split walnut, are the best for high corral. Set them firmly and brace the corner posts very securely. Illustration shows how to brace.

To make a good fastening at the corners of a sheep corral or any fence bring a length of wire back from the front of the post so it will extend clear around it. Then lay these wires at the other side. The wires may also be stapled.

A gate which swings from a tall guide pole is the kind for a sheep corral. Fit something in to fasten the gate to when it is open; otherwise the gate is apt to swing to at the wrong time when the wind springs up suddenly. Fasten a gate of this type with a chain and hasp.

ROYAL BAKING POWDER

Is the Housewife's Greatest Help.

WHAT so tempting to the laggard appetite as a light, flaky, fruit short cake or a delicate hot biscuit?

Royal makes the perfect short cake, biscuit and muffin, and improves the flavor and healthfulness of all risen flour-foods.

It renders the biscuit, hot-bread and short cake more di-gestible and nutritious, at the same time making them more attractive and appetizing.

Royal Baking Powder is indispensable for the preparation all the year round of perfect foods.

time I met Mr. Rose, who was on his way to Pine River (Charlevoix), where he had a contract to build a dock large enough to enable boats to land their cargoes of freight.

It was there that Billy Parsons, who had been detained at Muskegon, where he had stopped to have new soles put on his shoes, caught up with us. At that time Billy was working for John Parsons, who, of course, carried the purse. Before he caught up with us he ran short of money and was obliged to pawn his watch for three dollars to obtain enough money to meet his traveling expenses. The man who loaned him the money was one of the members of a party of eight soldiers who were on a furlough and on their way to Mackinac Island. Parsons told them he would redeem the watch as soon as he overtook us and that as they would travel the same route as we did, they were taking no chances in getting their money back. They claimed they were the men who captured Jeff Davis of Civil War fame, and were a jolly bunch of fellows. It was while we were at Elk Rapids that they overtook us and upon seeing them
Parsons wanted to redeem his watch.
The fellow who had loaned the money at first refused to give the watch up, but as Parsons told him he could either do that or take a good licking, he finally decided that the best thing he could do was to deliver the goods.

So we left Elk Rapids on our way to Antrim City. We reached Brown-town (Torch Lake), the place where J. H. Silverman of Milwaukee held forth, and after a three weeks' journey reached our final destination. Most of the trip was made on the bay over the ice.

Upon our arrival Hon. Richard Knight gave us a hearty welcome, and told us that we could move in to his blacksmith shop, which with a little fixing up would make very comfortable quarters. We moved in and in a few days had everything in running order. Joseph Harwood said he would act as cook for a while, and then turn it over to John Parsons. It was while Parsons was cook that he decided to have a boiled dinner. He made what he called an English pudding—something like apple dumplings without the apples. Whatever he put into them to make them expand, I have never been able to find out, but instead of expanding, they contracted, and were so hard we were unable to eat them, or even make an impression on them. We gave them to the dog, who died the next day.

So the four of us went to work felling trees until navigation opened, and during this time made quite an opening in what at that time was nothing but dense timber.
A little later Joseph Harwood and John Parsons built log houses.

The same spring the writer of this article returned to his former home in Wisconsin, arriving there in April. I stayed there until the following August and then moved to Michigan with my family. By winter we were comfortably situated, in our log cabin. When I returned it was a great surprise to me to learn of the large number of people who had come to this section to settle and were coming every week. In every instance, the first thing they did was to build log cabins or shanties of some kind to live in; at the same time also to clear the land to raise the necessities of life. Great mea lived in log houses in these days, one in Illinois, the emancipator, whom we think of at all times as worthy of remembrance.

We had to help out each other during these days and the erection of a log house was usually the occasion of considerable fun, not forgetting to mention at the same time the hard work that went with it.
This calls to my memory one occasion when we were invited to the clearing of a man from near Jackson, Michigan, to help him put in place the heavy logs for his cabin. We all turned out to help and by the time we had eaten the fine supper provided for by the good wife it was dark. From the place where the raising had taken place it was quite a distance to our homes, especially by the road, and one of the party suggested that we cut across lots, thus saving walking several miles. We chose him as our leader and started home through the woods. For some distance the ground was level and the walking good, but after a while we came to a cedar swamp. By this time it was as dark as a pile of black cats and if the readers of this article have ever been in a cedar swamp after dark they will know what we experienced. Each member of the party was his own pilot and after floundering about for a long time we came out of the swamp into a small clearing. The stars were shining bright and I began to look for the north star. Our leader said our direction led to the right and we were to follow this course. By this time I had located the dipper and the star I was looking for and had gotten my bearings. I told our pilot that the direction that led home was to the left and told him to look at the north star and the dipper. He said he had never heard of the north star or dipper and I explained to him and the other members of the party what they were and where they were always located. After some discussion some of the party decided to go with the pilot and some with me, but after some urging they all decided to follow the direction I had stated was the right one. After traveling a short distance we came to a small stream. I took a little run and made the jump all right, as did the other members of the party with the exception of our former pilot, who slipped and landed in the middle of the stream. We fished him out and after walking a short distance heard the tinkling of a cow bell, which proved to be at my home, which we reached in a short time. We learned some time later that if we had followed the direction advised by our first pilot we would have come out of the woods near East Jordan.

These are but a few of the many instances that happened in my pioneer days. I could write many columns relating things that have occurred since, which would be of interest to the readers of this paper,

but will leave that to some one else.
Thus ends the story of incidents that occurred 50 years ago.

FOOTBALL MAKING

Work That Requires Powerful Hands and Arms.

THE PIGSKIN IDEA IS WRONG.

That Brand of Hide Is Never Used, the Finest Balls Taking Calf or Cow Skin and the Cheaper Grades Sheepskin.
The Bladders Are Made of Rubber.

That phrase so much used in the football season, "chasing the pigskin," involves a popular error. The football is not made of pigskin, but of the hide of the calf or cow and for the cheaper variety the skin of the sheep. Foot-balls of the ordinary grade are made in this country, but some of the finest sold to those who are not particular about price, are imported from England, where the industry was an old one before it was started in America.

The making of a football is almost entirely a male industry. The only share that women have in the work is seen when one first enters a football factory. At long tables girls sit pasting flannels on sections of the football cut in another part of the factory. It is work that a girl is particularly fit for, as the flannels must be carefully fastened to the rough leather and smoothed until there is not a sign of a hobble or rough place on the surface of the flannel.

The first step in the making of a football is to select the leather. Only the best of picked skins are used, and each skin is carefully gone over for defects before being cut into the necessary sections. This is done by machinery, and the sections are then sent to the room in which the girls are at work for the flannel to be pasted on.

Then the flannel sections are sent to the sewing room and the flannels are stitched together, bringing the outer covering of the football into position for the final stitching. This is done by a machine that turns the footballs out stitched in the seams but wrong side out. They must then be turned right side out, a job that is left to men who do nothing else all day long but reverse the leather covers by hand.

Work that requires great strength and endurance and gives the workers a pre-digious amount of pulling power in the muscles of the arms and hands.

When the cover is pulled right side out the outer part of the football is finished ready for the inflation. The bladder is inserted and blown up, and the ball is then stamped on a hot press and worked up until the surface is perfectly smooth and free from rough spots. The ball is then deflated and placed aside for shipment.

Balls intended for the soccer game or for basket ball are also made in the way described. A new idea recently applied to the making of the football is to provide a ball suited to the rough treatment inseparable from play on the stone flagged or asphalted pavement of the school playground. It was found that the finely finished football intended for use on a grass covered field could not stand the hard usage received during practice in the school yard and a football was therefore devised especially for this rough work, with the seams stitched on the outside instead of the inside. Sewing the seams from the outside provided a ridge that protects the ball when kicked and bounced in a paved court and makes the cost of the footballs used in a season somewhat less than when the finely finished oval of the grillion ground is used.

The origin of the term "kicking the pigskin" was explained by one of the authorities in this way: "Years ago when the game was in its early stages in England, the inflation was done by means of a bladder of a pig. In those old days the skin of the pig was actually subjected to the indignity of being propelled high in the air by the toe of a football player, but as the bladder is no longer used the term has ceased to apply.

The bladders are now made of rubber. The regulation football weighs from thirteen and a quarter to fourteen ounces. The soccer ball weighs from thirteen to fifteen ounces. One cannot definitely predict the life of a football, but the makers say the hardest kicking should fall in retire the ball in less than two years.

It may not be generally known that football has a patron saint. In 1524 a boy named Hugh had the misfortune to kick a football through a window in the house of a neighbor, who became so incensed at the damage done that he stabbed the boy to death. The populace avenged the boy's death by killing his slayer and then exalted the name of the unfortunate boy by calling him "Saint Hugh."—New York Sun

NEED AMERICAN FLAG

Law Requires Each School to Display National Banner Every Day.

A United States flag not less than four feet two inches by eight feet and made of good flag bunting, a flag staff and the necessary appli-equipment, according to the state law, and school officials who neglect to supply them are liable to fine or imprisonment or both. The law also provides that the flag must be displayed either inside or outside the school building during school hours.

As this law has been disregarded in so many districts because of the carelessness or indifference of school officials, an effort is being made by the Department of Public Instruction to have county commissioners and teachers insist upon the furnishing of a suitable flag and its display according to law. In one enterprising rural school the girls' sewing class made the flag for the school as domestic art work.

VOL. 32. NUMBER 9

CHARLEVOIX, MICHIGAN, WEDNESDAY, MARCH 4, 1914

PRICE $1.50 PER YEAR

INCOMES UNDER $3000 UNAFFECTED

New Farmers Should Compute Their Incomes Over This Amount.

BUT FEW IN THIS COUNTY

Whose Yearly Profits Will Compel Them to Pay Tax.

Returns for Last Year Should Be Made to Internal Revenue Collector by First Day of March—Method Explained.

If a farmer is so fortunate as to have a net income of over $3000 a year in case he is a bachelor, or $4000 if married, he is subject to the income tax, and under the law each individual must make return to the internal revenue collector of his district on or before the first day of March if he has a net income of $3000 or over ($2500 for the 10 months of 1913). While the interest of most farmers in this subject is purely academic, the Department of Agriculture has received inquiries indicating that some wish to know just what is required of them under the new law.

The income tax law of Oct. 3, 1913, places a tax of one per cent. upon all net incomes of over $3000, with an additional tax on incomes of $20,000 or more. The first question arising in the minds of most people is what constitutes a net income. For a man receiving a regular salary or a business man with a good system of bookkeeping it is easy to determine, whether or not his income is taxable. But for the farmer who receives no stated income, and who often fails to keep accurate account of receipts and expenditures, it is more difficult to calculate his net income.

In order that farmers may be posted on the income tax as it may concern them, the following information has been furnished by the Internal Revenue Bureau of the Treasury Department:

In general, an income consists of amounts derived from salaries, wages or compensation for personal service paid to any form; also from professions, businesses, sales or dealings in property, or from rents, interests on bonds or mortgages, dividends on stocks, or other incomes from investments. These items constitute gross income, from which there should be deducted the expenses of carrying on the business; interest paid on indebtedness; worthless debts charged off; losses by fire, storm or shipwreck not covered by insurance; exhaustion, wear and tear of property, and any income upon which the income tax has already been deducted at the source, as, for instance, dividends on the stock of a corporation which has already paid the tax on its earnings.

The provisions regarding net incomes of $3000 apply only to unmarried persons or to married persons not living with wife or husband. A husband and wife living together are entitled to an exemption of $4000 on their aggregate income. This means that in case the wife has a separate income if this added to the husband's income amounts to $4000 the total is subject to the tax; or, if the wife has no separate income, the husband's income is taxable only in case it reaches $4000. But a return must be made if the aggregate income of both is $2500 for the year 1913. The joint exemption, however, would be $3333.33.

In arriving at his net income the farmer should start with his gross income. This would consist of any items of the kind above enumerated and especially all receipts from the sale of products of every description from the farm. This would include all money received for produce and animals sold and for the wool and hides of animals slaughtered if the wool and hides are sold, but the amounts actually paid as purchase money for the animals sold or killed during the year. When the animals raised by the owner are sold, or slaughtered, however, their value should not be deducted.

From the gross income there should be deducted amounts of money actually paid as expenses for operating the farm and producing the farm products, live stock, etc. This would include hired farm labor, farm supplies purchased that are necessary to carry on the business and not an investment that represents principal, etc. Expenses for repairs on farm property may be deducted, provided the amount deducted does not exceed the amount spent for such repairs during the year for which the return is made. The cost of replacing tools or machinery may also be deducted to the extent that the cost of the new articles does not exceed the value of the old. No deduction may be made for the cost of additional farm machinery, but credit may be allowed for the annual depreciation in the value of such machinery. For example, if a machine costs $100 and is regarded as good for ten years of service the annual depreciation would be 10 percent, and a deduction of $10 each year could be made on this account as part of the expense of operating the farm.

The expense of supporting the family, however, cannot be deducted from the gross income. Among items for which credit is not allowed are expense for medical attendance, life insurance, store accounts, insurance on dwellings, family supplies, wages of domestic servants, and cost of board, room or house rent for family or personal use. In case an individual owns his residence he cannot deduct the estimated value of his rent. But a tenant operating a rented farm as proprietor may deduct the rent of the farm as a part of the expense of his business. Farmers are not required to include in their income the produce taken from the farm and consumed by the family. Only produce sold off the farm is to be included. A farmer is not entitled to a deduction for his own labor or for the expense of feeding live stock. He may, however, deduct such items as cost of fertilizer and other supplies and materials which are used up in the course of his operations.

The law provides that for the year 1913 the tax shall be computed only on the net income for the 10 months from March 1st to December 31st and that returns shall be made on the basis of five-sixths of the year. Therefore if the net income for the last ten months of 1913 amounts to $2500 or more a return on Form 1040 is required. For the ten months of 1913 every single person is allowed $2500 exemption and in the case of husband and wife living together $3333.33 exemption. In computing the net income for this period deductions should be made for only five-sixths of the amounts properly allowable for the whole year.

LAST NUMBER FRIDAY NIGHT

Roland A. Nichols to Deliver One of His Famous Lectures.

Noted Lecturer Last to Appear in Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course.

The last number of the Citizens' Lecture and Entertainment Course will take place at Charlevoix Theatre Friday evening, March 6th.

From what we can learn, the last number will be one of the best, as Roland A. Nichols is highly spoken of by the press wherever he has delivered his lectures. Nichols was born on a farm on the Western Reserve in Ohio, aspired to a higher education and for eleven years worked his way to his coveted degree. For ten years he was a minister in Worcester, Massachusetts, and Chicago, in the latter city serving as pastor of Jackson Boulevard Christian church. For six years he has divided his time between the evangelistic field and the lecture platform.

In commenting on his lecture in that city the Hobart (Okla.) Democrat says:

"There is something about Roland A. Nichols that bespeaks a broad fellowship—that twinkle in his eye—a firmness in his grip—not only a man with a cultured mind but with a big heart. He looks into the faces of his hearers when he talks and does not indulge in any fantastic verbiage. If a fiction is almost perfect. He is a man who will get close to the hearts of his fellows, and therein lies the secret of his success."

"HIGHER EDUCATION" ASSAILED

M. A. C. J-Hop Arouses Ire of Commissioner Helme.

Semi-Panic is Created in Educational Circles at Lansing by His Attack.

State Dairy and Food Commissioner Jas. Helme, practical farmer and candidate for the Democratic nomination for congress against Representative Beakes of the Second Michigan district, created a semi-panic in educational circles at Lansing when he issued a statement in bitter denunciation of "higher education" as it is conducted in most of the schools and colleges of the country to-day.

"The more I see of your 'higher education' the more I think we are only throwing away a pile of money," Commissioner Helme said.

His wrath was aroused by the newspaper descriptions of the recent "J" hop, the big social event of the year at the Michigan Agricultural College at East Lansing.

"I am informed," Helme said, "that the decorations, orchestra, etc., for this function cost $1000 and that the total cost of ball frolics, favors, etc., totalled $5000."

"To me such expenditures are absolutely criminal. If the agricultural college is meant for anything it is to educate young men and women for farm life. If it doesn't do this it ought to be closed up."

"How many girls after wearing hundreds of dollar dresses in ball rooms decorated with a thousand dollars' worth of flowers and receiving sterling powder pencils (what-eyer those are, and I have been in hundreds of farmhouses and have never seen or heard of such a thing) will be contented to be farmers' wives and settle down to life in the country? These things make them discontented with the farm and make the lure of the white lights of the city stronger."

"And the young men at the M.A.C. 'J' hop received leather cigarette cases embossed with the seal of the college. Great heaven! What crimes are committed in the name of agriculture. Where does the cigarette case belong in actual farm life?"

"In the name of 'higher education' a new statue of agriculture should be erected on the college campus. Let it be the figure of a half-clad dancing maiden; over her head a crossed cigarette and powder pencil and underneath the motto: 'In Hoc Signo Vinces.'"

HUNTING SEASON CLOSED

Under New Law Closed Season Commences on all Birds and Animals.

On March 1st the closed season on almost everything commenced. It is a sort of Lent for the sportsman. Even rabbits cannot be hunted under the new state laws. The Weeks-McLean law passed by congress has done away with spring duck shooting and no birds can be killed until next fall. In fact the closed season on hunting, which began Sunday, applies to practically everything.

The closed season on fishing also started March 1st, from which date no more black bass can be caught in Michigan. The ban stays on till June 15th. Anyone caught with a black bass in his possession is liable to prosecution and a stiff fine.

Small fish like blue gills, sunfish and others of this type may be caught and sold. Speckled bass may also be caught, but may not be sold.

To be found carrying a gun in the woods after March 1 is prima facie evidence that a man is violating the game laws.

Roundabout Route.

ABOUT 2000 WILL PAY INCOME TAX

Those Are Figures for Western Michigan by Clapperton.

Charlevoix Has No Merchants or Farmers Who Come Under the New Law.

Collector of Internal Revenue Clapperton of Grand Rapids has completed his count of income tax returns for his district and finds that 1700 individuals have filed their certificates. Corporations have been slow in filing their returns and only about one-half of the $500 under his jurisdiction have complied with the law thus far. The law provides that all returns must be in by March 1st or the taxpayers will be liable to a fine of 50 per cent. of the total tax and an additional fine of $1000 besides. It is impossible to estimate the number of individuals liable to this tax. Many have waited for more explicit rulings or owing to inability to make a plain statement and tomorrow the collector's desk will be piled high with these delayed returns, some of which will be defective and have to be returned for amending. When the returns have been accepted and placed on file the tax will be due June 1st and payable on or before then.

The collector looks for a large increase in the revenues of his office through this tax. His receipts under the old law for the year ending June 1st, 1913, were $977,004.11 and it cost the district 1.7 cents for each dollar collected. Some corporations have sworn to a pretty poor business last year, one even filing an affidavit disclosing but $3, on which the tax would be three cents. Corporation returns are sent in Washington, where they undergo a duplicate system of examination and recording. The clerks in Mr. Clapperton's office have been working overtime for the past two months and their work has just fairly begun, owing to the fact that the corporations are so slow and also that many will send in faulty returns at the very last, through inability to make them out correctly.

Here in Charlevoix many have received the blanks for a statement, but the number who will pay an assessment will be very few. No merchant has admitted a revenue which would make him liable and there are no farmers who can do it.

MUST BE QUALIFIED

Music and Drawing Teachers Must Have Certificates to Draw Pay.

That there is no distinction under the law in regard to the qualification of music and drawing teachers is the ruling of the Department of Public Instruction, and boards of education that employ special teachers who are not legally qualified will lose a share of the primary money.

Teachers in music and drawing are qualified either by passing the regular examination in the common school branches or by certificates granted by the Superintendent of Public Instruction to persons who have completed two years of work in music or one year of work in drawing in an approved institution. Arrangement is also made in the law for an examination in music by the supervisors of music in the state normal schools.

There is no provision in the present law to recognize graduates of training schools in other lines of special work as domestic science, manual training and the commercial branches. Some legislation in this matter will be urged by the Department of Public Instruction at the next session of the legislature.

Emmett County Fair Dates.

At a recent meeting of the board of directors of the Emmett County Agricultural Society it was decided to hold their fair this year September 15, 16, 17 and 18. Extra inducements will also be made to secure the best individual farm exhibits and exhibits by the various county fairs. One thousand dollars was also voted for the races.

MARCH IS HERE

Bears Out Old Adage of Coming In Like a Lion—May Not Go Out Like a Lamb.

March came in like a lion. It bore out the old adage and the oldest inhabitant expects the month will go out like a lamb.

Early Saturday evening there was but little wind and the temperature was dropping slightly. Within an hour the change came and as the wind rose and whistled the glass registered lower and lower and by morning it was extremely cold. All day Sunday the cold wind made everyone uncomfortable and hard to keep the homes warm. Monday's change was indeed welcome.

MEECH AS ASSESSOR

Appointed by Mayor Nichols at Council Meeting Monday Evening.

Darwin E. Meech was appointed as city assessor by Mayor Nichols Monday evening at the regular council meeting. Mr. Meech is one of the most capable men in the city that could have been chosen to fill this appointment, as he has served as assessor during previous years.

During the next four weeks he will make an effort to compare all descriptions on the city tax roll with those at the register of deeds office, and for the first time in years turn over to the board of review a correct roll, as was suggested by the Committee of Twenty-one, published in the Courier some weeks ago.

GAVE UP LIFE FOR DEAR ONES

Father Plunges Into Burning House Thinking Children Were in Their Bed.

Roof Collapses as He Reaches the Second Floor and He is Burned to Death.

Believing his children to be in peril in his burning house, Henry Vanderark of Ellsworth, plunged into the burning structure and was burned to death. A moment after he entered the burning building the roof collapsed, burying him in the ruins.

The fire occurred about 8:00 o'clock Sunday evening. Vanderark and his wife had put their two children, Ethel, aged four years and James, aged two years, to bed in an upstairs room. Shortly afterwards they left the house and went to the Orient Hotel for a few minutes chat with friends. They had been there but a short time when they heard the fire alarm sounded. Vanderark rushed out of the hotel and saw that his home was a mass of flames, and realizing that he had left his children asleep in bed, made a desperate effort to save them. The position his charred remains were in when found indicated that he had reached the room where the children had been sleeping, and had fallen across the bed when overcome by the smoke and heat.

From what can be learned the children had been awakened by the crackling of the flames, and had made their way out of the burning building, when they were taken care of by the neighbors. Vanderark, not knowing this, and thinking only of their danger, made the desperate attempt to save them which cost him his life.

The fire started from one of the stoves and the house and contents were totally destroyed.

SHAWLEY SELLS OUT

Disposes of Stock of Goods to Harry E. McHugh, Who Will Consolidate Business.

After seven years of continuous business, Thomas Shawley disposed of his stock of goods Friday to Harry E. McHugh, who will consolidate the stores and continue the business on a larger scale than ever.

Since going into business three years ago Mr. McHugh has built up a splendid patronage, and in consolidating the two stores, will have a splendid assortment of goods in all the various lines he carries. It has not been decided as yet in which location he will carry on the business. Adv. 911

GREAT THINGS AND NOBLE DEEDS

That Have Been Done By Women Often Ignored By Public Speakers.

Miss Himes Speaks on "The Influence of Women Upon the Destiny of Our Country."

The topic "The Influence of Women Upon the Destiny of Our Country" was discussed by Miss Jessie M. Himes at the last meeting of the W. C. T. U. She spoke of the fact that girls as well as boys liked to do things requiring ability, courage and endurance; that girls also had "day dreams," and that lecturers and other public speakers often ignored the fact that great things had been accomplished by women in our past history and that their lives and noble deeds could well be held up before the young girls of the present generation as an inspiration and an example.

The self-sacrifice of the Pilgrim foremothers was as great as that of the forefathers; the broadmindedness of Mrs. Anne Hutchinson, who helped to lay the foundations of religious toleration in the New World, should be commemorated together with the name of Roger Williams, for together they founded Rhode Island.

The mother of Washington was not only a good and devoted mother; she was a good business woman, a successful farmer and possessed marked executive ability. Women in the "good old days" did not live lives of sheltered ease in the home. They shared not only in the hardships but in the responsibilities of pioneer life. Women during the Civil War practically carried on the work of the country, north as well as south, in the fields and in the factories.

Julia Ward Howe, author of "The Battle Hymn of the Republic," and Harriet Beecher Stowe, who wrote "Uncle Tom's Cabin," helped to free four million slaves, and their writings rank with the world's masterpieces in poetry and fiction.

Mary Lyon, founder of Mt. Holyoke, the first college for women, proved to the world that girls had minds capable of being educated beyond reading and writing.

Clara Barton's memory deserves greater honor than the name of any general, north or south. She also commanded armies, but her soldiers wore the Red Cross instead of bayonets. Wherever war or pestilence, fire or flood brought suffering to the human race, Clara Barton and her Red Cross army hastened to the work of relief.

Who can measure the mighty work accomplished by Frances K. Willard? In years to come, when this nation is finally freed from the bondage of the liquor traffic, countless millions will rise up and call her blessed. Women living to-day are carrying forward the work for the good of humanity that Frances Willard began.

Julia C. Lathrop, in charge of the Childs' Welfare Bureau, is working to save the 300,000 babies who each year give up the unequal struggle against impure water, dirt and disease.

Jane Addams, perhaps the leading woman in America to-day, large of heart and great of mind, philanthropist and law giver, has created in the heart of the slum district of Chicago an oasis of beauty and of law-abiding order.

And the influence of women for good is ever growing stronger and deeper. There is not an occupation to-day in which women are not engaged. As lawyer, doctor, nurse, minister, missionary, teacher, social worker, author, police matron, the controlling motive seems to be the protection of child life and the safeguarding of the home.

GAVE DOCTORS ENOUGH TO BUY FARM--RESTORED IN ONE DAY

Battle Creek Man Finds New Life in First Dose of Wonderful Remedy.

William N. Goss, 218 Aldrich St., Battle Creek, was troubled with stomach and intestinal ailments for years. Year after year he spent endless time and money with specialists and in expensive treatments that failed.

He took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy at last and wonderful results followed. When he had taken only one bottle he wrote:

"I got more relief out of one bottle of your wonderful stomach remedy than I did in all my years of treating with specialists."

"If I had all the money I have spent for doctors' bills I could buy a farm. I will certainly recommend Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy."

Mr. Goss' experience is like those of thousands of others who have taken this remarkable remedy with such astonishing results. It is known everywhere because of its merit. The first dose proves Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucoid accretions and poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from ailments of the stomach, liver and bowels. Many declare that it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure that it has saved their lives.

Because of its success there are many imitations, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing among people they know about--or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting street, Chicago, Illinois, for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

For sale at all drug stores.

Can't the Courier get John Fol life to continue his story of "50 Years Ago" a while longer? He could write for three months and then not exhaust history. One man said he would give $500 to have the story in book form.

At 8:30 Sunday evening the writer saw a fire over at Ellsworth, and calling central we found that it was the house owned by Mr. Vanskiver, just across the street from the Orient hotel, occupied by Henry Vanderark, and which at the time was a mass of flames. Mr. and Mrs. Vanderark had put the children to bed, locked the doors, and gone to the hotel for a short visit. Ed Boss discovered the fire first, and gave the alarm. Mr. Vanderark rushed to his home and thinking the children were in the burning building, went into the house despite the efforts of many who tried to hold him. He reached the room where he supposed the children were, when the roof collapsed and he was burned to death, his body being found lying across the bed, where he supposed the little tots were asleep. The children had been awakened by the fire and had escaped from the building and were being cared for when Mr. Vanderark went into the house. The house and contents were entirely destroyed. The funeral was held Tuesday. Our hearts beat in sympathy for the bereaved ones.

LESS DYSPEPSIA NOW HERE'S THE REASON

The fact that there is less dyspepsia and indigestion in this community than there used to be is largely, we believe, due to the extensive use of Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets, hundreds of packages of which we have sold. No wonder we have faith in them. No wonder we are willing to offer them to you for trial entirely at our risk.

Among other things they contain Pepsin and Bismuth, two of the greatest digestive aids known to medical science. They soothe the inflamed stomach, allay pain, check heartburn and distress, help to digest the food and tend to quickly restore the stomach to its natural, comfortable, healthy state.

There is no red tape about our guarantee. It means just what it says. We'll ask you no questions. Your word is enough for us. If Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets don't restore your stomach to health and make your digestion easy and comfortable we want you to come back for your money. They are sold only at the 2000 Rexall Stores and in this town only by us. Three sizes, 25c, 50c and $1.00--The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Prop., Charlevoix, Michigan.

Cough Syrup For Cows.

Sometimes a dry, harsh cough is an obstinate condition to correct, but the following is a good, simple cough syrup that should be kept on hand for coughing cows: Shimmer together over a slow fire two ounces of oil of tar, three ounces extract of belladonna, three ounces sirup of squill, the pound granulated sugar, one-half pint water. Constantly stir while melting until it appears like a thick syrup. Give one tablespoonful on the tongue twice daily. You may judge the quantity in making by the number of rows in treat.

Shoe Boils.

The more shoe boils is a misnomer. An improper term for the condition. It is true that sometimes the shoe causes these enlargements, but more often it does not. The damage done to elbow is brought about by the animal attempting to rise when the fore feet are extended. The animal gives one violent lunge to get up, and the bruising is done when it pounds down just before the upward direction is taken. Having it removed by a competent man is the only safe and safe remedy.

Keep a Few Sheep.
Sheep raising was considered profitable under ordinary ranch conditions several years ago when both wool and mutton were cheaper than they are now. Why wouldn't it be profitable to keep a few sheep on a general farm where there is a good pasture?

It's The Best Polish I Ever Used

That's What Every One Says Who Tries

Black Silk Stove Polish

DON'T imagine for a moment that all brands of stove polish are the same. Don't get the idea that to keep a nice glossy shine on your stove you must black it every few days. It's not a question of oil-repeated application. It's a question of the stove polish to use.

Black Silk Stove Polish is so much better than other stove polishes that there is absolutely no comparison--it is a class all by itself. It doesn't to the iron--becomes a part of the stove. It makes old stoves look like new and lasts four times as long as any other shine.

Get a can and give it a trial. Try it on your parlor stove, your cook stove, or your gas range. If you do not find it the best stove polish you ever used, your dealer is authorized to refund your money. Black Silk Stove Polish has been made by the same formula and sold under one name for 30 years.

Here is what some of the buyers will say:

"I sent to you for a can of Black Silk Stove Polish and found it so much better than any I had ever used that I asked my hardware dealer to order a supply. He did so, and is now selling nearly every tin in the place your polish. I had no idea there could be such a difference in stove polishes."

"I was visiting friends and they used Black Silk Stove Polish on their stoves. It made the best shine I ever saw, and after blacking, the polish did not rub or dust off. It is way ahead of any polish I have ever used."

Ask Your Dealer for Black Silk Stove Polish and refuse a counterfeit brand. Get the best. Made in U. S. A. by the quality.

Black Silk Stove Polish Works, Sterling, Ill.

Use Black Silk Air-Drill for grates, stoves, radiators, etc. Prevents rusting. Not affected by heat or cold. Produces a permanent glossy black surface. Can, with brush for applying enamel, only 25 cents. Ask your dealer.

Use Black Silk Metal Polish for nickel, brass, silverware or tinware. It has no equal for use on automobiles.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal
BY
REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt. Jefferson Locke insinuates himself into the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Jolson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intriguing to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Runnels, master of transportation.

CHAPTER IX.

The Truth About Mrs. Cortlandt.

EDITH CORTLANDT was not the sort to permit delay. At lunch she introduced Kirk to the master of transportation of the Panama railroad, saying:

"Mr. Runnels has offered to take you out through the cut this afternoon and explain the work to you."

Runnels was a straight, well set up, serious young man. Anthony was drawn to him instantly, for there was no affectation about him.

"She's wonderful," he remarked a moment later, as he and Kirk descended the hotel steps together. "She told Colonel Jolson he'd just have to find you a position, and I have been delegated to show you about."

"The Cortlandts seem to have considerable influence for outsiders. I thought I'd like to begin at the bottom."

Runnels glanced at his companion quickly.

"Outsiders? You don't call them outsiders? She knows everybody and everything in this country. She's the whole diplomatic service. Take the Colombian trouble, for instance."

"What trouble?"

"When Panama seceded, she manipulated that, or at least Steve Cortlandt did under her direction. It was one of the cleverest exploits on record. Colombia wouldn't let us build the canal, so Panama seceded. War was declared, but the United States interfered in time to prevent bloodshed. By the time the excitement had died out we had begun digging. She knows Central America like the palm of her hand. When she says Kirk Anthony wants a position, we hire him jump about and see that he gets it. Oh, you'll have any job you want."

The two passed through the railroad gates and took their places in the little car. When they were under way Runnels went on: "I am supposed to show you this end of the work and tell you what it all means. The ditch will be about fifty miles long, and, roughly speaking, the work is in three parts—the dredging and harbor building at sea level on each end of the canal, the lock work and the excavations on the upper levels. That dam you saw building at Gatun will form a lake about thirty miles long—quite a fishpond, eh? When a westbound ship arrives, for instance, it will be mixed through the Gatun locks, three of them, and then sail along, eighty-five feet above the ocean, across the lake and into a channel dug right through the hills until it reaches the locks at Pedro Miguel. Then it will be lowered to a smaller lake five miles long, then down again to the level of the Pacific. An eastbound ship will reverse the process. Get the idea?"

"Sure. It sounds easy."

"You will start in with the P. R. R., Mr. Anthony, under my despotism way."

"I know a little about railroading."

"So much the better. There's a big railroad man by your name in the states. Are you related?"

"I believe so," Kirk answered, quietly. "Go ahead with the lesson."

"The canal zone is a strip of land ten miles wide running across the Isthmus—really an American colony, you know, for we govern it, police it and all that. As for the work itself, well, the fellows at the two ends of the canal are dredging night and day to complete their part. The lock builders are laying concrete like mad to get their share done first, the chaps in the big cut are boring through the hills like moles and breaking steam shovel records every week, while we railroad men take care of the whole shooting match. Of course, there are other departments—sanitary, engineering, commissary, and so forth—all doing their share, but that is the general scheme. Everybody is trying to break records. Lord! It's fierce."

"Why didn't you quit?" suggested Anthony.

"Quit? What for? Good Lord! We like it. Here we are at Pedro Miguel, by the way. We'll be into the cut shortly."

To his left Anthony beheld another scene somewhat similar to the one at Gatun. Other movable steel cranes with huge wide flung arms, rose out of another chasm in which were extensive concrete workings. From a distance the towers resembled parts of a half constructed cantilever bridge of tremendous height. Another army was hilling at the bottom of the pit, more cars shunted back and forth, more rock crushers rumbled; but, before Kirk's eye had photographed more, than a small part, the motor car had passed and was rolling out upon a bridge spanning the canal itself. To the northward appeared an opening cut through the hills and Runnels said, simply:

"Celebra!"

A moment later he announced: "We leave the P. R. R. tracks here and switch in on the I. C. C. Now you'll begin to see something."

Down into the cut the little car went, and at last Anthony saw the active pulsating heart of this stupendous undertaking. The low range was severed by a gorge blasted out by human hands. It was a mountain valley in the making. High up on its sides were dirt and rock trains, dozens of compressed air drills, their spurs resembling the masts of a fleet of cutboats at anchor—behind these grimy, powerful steam shovels which rooted and grunted quite like iron hogs. Along the tracks at various levels flowed a constant current of traffic; long lines of empty cars crept past the shovels, then, filled to overflowing, sped away northward up the valley, to return again and again.

Nowhere was there any idleness, nowhere a cold machine or a man at rest. On every hand were smoke and steam and sweat. The drills chugged steadily, the hungry iron hogs gouged out the trails the drills had loosened, the trains rolled past at intervals of a moment or so. Lines of electric wire, carried upon low wooden "shears," paralleled the tracks, bearing the white hot sparks that rent the mountain. At every switch a negro fireman, crunched beneath a slanting sheet of corrugated iron, seeking shelter alike from flying fragments and the blazing sun. From beneath the drills came occasional subterranean explosions; then geysers of muddy water rose in the air. Under the snouts of the steam shovels "dobe" shovels went off as bowlders were riven into smaller fragments. Now and then an excited tooting of whistles gave warning of a bigger blast as the flagmen checked the flow of traffic, indicating with arms upraised that the ground was "coming up." Thereupon a brief lull occurred; men hid themselves, the work held its breath, as it were. But while the detonations still echoed and before the flying missiles had ceased to shower the human ants were moving at their hills once more, the wheels were turning again, the jaws of the iron hogs were clanking.

Through this upheaval the motorcar penetrated, dodging trains of "dats," which moved slightly to afford them passage up and down over the volcanic furrows at the bottom of the gorge or along some shelf beneath which the foundations were being dug. At times a shovel reached out its five yard steel jaw and gently cleared the rails of debris, or boosted some howliver from the path with all the skill of a giant hand and fingers. Up and down the canyon rolled spasmodic rumbles, like boulders from a fleet of battleships.

Mile after mile the sightseers rolled on, past scenes of never varying activity—past more shovels, more groups of drills, more dirt trains, more regiments of men—Runnels explaining, Kirk marveling until he was forced to exclaim:

"I had no idea it was so big. It doesn't seem as if they'd ever finish it."

"Oh, we'll finish it if we're let alone. You see there is too much politics in it; we never know how long our jobs will last. If some senator whose vote is needed on an administration matter whims at his position for his wife's brother, he could get it."

"I suppose I'm an example."

Runnels looked at him squarely before answering. "You are," said he, "although I wasn't thinking of you when I spoke. It's something we all feel, however."

Anthony flushed as he answered: "I don't remember ever taking anything I wasn't entitled to, and I didn't think when I was shored in here that I'd shove some other fellow out. I suppose there is room at the bottom, and a fellow can work up."

"If he has it in him."

"I think I'll start there."

"I'm afraid you're a poor business man," said Runnels.

"Listen!" Kirk admitted. "But I've an idea, I can make good if I try."

"If you feel that way I certainly will help you," said the other warmly. "Of course I'll try to help you anyhow, but—I like your spirit. With Mrs. Cortlandt to back me up, I'll see you go forward as fast as you deserve."

By now they were out of the cut and once more upon the main line at Bas Obispo, heading back toward the Pacific.

"You asked me to tell you something about her," Runnels continued. "I'm not sure my information is entirely correct, but, knowing who she is, I think I understand why she is in Panama. It is politics—big politics. The Spizgodes have an election next year, and it is necessary to get our wires well laid before it comes off. General Alfarez will probably be the next president."

"Alfarez! Not Ramon?"

"His father. You know we Americans occupy a peculiar position here, set down as we are in the midst of an alien people who hate us. Oh, they hate us, all right—all except a few of the better class."

"Why?"

"There are a good many reasons. For one thing, there's a sort of racial nativity. Besides, when we stole Panama we made the Colombians sore, and all Central American besides, for they realized that once we Yankees got a foothold here we'd hang on and not only dominate this country, but all the neighboring republics as well."

"I had gathered something of the sort—but I had no idea there was so much in it. But we don't want these jungle countries," said Kirk.

"That's where you're wrong. By and by we'll need room to expand, and when that time comes we'll agree south. Meanwhile our frightened government is smoothing the way, and there's nobody better fitted for the preliminary work than Mr. Stephen Cortlandt of Washington. D. C. husband and clerk of the smartest woman in the business of chaperoning administrations. He's the figurehead behind which she works. She's a rich woman, she loves the game—her father was the greatest diplomat of his time, you know—and she married Cortlandt so she could play it. Any other man would have served as well, though I've heard that he showed promise before she blotted him out and absorbed him. But now he's merely her power of attorney."

Anthony pursed his lips into a whistle of astonishment.

"It's been a good thing for him," Runnels ran on, evidently warmed to his subject. "She's made his reputation; he has money and position. For my part I'd rather remain insignificant and have a real wife."

"Don't they love each other?"

"Nobody knows. She's carved out of ice, and as for him, well, gratitude is a good deal like rust—in time it destroys the thing it clings to. I suppose I'm talking too much, but others would tell you the same things."

It was with quite a different eye that Kirk looked upon his host and hostess that evening. To his genuine liking for the latter was now added a worshipful admiration and a lavish gratification at her regard, which rather put her at a distance.

"It's all settled," said he. "I'm going to work in a few days as train collector."

"What?" Mrs. Cortlandt turned upon him sharply. "Runnels didn't offer you that sort of position? Her eyes were dark with indignation. Kirk promptly came to the defense of his new friend.

"No, I asked for it."

"Oh, I see. Well, he will do much better by you than that."

"I don't want anything better to start with."

"But, my dear boy, a collector is merely a conductor. He takes tickets."

"Sure! I can do that. I might fall at something hard."

"No, no, no! I'll see that you don't fall. Don't you understand?"

"I understand a lot more than I did, Mrs. Cortlandt. That's why I don't want to rob some chap of a job he's entitled to, and I shouldn't. There's a collector quitting shortly."

"Is that really the reason, or do you think the work will be easy?"

Kirk affirmed uncomfortably. "Oh, I'm not trying to dodge anything," he maintained. "On the contrary, the most amusing thing has happened—something I can't quite understand—I—I really want to work. Finny, isn't it? I didn't know people ever got that way, but—I'd like to help build this canal."

"But a conductor? Why, you're a gentleman."

"My dad was a brakeman."

"Don't be foolish. Runnels talks too much. He'll offer you something better than that."

But Kirk was obdurate. "I'd prefer to start in as confidential adviser to the canal commission; of course, but I'd be a 'fixer,' and my father would say 'I told you so.' I must make good for his sake, even if it's only counting cars or flicking postage stamps. Besides, it isn't exactly the square thing to take money for work that somebody else does for you."

Mrs. Cortlandt laughed with a touch of annoyance.

"I think a few weeks in cap and buttons will cure you of this quixotic sentiment. Meanwhile I must admit it is refreshing." She stared unseeingly at the street lights for a moment. "But see here, Kirk, don't the collectors live in Colon?"

"I don't know," he replied, startled and flattered by her first use of his given name.

"I'll look it up tomorrow. You know I—Mr. Cortlandt and I will be in Panama, and I prefer to have you here. You see, we can do more for you." A little later she broke into a low laugh. "It seems strange to go driving with a conductor."

CHAPTER X.

A Night at Taboga.

DESPITE his great contentment in Mrs. Cortlandt's society, Kirk found himself waiting with growing impatience for his active duties to begin. Curiously enough, this feeling was somehow connected with the thought of Edith herself. Why this should be so he did not trouble to inquire. They had become the best of good friends, he told himself, a consummation for which he had devoutly wished, yet for some indefinable reason he was dissatisfied.

He decided that he needed exercise and determined to make a tramp through the country, but on the evening before the day he had set for his excursion his plans were upset by a note from Mrs. Cortlandt, which the clerk handed him. It ran:

Dear Kirk—Stephen has arranged an

ONE of the things that puzzles the average citizen is the fact that the most insistent critics of the public school system are those who either have no children to be educated or have families who have passed through the courses. As a rule those who have children in the school are willing to co-operate with the school board, and teachers instead of bending their energies to a long the line of fault finding. Street gossip should be passed by. If you hear of any, go to the schools and visit each of the grades. See what each teacher is accomplishing; then you can form an intelligent, unbiased opinion whether the reports you have heard are true or untrue. Do not pass judgment upon anyone until you are acquainted with the actual facts.

PRACTICALLY all the cities in the state of Michigan that have not already adopted new charters are planning to do so in the near future. In nearly every instance they are working along the commission government or city manager plan.

THE seed catalogue is now the official textbook of the average citizen. The great problem of the future will be to try to make the ideas laid down in this work realities in the home garden during the next few months.

THE common council, from all appearances, seems to be doing pretty fair work without the aid of the board of public works. An inactive board is usually a detriment to progress, whether in city or private affairs.

A PHILADELPHIA chief of police was converted at a revival meeting and declares he will suppress all gambling and vice. Anything is good that will remind an official of his oath of office.

SOME people are possessed of the idea that the proper tool to use in boosting a community is a hammer instead of a lever.

THE trouble with our city and county politics is that the people are beginning to see through them.

WILLIAM BLACK DEAD
 Had lived in This Section for the last Twenty Eight Years.

William Black, for twenty-eight years a resident of Charlevoix Co., died Tuesday afternoon at his home in Marion township.

Mr. Black was one of the most progressive and well known farmers in the county and had lived on his farm three miles south of the city for a number of years. For some time he had been an invalid and two weeks ago he suffered a paralytic stroke, from which he never rallied.

Besides his wife he leaves three children, two daughters and a son, to mourn their loss. The funeral will be held Friday afternoon at two o'clock.

THE CITY PRIMARIES

Party Vote Very Light and But Little Interest Manifested.

That it takes more than two party tickets without opposition to stir up any political enthusiasm in the city of Charlevoix was shown to-day by the light vote cast.

At 3 o'clock this afternoon there had been but forty-six ballots voted in the second ward and a correspondingly low number in the other two wards. Many errors are being made in voting the tickets under the new primary law and without a doubt many will be cast out. Some seem to carry the impression that they can vote outside their party ticket, which, if done, will not count for any of the candidates. In our next issue we will give in detail the results in each ward.

Horse B. Hipp, Esq., East Jordan, Michigan:

Dear Sir,—I notice in the Charlevoix Courier of February 18th that you people who have charge of our county fair would like very much to see it made a great success as an educational factor in our community, and I see nothing to hinder it if rightly managed. Therefore, according to your request, I wish to make a few suggestions.

I think it a great mistake to pay such enormous prizes to the races. Are not those who follow the race courses almost entirely outside parties? Hence our money for such goes outside and no benefit derived from it. Who cares to raise a race horse? Is not the fair for the benefit of agriculture and stock raising, also educational?

Where is there any benefit whatever to agriculture or stock raising or to the cause of education that has been derived from horse racing?

I claim the opposite effect has been the case, that horse racing is demoralizing. It tends to gambling. It tends to draw our young men away from the farm and to become fast young men and immoral.

On the other hand, if all of that large amount of money were put into largely increased premiums on farm stock and farm products you would see a fair worth attending, with double or triple the amount of stock you are now in the habit of getting and also fully as much of an increase in all agricultural products.

But you say you could not get the gate receipts without the races. I beg to differ. I have talked with a large number of farmers among our leading men and stock raisers. They all tell me there is no inducement to take stock to our county fair in the way of premiums, as the premiums are so very small and always uncertain, that it don't pay. So we say give us some show and we will bring you some stock worth looking at, as also our vegetables and grains. We say put out the races or have farmers' races with prizes comparing with stock prizes and make our county fair an agricultural one in fact as well as in name.

I thank you for this opportunity.
 B. P. Wilkinson.

Book Evolution.
 "Books" have progressed from the days when they were only wooden rods or bits of bark. For the derivation which connects "book" directly with "boch," both having been "boch" in Anglo-Saxon, is the favorite one "Buechstaben," the German word for letters of the alphabet, means literally "beech staves." Many book words go back to such vegetable origin. The Latin "liber," a book, whence comes our "library," was properly the inner bark or rind of a tree, especially of papyrus. The Greek "biblion," whence "Bible" and "bibliophile," meant merely the same thing. A "codex" was a block of wood, and "leaf" is obvious.

An Explanation.
 "There are in the United States 17,000,000 unmarried adults. Out of every 100 American men thirty-nine are unmarried. How to explain these dreadful figures?"

"This speaks with a gesture of despair, a certain philosopher," "One explanation," he continued, "may be in a dialogue I overheard at a picnic. The participants in this dialogue were a bachelor and a spinster. The bachelor said, 'I am a spinster, I am about thirty-five, she about thirty.' 'Men,' said the spinster, 'used to marry younger than they do now didn't they?' 'Yes,' answered the bachelor. 'But women used to be more willing to wash dishes than.'"—Washington Star.

A Mechanical Craving.
 That mechanical craving which Menechuck got over is a common one. My own father—with a twist toward horses—used to walk about with a bit of straw in his mouth. I have traveled across the Atlantic with a man who could not get along without a "cold cigar," and the one Iasted him from Liverpool to New York. And these notes are written by a smoker with a cold pipe in his mouth. I want a pipe, but the tobacco in it amounts to about a quarter of an ounce a week.—London Chronicle.

Nickel Coins.
 The cost of the nickel is an index of the government's profit on the coinage of minor coins. Out of one pound of compound of nickel and copper, costing about 23 cents, the government coils $4.55 worth of five cent pieces.

A Man Up a Tree

How He Got There and How He Came Down

By F. A. MITCHEL

Mademoiselle was an orphan and an heiress. She lived in the chateau of her ancestors on the banks of the river Loire with a widowed aunt, her mother's sister, who fulfilled the part, so far as possible, of mother.

While mademoiselle was a liberal giver to charity and subscribed to all the projects for the benefit of her immediate neighborhood, there was one matter in which she was considered selfish. She would permit no one to shoot on her estate.

Mademoiselle was fond of riding early during the hunting season for a bit of sport before breakfast. One morning she emerged from the chateau in shooting costume as the sun was rising above the horizon. Carrying her own gun and game bag—for she would not have an attendant—she started for some timberland at no great distance. Having gained it, she was aiming at a pheasant on the limb of a tree when she heard an "Ahem!"

Mademoiselle dropped her eyes from the bird and swept them in a scrutinizing way about her. It was then that she received the astonishment of her life. Aiming at the bird she was about to shoot was a young man in a costume which for hunting was marvelous to behold. On his head was a three cornered hat. His coat, which was covered with golden lace, flared in the skirt; from his chest extended a profusion of lace; his legs were encased in knee breeches and silk stockings, while on his shoes were enormous silver buckles. In short, he was a gentleman of the eighteenth century poaching in the twentieth on mademoiselle's estate.

For a moment the lady wondered if this gentleman were not her great-grandfather returned to his former earthly home to shoot his own birds. But he was certainly no ghost. On the contrary, he was flesh and blood and a handsome young man, with a figure and face seen to advantage in a very becoming costume. The most likely explanation of his presence was that he was a lunatic.

The man lowered his gun and turned his gaze upon the lady. Then he made a profound bow. She was temporarily relieved. Evidently he was not of the violent kind, and she must handle him in a way to prevent his becoming so. "Pardon," he said, "I would have asked your kind permission to shoot on your estate had it not been that the hour is unseasonable and I was not willing to arouse you from slumber. I am fond of shooting at this hour and was tempted to break over your rule. I now ask the permission I should otherwise have asked to shoot on your estate."

"Certainly, monsieur. Shoot as much as you wish."

"Thanks, mademoiselle. I am more pleased at your generosity than at any benefit I shall derive from it. I have secured a breakfast and that is all I wish."

He held up a brace of birds. "You are quite welcome, monsieur." "A breakfast for you, mademoiselle. I would not think of keeping game I have no right to keep."

"Do so by all means. Game is plentiful in my preserves." "Your kindness would be more acceptable if shown in another way."

"What way?" "By permitting me to carry your gun and bag."

Mademoiselle hesitated. She feared that the man wished to get her gun from her to render her defenseless, yet she did not wish to refuse him lest she irritate him. She resorted to subterfuge.

"My gun I need to kill birds. You may carry my bag if you like."

"I shall feel honored at being permitted to do so."

Meanwhile the bird had been shot and had flown away. All on time for sport had left the lady, and her only wish was to get out of the toils of the madman without being murdered. She walked on through the wood, endeavoring to conjure up some plan of escape. Presently an idea was suggested to her by seeing a bird's nest far up in a branch.

"I have never got over my childish desire for birds' nests," she said. "How I would like to go up and get that one! Alas, what is for a little girl is not for a woman?"

Her companion dropped the game bag and rested his gun against the tree. Then, without even doffing his coat, he jumped, caught a lower limb, swung himself upon it, then stepped from one limb to another till he reached the one on which the nest had been built, scrambled out on it, seized the nest and was making his way back when he heard mademoiselle say:

"Stop!" "Looking down, he saw her pointing her gun at him with her finger on the trigger. He could see that she was very much excited.

"Stay where you are," she said. "If you attempt to come down I'll shoot!" "Why, mademoiselle," said the man, "what means this change in you?"

Mademoiselle was so taken up with her own plans for having the lunatic secured that she did not hear. She was too far from the chateau to call. If she fired her gun it would be supposed that she was simply killing birds, and, now that she had noticed him, she feared she would have to kill him in self defense. What to do she did not know.

"May I ask, mademoiselle," said the man up in the tree, "what I have done to offend you?"

"Nothing, I assure you."

There was a mutual pause. The man was puzzled, and, as for the lady, how can one explain to a lunatic?

"Would you mind showing that confidence by lowering your gun? I see it is cocked. Your finger is on the trigger and trembling. The gun might go off."

There was a shout of merriment from a thicket near by, and it seemed as if pandemonium had been let loose. A dozen men and women in fantastic costumes emerged from behind trees and came trooping toward the tree. Mademoiselle stood looking at them in amazement. Nevertheless she kept her nerve.

"I was not aware," she said, "that there is a lunatic asylum in the vicinity. I supposed the gentleman up in the tree was alone in his madness."

"You have lost, Le Vergne," cried one of the men.

"Not at all," replied the man above. "On the contrary, I have won."

"Prove it."

"Mademoiselle," asked Le Vergne, "did you not give me permission to shoot in your grounds?"

"I did. I feared that if I refused you would kill me."

"You have lost, Bertier!" cried the crowd, laughing.

"Mademoiselle," said Le Vergne, "it is time that you were given an explanation of these singular proceedings. If you will permit me to come down I will enlighten you."

"Certainly, monsieur, come down."

Her gun had been already lowered. Le Vergne came down and, standing before her, deferentially said:

"Last night the officers of the Fifty-seventh of the line gave a dance in costume to some friends from Paris. We danced till morning, when, sitting over some champagne and caviare, our conversation turned upon your splendid preserves and your unwillingness to allow any one to shoot therein. I, Captain Le Vergne, bet Major Bertier that I would shoot in your grounds with your permission. I entered the preserves dressed as I am, expecting to be arrested and taken to you. I had no definite plan as to how I should extract your forgiveness and gain your permission to shoot. I intended to rely entirely on my wits."

"I was surprised to meet you so early in the morning and to find you so kindly disposed toward me. I wondered that you did not ask the reason for my strange costume, and it did not occur to me that you mistook me for a lunatic till I saw you pointing your gun at me when I was coming down with your birds' nest. Permit me to apologize for making you the subject of a bet and to offer you the birds' nest as a souvenir of the occasion."

Mademoiselle was much amused at the explanation as well as relieved at the termination of the freak. She accepted the souvenir graciously.

"I would not be satisfied, mademoiselle," said one of the ladies of the party. "If I were you, at such a paltry gift. Captain Le Vergne has won 2,000 francs from Major Bertier and can afford to offer you a much more substantial acknowledgment of your kindness in permitting him to use your preserves and especially for not shooting him for a madman when you had put him up a tree."

"You have omitted to tell me how it happens that you are all here," said mademoiselle.

"We followed Le Vergne from a distance to observe what he would do." "Now that I understand the matter you must all come home with me to breakfast."

And so it was that mademoiselle entertained at breakfast a number of guests in masquerade costume who had not slept a wink for thirty-six hours. After that she added the words "without permission" to her notice forbidding hunting on her grounds, and the prohibition was usually granted. She was also a frequent visitor to the military station from whence her breakfast guests had come, and it is reported now several years after the function, that she is about to enter the army as Mrs. Le Colonel Le Vergne.

counting for all three of us, and we are counting on you for tomorrow. It will be a really, truly picnic, with all the delightful discomforts of such affairs. You are not to know where we are going until we call for you at 8. Faithfully and mysteriously yours, EDITH CORTLANDT.

The recipient of this kind invitation tossed it aside, with a gesture of impatience. For the moment he experienced a kind of boyish resentment at having his invariable thwarted that seemed out of proportion to the cause. But the emotion soon passed.

The next morning Edith appeared upon the hotel porch. She was alone.

"Where's Mr. Cortlandt?" he inquired.

"Oh, some men arrived last night from Bocas del Toro and telephoned that they must see him today on a matter of importance. I shall have to make up to you for his absence if I am able."

"Where is to be the scene of our revel?"

"Tahoga," she said, with eyes sparkling. "You've never been there, but it's perfectly gorgeous. Please call a coach, our boat is waiting, and don't sit on the porch."

Kirk obeyed, and they went clattering down the deserted brick street. Edith leaned back, with a sigh.

"I'm so glad to get away from that hotel for a day. If you only knew it, Kirk, you've capsize the political calculations of the Panama Conservative party."

"I didn't know I had ever even rocked the boat."

"It runs back to your affair with Ramon."

"Really, did that effect it?"

"Rather. At any rate it gave an excuse for setting things in motion. There had been some doubt about the matter for a long time, and I was only too glad to exert my influence in the right direction, but this is a picnic to an enchanted island, and here we are talking politics. We mustn't be so serious. School is out, and it's vacation. I want to romp and play and get my face dirty."

The landing was thorough, and at sight of the newcomers' litters gath'ered from all sides—a pirate throng, shouting a dozen dialects and forcing Kirk to battle lustily for his luggage. Stepping into a skiff, they were rowed to a launch, and a few moments later were gliding swiftly around the long rock rib that guards the harbor, a copper hued launch at the wheel, a Nubian giant at the engine and an evil yellow faced desperado sprawling upon the forward deck.

Even before they had come to anchor at Tahoga island a dozen boatmen were racing for them and crying for their patronage. At the water's edge they saw a tiny village nestled close against the mountains, its tiled roofs, rust red and grown to moss, its walls faded by wind and weather to delicate mauves and dove colors and greens impossible to describe.

The launch, when it came to rest, seemed suspended in air, and beneath lay an entrancing sea garden. Once the engine had stopped its clatter a deep, peaceful silence settled over the harbor, unbroken by wheel or whistle, for in Tahoga no one works and there are no vehicles.

Slowly He Picked His Way Ashore.

"What a wonderful place!" exclaimed the young man fervently. "Why, it's like a dream it can't be real!"

Then, as the boatmen renewed their begging, "I wonder which large gentleman I'd better hire."

"Take the little boy, please," Edith entreated to an orphan who was manfully struggling with a pair of oars twice his own length, whereupon the older boatmen began to shove off with many scowls.

"Our choice has offended these genial noddies," Kirk observed, as he helped her to a seat. "When shall we tell the lad to bring us off?"

"Four o'clock," answered Mrs. Cortlandt. "I arranged with the captain to be ready at that hour, so, you see, we have the whole day ahead of us."

Across the limpid shallows they glided, bravely propelled by their nine-year-old oarsman, but when the bow of their skiff grated upon the bottom they were still some yards from the shore.

"Looks as if we'd have to wait," said Kirk, then called to one of the nearby boatmen to lend the child a hand. But the fellow replied gruffly in some unintelligible jargon.

"He says he carries his passengers ashore in his arms," Edith translated.

"Really? Competition is spirited even on this heavenly isle. Well, that's easy." Anthony nudged his bow shoes, kicked them off and rolled up his trousers.

"Permit me to help you," he said, "without embarrassing our pilot."

She stood up and allowed him to gather her in his arms. Then for the first time she felt his strength as her body leaned to his. Slowly he picked his way ashore while she reeled in his embrace, her arms about his neck, her smooth cheek brushing his. When he deposited her gently upon her feet he saw her face had gone white and that she was trembling.

His own face was glowing as he waited back to fetch the lunch basket and his footgear. Under the circumstances he had done the only natural, the only possible thing, yet it had queerly perturbed them both.

The two visitors explored the village, even to the quaint, tawdry chapel, with its impossible blues and rusted gilt, and noon found them eager to investigate the contents of their lunch basket. Taking a random path up the hill, they came at last to a spring of cool water, and here they spread their meal under a mango tree bent beneath tons of fruit.

The afternoon sped quickly. If at times Kirk found his companion regarding him with a strangely timid, half defiant look, he refused to connect it with the episode of their landing.

Promptly at 4 they came down the drunken little main street and out upon the beach. But no launch was in sight.

"Hello! Where's our boat?" exclaimed Kirk.

"The captain told me he'd be ready at 4. Perhaps he has run over to Tahogilla or— She hesitated with a troubled frown.

"You told him to wait?"

"Distinctly." Seeing an idler in the square above, she questioned him in Spanish. "This man says the launch left for Panama two hours ago. They went on a Sunday spree. He says they came ashore and bought a lot of liquor, and he heard them quarrelling later."

"That means we'll have to get another boat."

"I don't know where we shall find one."

"Neither do I, but there must be some sort of craft that piles back and forth regularly."

"Only once or twice a week, I believe, and it belongs to the sanitarium. Perhaps we'd better wait awhile; our men may come back."

At last, as the sun was dipping into a bed of gold, Kirk broke out:

"Gee whiz! We've got to do something. Mr. Cortlandt will be getting worried."

"In all probability he won't know anything about it until too late to come for us. He is dining with those people from Bocas, and may not get back to the Tivoli before midnight."

"Nice of us to be in!" remarked Anthony. "I'd like to lay hands on that captain."

"We may have to stay here all night."

"Well, at least we have a baven of refuge. They'll take us in at the hospital."

"I don't care to ask them. There's some one up there I don't wish to see. That's why I didn't go near the place today."

He laughed to hide his embarrassment. "I'm wondering—what people will say."

"Oh, you mustn't be troubled about that. It isn't your fault, you know, anyhow. Besides, people won't say anything because they won't know anything about it—if we stay away from that sanitarium."

"It's getting along toward dinner time," he said, "so let's see what we can find in the way of food."

They stumbled out into the unlighted street and began their search, but, soon close at hand, the cooking arrangements of Tahoga proved most unattractive. But eventually they found a decent looking place, where they were taken in, and, after an interminable wait, food was set before them—chicken, hotted with rice and coconut, black beans and coconut, fresh, warm milk and a wonderful assortment of hot-house fruits.

In spite of their equivocal situation, Edith seemed fully to have regained her spirits. Even the prospect of spending the night in this place apparently did not dismay her. They descended to the square again, stared at all the way through open doors and followed by a subdued murmur of comment. Then the sat for a long time watching the stars.

As if in despair over their impossible predicament, Edith came away to a spirit of reckless chatter, and Kirk, with a man's somewhat exaggerated sympathy for a woman's sensitive ings, loyally strove to help her make the best of things in her own way. There was no real concession of her reserve—no sacrifice of the feminine privilege of abrupt and complete withdrawal. If he had struck a false note he knew that she would have turned frown in an instant.

It was on their return to the hotel that the clouds came, leaving him strangely shaken. Their course took them past a tiny cantina. Frightened by a drunken brawl within, she picked up her skirts and fled into the darkness, Kirk stumbling along behind her. At last she stopped out of breath, and he overtook her.

"You mustn't run through these dark alleys," he cried sharply. "You'll break your neck." Half impatient at this hysterical behavior, he seized her by the arm.

"Oh, I'm so frightened!" she breathed, and he felt her tremble. She lifted her white face, and her eyes were luminous in the gloom.

Before he realized what he was doing his arms had closed around her and his lips had met hers. It may have been the romance of the night, the solitude, the intoxicating warmth of her breath. At any rate, he lost his head and knew nothing save that she was a woman and he a man. As for her, she offered no resistance, made no sign beyond a startled sigh as their lips came together.

But, impulsive as his action had been, it was no more sudden than his recall. He released her and stepped back, crying:

"Oh, my God! I—I didn't mean that. Forgive me, please." She said nothing, and he stammered desperately again: "You'll hate me now, of course, but I don't know what ails me. I forgot myself—you—everything. It was un pardonable and I ought to be shot."

He started off down the blind street, his white body cold with apprehension and self disgust.

"Do you intend to leave me here in the middle of this?"

"No, no! Of course not, I'm rattled, that's all. I've just got a cowardly desire to flee and butt my head against the nearest wall. That's what I ought to do. I don't know what possessed me. I don't know what you'll think of me."

"We won't speak of it now. Try to compose yourself and find our lodging place."

"Why, yes, of course. I'll see that you're fixed up comfortably, and then I'll get out."

"Oh, you mustn't leave me!" she cried in a panic. "I couldn't stay in that awful place alone." She drew a little nearer to him, as if demanding his protection. A wave of tenderness swept over him. She was just a girl, after all, he reflected.

"I—I won't leave you. I'll stay near you," he stammered.

"I won't believe that you could have taken me for the kind of woman you are."

"No, no!" he cried in an anguish of self reproach. "I was a fool!"

"No," she said, "I don't—I couldn't bear to think that. Perhaps I was partly to blame. But I didn't think I ought to have known that no man can really be trusted. But I thought our friendship was so beautiful, and now you've spoiled it."

"Don't say that!" exclaimed Kirk. "Say you'll forgive me some time."

But instead of answering him directly she proceeded in the same strain, probing his wounded self respect to the quick, making his offense seem blacker every moment.

Although he assured her over and over that he had simply followed the irresponsible, unaccountable impulse of

BROOKLYN PAROUSH

THE FAITHFUL ARE WATCHFUL.

Luke 12:35-48—March 8.

"Blessed are those servants, whom the Lord when He cometh shall find watching."

TODAY'S lesson opens with a parable. If, in a great house, the master were about to bring home his bride, the servants would on that particular night be especially active, watchful, on the alert to hear his knock and open instantly. So Jesus' followers should be on the alert for His Second Coming.

The thought is that followers of Jesus should take their degree of alertness from the extremest experience of earthly service. Jesus intimated that they might look for Him sooner than He would come, saying that if He shall come in the second or the third watch or whenever, blessed are those servants found ready to receive Him.

Our Lord's Parousia is described in today's lesson. His earliest manifestations of His Second Advent. The world will neither see Him nor know of His presence; and His Church will know of His presence only by His "knock"—the fulfillment of prophecy. It will then be for the watchful ones to recognize this fulfillment, and promptly to acknowledge the Master's presence.

For such as receive Him He will make a feast. Out of the Divine Word He will bring things new and old, for refreshment and comfort. The Bible will become to them a new Book. Many Bible students believe that we are living in this very time; and that each faithful follower of Jesus will be granted the privilege to participate in this feast, which many tell us they are now enjoying.

The Great Teacher then intimates that Satan is master of the present order of earthly things; and that at His Second Coming Jesus will bind this strong man, overturn present institutions and establish the long-promised Reign of Righteousness. This thorough transition will cause the great Time of Trouble mentioned throughout the Bible as closing this Gospel Age.—Daniel 12:1; Mark 13:8; Matthew 24:21.

Jesus speaks of His Second Coming as thief-like. The thought is that He will be present for a time, unobserved by the world, known only to the Bible class, whom He will remove—ridding them from earthly nature to Heavenly. Verse 40 instructs all the Lord's faithful followers to be ready for His presence, to render up their accounts and experience their change.

"To Give Them Their Portion." St. Peter was perplexed. Was this parable for the Apostles or for all? The Lord did not answer him directly, but merely assured him that at the appropriate time the Lord would appoint a steward over His household to give them food in due season. This is not very different from the Lord's usual method of dealing with His family.

For instance, St. Peter apparently was a leader amongst the Apostles, in opening the door to the Gentiles—preaching to Cornelius, the first Gentile convert. Later on, the Lord seems to have chosen St. Paul to be His particular messenger to the Gentiles (Acts 13). Similarly, Enoch, Abraham, Moses, the Prophets, and others during this Gospel Age, seem to have been especially used of the Lord to draw His people's attention to His Word. The Apostles, of course, had a special inspiration which does not appertain to others of this Age since.

The servant at the end of the Age, if faithful, would be especially blessed, and given general charge respecting the spiritual food for the Lord's family—"meat in due season." But if he should prove unfaithful, fail to recognize the Master's presence and manifest an unkind spirit toward the household, he would go into outer darkness with the world, in utter ignorance of the times and seasons, etc., of his Lord.

The Lord then explained a general principle of His dealings; namely, that any servant, knowing his Master's will and not doing in harmony therewith, would receive stripes, punishments, tribulations, proportionate to his knowledge and opportunity. But any servant who ignorantly did things worthy of stripes would receive proportionately fewer stripes. "To whom much is given, of him much is required."

Our Golden Text.

The heart of this lesson is found in Verse 37. Those servants who in the earliest stages of their Lord's Second Coming, the time of His Parousia, His presence, shall be found faithfully watching, will be informed respecting the time, as the Apostle points out.—1 Thessalonians 5:1-8.

The secrecy respecting the time and the manner of Jesus' Second Coming will be a strong test. All overcharged with the cares of this life—business, pleasure, etc.—will be slow to hear the "knock," and too much engrossed to give proper heed. "Watch ye therefore!"

Weight of Fleeces.

The fleeces of sheep shorn at the University of Illinois this year have been of very good weight. The average of the Rambouillet was 15.3 pounds; the Shropshires averaged 8.7, the Hampshires 8.5 and the Southdowns 7.07 pounds. The latter averaged the lightest, with fleeces of 5.9 pounds. All of the university sheep have been turned on to forage crops for the summer and are fed rape, cowpeas and soy beans.

Grange Column

Marion Grange.

Marion Center Grange, No. 955, met Friday evening. It was voted to have a party at the grange hall Wednesday evening, March 4, with a potluck supper. The lecturer arranged a good song-fellow program, which all enjoyed. Grange closed in form with an attendance of 30. After grange closed all joined in playing games and a general good time.

Ironton Grange.

Ironton Grange met February 24th with thirty members present. During the regular order of business a list of the by-laws was presented and read by the worthy secretary. They will be read again in two weeks, and in four weeks they will be open for discussion. Every member is urged to be present.

Mrs. Thonoth was appointed janitor for the coming year.

The lecturer's programme was very interesting and was composed of songs, readings and recitations. For the good of the order it was decided that the gallery be cleaned up and the lumber, or rather flooring, be put down in the ante room. Bros. Eugene Lewis, Peter Knudsen and Frank Hammond volunteered to go down the next day and fix it up.

Next meeting in a fortnight. All visitors try and come. Visitors welcome.

Peninsular Grange.

Regular meeting of Peninsular Grange February 27th with Worthy Master Heller in the chair. Twenty-one members and nine visitors, including Deputy William Mears of Boyne River Grange. The roll call showed all officers present. The dance committee reported a balance of $10.10 in favor of the grange from the party February 20th. The bill for refreshments of $3.35 was allowed. One petition for membership was presented. After recess a class of 14 second degree members received the third and fourth degrees. The lecture hour was mostly taken up by short talks from the visiting members. The master appointed the following committees: Executive, Brothers Looze, Persons and Heller; finance, Chew, Ruhlberg and Mendi; charity, Sisters Persons, Chew and Crowell.

Grange closed in due form to meet March 12th at 2 p. m. After closing the members and visitors retired to the dining room and were served with an oyster supper.

That Peninsular Grange is getting on the "map" needs no further comment.

Bay Shore Grange.

The regular meeting of the Bay Shore Grange was held Friday evening, February 27. The officers elected at last meeting were installed by Wm. Mears of Boyne Falls. It was decided to have a Grange Rally during April, conducted by Worthy Master of State Grange Ketchum.

GOOD HIGHWAYS NEED OF NATION

Willis Says Cheaper Transportation of Food Products Is Imperative.

Farmers Could Have Wide Range of Markets and Cultivate Lands Intensively.

John N. Willis, president of the Willis-Overland Company, says:

The building of good roads is the one biggest and most important factor which this country must consider in the next few years. The improved highway is the one means of salvation for the poor man, for in these days of high cost of living we must look to cheaper transportation of foodstuffs as our way out. We can no longer expect to better our condition through a greater supply of necessities, for every effort we have made heretofore toward lowering the cost of foodstuffs has been met with the response that the United States is about as intensively cultivated as it can be.

In other words, our people no longer are turning to the country for an effort to produce a larger amount of food. Therefore we must face the problem of getting along with the same amount that is now produced.

The only solution left for us is to cut our cost of production and delivery. The best way to accomplish this is to provide good roads, for we already have had many demonstrations of how good roads will work to our advantage.

The improvement of highways in many parts of our country in the last few years has been invariably followed by better living conditions. Where the roads leading into a large city have been improved we have seen an increased supply of foodstuffs on the local markets and a larger number of farmers bringing their products into the city. This, of a necessity, results in lower prices for the products and a long step toward better living conditions.

On the other hand, the improvement of roads throughout the country is invariably followed by an improvement in farming methods. The agriculturists who heretofore devoted his energies to grazing and the production of rough foodstuffs, such as corn, is now turning to what is known as market gardening. He is raising potatoes, beans, peas and other commodities that are in every day demand, simply because he can get them to market where heretofore markets were denied him. It is no uncommon sight now to see farmers driving eighteen or twenty miles to market with loads of produce which, before the highways were improved, were denied the consumer. The automobile, it is true, has had a great deal to do with increasing this supply, but even this vehicle would be helpless without highways on which to run.

The advent of good roads, too, has brought about another revolution—that of intensive farming. The countries of the old world have always regarded us as criminally wasteful people, in that the product raised on 100 acres of land in this country was often less than they produced on ten acres. Good roads have changed this condition. The American farmer now finds that he will get a greater return from one acre of land intensively cultivated than from ten acres farmed in the old allspiced methods.

This intensive farming is the direct result of good roads, for where the farmer heretofore found it necessary to cultivate crops which made a large bulk, so that his infrequent trips to market were profitable, he now finds that he can take a small load to the consumer as often as he desires.

CHILD ATE POISON PILLS

Carelessness of Parents Causes Death of Little Boyne City Child.

Powerful and poisonous medicine and the carelessness of parents was the cause of the death of another little child at Boyne City last week. Richard, the two-year-old son of Baby Hubbard, found some sugar coated tablets and, thinking they were candy, ate a large number of them. It was an hour before he showed symptoms of being sick, and almost immediately went into convulsions, dying in a short time.

The tablets had been prescribed by a physician for an adult member of the family who had stomach trouble.

Making the Little Farm Pay

By C. C. BOWSFIELD

A BRANCH of farming that affords more than ordinary pleasure and profit is that of studying out schemes for succession crops. It is quite feasible to raise two or more crops in one season on ordinary soil.

It will be found that this kind of intensive farming is good for the soil. There has to be free use of barnyard fertilizers and the plowing, disking, harrowing, rolling and perhaps boeing must be in proportion to the amount of production required of the land. Such treatment will build up instead of wear out a plot of ground. These examples may be varied as circumstances suggest.

Lettuce, radishes, onions, peas, carrots and string beans may be put in the first of May and the middle of June. The ground can then be prepared in a few days for the succeeding crops, and a whole found that between the 1st of July and the 1st of October a full crop of these products can be grown. Celery, sweet corn, late potatoes, beans, melons, radishes, lettuce, spinach, onions and turnips.

At first glance it would seem that there are not many vegetables on the list that could be sown successfully as late as midsummer, but those tested form quite an array. Bush beans, carrots, lettuce, beets, corn, parsley, peas, radishes, spinach and turnips all give satisfactory results when sown as late as August. They should be put in as near the 1st of July as possible to make all growth possible before frost. The hardy ones cause no anxiety, as they endure light frosts. The tender sort, such as beans, cucumbers and spinach, may be saved from the cold by a covering of old rugs and shavings material.

As the gardener cannot duplicate the cool, moist conditions of spring for the germination of August seeds, he must do the next best thing and firm the soil well after sowing. This helps to draw the moisture in the soil where the seedlings can use it. When they have made a start the surface is to be stirred to form a mulch.

Bush beans sown as late as Aug. 10 have been successfully harvested by Oct. 15. In another case an Aug. 1 sowing of peas yielded full sized pods in less than seven weeks. These were an extra early sort. The crop, however, was not so heavy as from spring sown seed.

Lettuce planted in early August bore leaves large enough to use before the middle of September and well forward heads from the first week in October until the ground was cleared.

This is only a suggestive outline of the scheme of growing succession crops. There are wide possibilities along that line, and it is feasible to go still further and sow rape as soon as the vegetables are off in September and October. By Nov. 1 this will be in condition for forage. Hogs and sheep can feed from this field of rape for several weeks before winter sets in, and it is again ready for them in the spring.

So far as the effect on the soil is concerned, it is possible to continue the double cropping of vegetables indefinitely. The land will most likely show improvement under such methods of cultivation, but a rotating scheme is advisable on small tracts as well as large ones.

The quicker an acre is capable of paying for itself in what it produces the more that acre is worth.

FIGHT AGAINST HOG CHOLERA

How Deadly Disease is Being Combated Throughout Country.

CHOLERA CAUSED BY GERM

Farmers Must Use Great Precaution
After Disease Has Started.

Does Not Affect One Breed More Than Another—Treatment is by Hypodermic Injection.

The Department of Agriculture, during the past year, has been conducting campaigns in Indiana, Missouri, Iowa and Nebraska to control the contagious disease of hogs known as "hog cholera" by means of anti-hog cholera serum and farm quarantines. In one county (Pettis county, Missouri) where there was a loss of 18 per cent in 1911 and 23.8 per cent in 1912 of all hogs raised, there was only a loss of 14.7 per cent up to November 1913. This decrease was due to the use of the serum, which, although not used there by the Department's agents until August, 1913, materially reduced the loss. About 60,000 hogs were raised during the past year and of the 10,000 that died of the hog cholera only about 1,500 were lost after the active use of serum and quarantine measures were inaugurated.

In every county where these measures were employed, even though begun after the disease had continued its ravages for some time, there was less loss from hog cholera than in either of the two preceding years.

In addition to its great function as a preventive, it has been found that the anti-hog cholera serum would cure a large proportion of hogs in the early stages of the disease and render them immune after recovery. However, if hogs are not treated by this serum, from 75 to 100 per cent of all affected herds, die. This serum, so far as is known, is the only thing that will prevent the disease.

Of hogs actually sick when treated, but 25 per cent was lost during the past summer. Of well hogs in diseased herds, 2.8 per cent died after being treated and of hogs in exposed herds less than 1 per cent died after being inoculated with the serum. In an infected herd there is always a certain proportion of hogs that are well.

The inspector examines the hogs when he arrives, takes the temperature of all hogs in the herd and separates the sick from the well. The temperature is an indication of the sickness. The temperature of a sick hog, unless the hog is near death, will run above 104 degrees and sometimes as high as 107 degrees or 108 degrees F.

Some states are engaged in the manufacture of serum to cure this disease. This serum requiring special treatment to preserve its quality and a qualified man to practice it. Sufficient serum to treat an average hundred pound hog costs about thirty cents at a liberal estimate. The treatment is by hypodermic injection.

The Department in initiating its campaign against the devastating hog disease has only been able to commence in a few of the districts where the cholera was the most widespread and where the active cooperation of the state was offered in enforcing the ordinary quarantine measures etc.

The object of the Department has been to endeavor to control the disease and if possible, to eliminate it from the country. To secure this end the best efforts of the farmer himself are necessary. The campaign against the devastating sickness during 1913 was planned in the territory selected along three lines.

1. The education and organization of the farmers in the districts selected, to be carried out primarily by the State College.

2. The enforcement of sanitation and restrictive regulations by the State veterinarian.

3. Active supervision by the Bureau of Animal Industry of the Department and the inoculation of diseased herds, and exposed herds with the anti-hog cholera serum.

A county in each State was selected as a unit and the method of work in that county was, briefly, for the State College to secure the cooperation of intelligent, active farmers in each township in the county. These men were called volunteer assistants and they were to keep in close communication with the Department's inspector stationed in that area, keeping him informed of conditions and securing statistics concerning the hog industry. In this manner conditions were pretty well learned in the territory under inspection. When an outbreak of hog cholera was reported the Department's inspector went to that outbreak and saved all the hogs he could by treatment with serum. As the disease is very easily transmitted, he then protected all herds in the immediate vicinity by inoculation. The idea was to form a zone of immune animals around the infected center.

Hog cholera is caused by a germ that exists in the blood. It is an organism apparently so small that the most powerful microscopes do not show it. However, it is easy to demonstrate its presence by inoculating a small part of the blood from a sick hog into a well one, which produces the hog cholera.

Hog cholera is a disease which seems to be stopped to a degree by the frost of winter, although frost cannot be said to stop a case after it has taken hold of its victim. However, it seems to prevent the rapid spread of the disease. The result is that in the spring time the infection is as a rule at the lowest ebb but increases rapidly from that time until fall.

Hog cholera does not seem to affect any particular breed of hogs more than another, and while generally the careless farmer is more apt to have the disease among his hogs than the careful one, the disease sometimes occurs where the conditions are sanitary. It is hoped that the work may be extended gradually until the disease is completely controlled or eliminated.

The fact that hog cholera is carried not only by the hogs themselves, but by birds, dogs, streams, and even on the feet of men going from one farm to another shows how necessary it is that the campaign be thorough and that farmers exert their best efforts to assist in the work.

WM. L. BLACK LAID TO REST

Funeral Took Place From His Home in Marion Township Friday.

One of the Early Pioneers Who Had Witnessed the Development of Charlevoix County.

The last tribute was paid by the relatives and friends of the late William Black Jr., who passed from this field of labor March 3rd, 1914. Services were held Friday, Rev. John G. C. Irvine officiating. Interment at Brookside cemetery.

Wm. Black Jr. was born in Dumfries, Scotland, July 22nd, 1844, and when but five years of age crossed the ocean with his parents to this country. He is numbered among the grand old settlers who saw Charlevoix grow from one store and a post office to the present day. He was for many years engaged in the fishing business and later became engaged in the U. S. lake survey, which covered Lakes Huron, Michigan and Erie. Afterwards he was master of one of the largest crafts on the lakes and also became part owner of the Nellie Booth, which ran from Charlevoix to East Jordan, and while her captain had the misfortune to lose the use of his right arm.

He was married in Dundas, Canada, May 4th, 1887, to Lilly Wilkins of London, England. Afterwards he came to Charlevoix and located on his farm in Marion, three miles south of Charlevoix, where he resided at the time of his death.

Surviving Mr. Black are his wife, two daughters, a son, two sisters and two brothers.

AT CHICKEN PIE AND DANCED

Fronton K. of P.'s Entertain Members of Local Lodge.

"The Best Time Ever" Expression Used By Those Who Attended.

"The best time ever" was the expression used by every member of the Charlevoix K. of P.'s who attended the chicken pie supper and dancing party given Friday evening by the members of the order who live at Fronton and vicinity.

During the afternoon and evening nearly sixty members left this city in various kinds of conveyances over the ice road on Pine Lake. Upon their arrival they found everything in readiness for the evening's entertainment, which was held in the grange hall. Dancing was enjoyed until about eleven o'clock, when the announcement came that supper was ready. For some time previous to this tempting and appetizing odors had been issuing from the dining hall, which sharpened the appetites of the hungry bunch that was present. The supper was beyond all expectations, although the Fronton members had promised that there would be "something doing" in the line of cats. Chicken pie, mashed potatoes, fluff biscuits that fairly melted in your mouth, salads of all kinds and many other delicious edibles that helped fill up. Many of the masculine members ate until their wives became alarmed and insisted that they leave the table, although it was quite noticeable that the women folks were adept in the art of handling their knives and forks.

After the supper cigars were passed and a short time later one of the Fronton members appeared with a basket of delicious apples, which were in themselves a great treat.

The condition of the crowd at this time called for further exercise, and dancing was enjoyed until a late hour.

Before leaving the Fronton members and their wives were given three hearty cheers, and an invitation was extended to come to Charlevoix at a near date, when the compliment would be returned.

WON K. OF P. CUP

Charlevoix Degree Team Makes an Excellent Showing at Meet.

For a number of weeks the Knights of Pythias of this city have been making great preparations to attend the sessions of the Northern Michigan Pythian League, which was held at Manistee Monday and Tuesday.

At this gathering the third rank was exemplified before the grand lodge officers and prizes awarded. It is the highest ambition of the different lodges to own the beautiful loving cup that goes to the most expert team. The cup has been won by Manistee for the past two years and if won the third time would have remained permanently in their possession.

A number of the members of the team left Monday, the balance going Tuesday morning. The main contests took place Tuesday afternoon and evening and Charlevoix not only took first place in the third degree work but first in the exemplification of the work of the first degree, thereby winning both cups. Individual prizes were also offered and out of 20 members of the Charlevoix team brought back twelve.

Charlevoix has a right to feel proud of the excellent showing made.

FINUCAN LANDS POSTOFFICE JOB

Name Among Last Bunch Recommended by President.

Graduate of Charlevoix High School and is Competent to Hold Position.

With the last batch of Michigan appointments recommended by President Wilson appeared the name of Thomas G. Finucan. The o. e. w. reached Charlevoix early Saturday morning and decides the friendly three-cornered race between Mr. Finucan, John Burns and Dr. J. A. Auld.

The selection of Charlevoix's new postmaster has met with the general approval of his many friends, although it was rather a surprise to the older members of the party, who, through long and active political activity, thought that their candidacy would at least receive more consideration.

Mr. Finucan is a young man, capable and competent to handle the important duties of the Charlevoix postoffice. He was born in Throopville, Ontario, in 1888 and at the age of three years moved to Charlevoix, where he has since resided. He graduated from the Charlevoix high school in 1906 and afterward spent a year at Ann Arbor, where he took a course in pharmacy, and later he spent six months at Ferris Institute at Big Rapids, following the same course of study. He was granted his pharmacist papers in November, 1911. For the past two years he has been employed at the Central Drug Store. He is well known and holds the respect and esteem of the community.

Mr. Finucan will probably enter on his new duties during the latter part of the month.

DEATH OF MRS. BARTLETT

A Pioneer Resident, Having Lived Here for Past Twenty-nine Years.

Mrs. Ruby Bartlett, a pioneer resident of this county, died at her home in this city Monday afternoon at 1:40 o'clock, after a lingering illness.

Deceased was born at North Adams, Michigan, October 29, 1846. She was united in marriage to N. J. Bartlett at the age of 20 years at Reading, Michigan. To this union were born three children, Ed. Bartlett of McMillan, Michigan, and Mrs. Will Heise and Clarence Bartlett, both of this city. She also leaves three sisters and two brothers.

Mrs. Bartlett had lived in this vicinity for the last 29 years. She had been a widow for over sixteen years. She was a member of the M. E. church and the W. R. C.

Funeral services were held from the M. E. church Wednesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, Rev. Quinton Walker, officiating.

VOTE ON ABOLISHMENT

Board of Public Works Petition Signed by One Hundred and Twenty-four Freeholders.

The petition for the abolishment of the Board of Public Works, signed by 124 freeholders and about 100 other citizens, presented to the common council at their regular meeting Monday night, was favorably acted upon and the proposition will be voted upon at the April election.

A glance at the signatures on the petition is evidence enough that the citizens of Charlevoix deem the board entirely unnecessary and that better and more efficient work can be done by the common council without the board.

As it will require a two-thirds majority of the total number of votes cast upon the proposition, every citizen should make it a point to be at the polls and vote upon the proposition one way or the other.

Men's Banquet.

The men of the Congregational church will serve a banquet at the church on Saint Patrick's Day in the evening, March 17, at 7 o'clock. In addition to the first-class spread which the men will serve, the ladies will generously furnish a literary and musical entertainment. Tickets on sale next Monday morning at Frazier's at 35 cents each. 10 ft.

MICHIGAN CROP REPORT

What Has Not Been Injured By Lack of Snow So Far This Winter.

In answer to the question "Has wheat during February suffered injury from any cause?" 27 correspondents in the state answer "yes" and 489 "no;" in the southern counties 12 answer "yes" and 249 "no;" in the central counties one answers "yes" and 126 "no;" in the northern counties 13 answer "yes" and 94 "no;" and in the Upper Peninsula one answers "yes" and 20 "no."

Show protected wheat in the state and the several sections 37 days.

The average depth of snow on February 15th in the state was 7.86 inches; in the southern counties 7.06; in the central counties 8.46; in the northern counties 8.30, and in the Upper Peninsula 10.63 inches.

On the 28th the average depth of snow in the state was 7.03 inches; in the southern counties 6.27; in the central counties 7.43; in the northern counties 7.54, and in the Upper Peninsula 10.40 inches.

The total number of bushels of wheat marketed by farmers in February at 96 flour mills is 196,038 and at 93 elevators and to grain dealers 122,497, or a total of 318,535 bushels. Of this amount 237,779 bushels were marketed in the southern four tiers of counties; 69,211 in the central counties, and 11,515 in the northern counties and Upper Peninsula. The estimated total number of bushels of wheat marketed in the seven months August-February is 5,000,000.

Sixty-nine mills, elevators and grain dealers report no wheat purchased in February.

The average condition of live stock in the state is reported as follows, the comparison being made with stock in good, healthy and thrifty condition: Horses and sheep 96; cattle and swine 95.

SECOND Y. M. C. A. MEETING

Held in High School Building at East Jordan Sunday.

Many Interesting Topics Discussed—Next Meeting to be Held in Charlevoix.

The second regular meeting of the Y. M. C. A. leaders' conference was held at East Jordan Sunday, March 8th. The meeting was called to order by President Pierce at 11:30 in the high school building. First was devotional services led by Mr. Zimmerman of Boyne City, followed by prayer by Mr. Ball. Then came the business session headed by the reading of the minutes of the previous meeting by the secretary.

Mr. Ball read a very interesting letter from Mr. Stanchfield, who is doing Y. M. C. A. work in India. He also gave some interesting facts as to the organization of the Y. M. C. A. and the extent of territory covered, naming some of the leaders who were pioneering the work in various sections of the country.

A discussion which all the boys took part in then followed and each one brought up his problems and ideas. From this much useful knowledge was obtained. Mr. Ball gave suggestions to help the boys in some of these problems.

The morning session then adjourned and all of the boys went to the Russell House, where a very fine dinner was served. After dinner everybody went back to the high school and the afternoon session began.

President Pierce gave a short talk and closed the business session. Then a talk was given on the subject "Intercession—Primary Need" by Dean Scroggie of Charlevoix, followed by another on "Personality" by Mr. Blake of Boyne City. Then Mr. Ball gave a short talk and the meeting adjourned at 3 o'clock.

Those who attended from here were Wm. Driggett, Dean Scroggie, Charles Mascho, Harold Usher and E. D. Pierce.

THREE TICKETS IN THE FIELD

Outlook Gives Promise of Warm Fight on Election Day.

PROGRESSIVE TICKET FILED

Oluf Nordrum Heads Ticket for Office of Mayor.

No Lack of Candidates in Wards for Various City Offices—Good Men on All the Various Tickets.

There was little excitement in the city primary Wednesday, as there was practically no contest on either of the two party tickets that had been filed. On both the Republican and Democratic tickets every candidate's name which had been filed will appear on the ballot at the April election.

In all of the three wards complete tickets were filed for the National Progressive party, for whom previous to the primary no names had been filed. In every ward there seemed to be no lack of candidates for the various city offices. In several instances candidates have withdrawn their names from the ticket and, as near as can be learned, the names of the following men will appear on the party ticket soon to be voted on:

Mayor—Oluf Nordrum.
Clerk—Peter Vandermaede.
Treasurer—John Cook.
Aldermen—First ward, Frank M. Glassford; 2nd ward, John S. Ackert; 3rd ward, not as yet decided.

Supervisors—First ward, not yet decided; 2nd ward, S. L. Rowe; 3rd ward, L. P. Adams.

Constables—First ward, Louie Breen; 2nd ward, W. T. Driggett; 3rd ward, not decided.

On the Socialist ticket there was but one name filed, that of Harold Bedford for constable in the second ward. This name, however, has been withdrawn.

In the report of the board of canvassers on page 4 of this issue can be found the vote of each individual whose name appeared on the various tickets.

All these candidates have their friends and the outlook seems very promising for an unusually warm fight on election day. There is plenty of excellent material to select from and it is up to the people to make their choice. The principal thing which should interest the citizens without regard to anything else is the assurance of a careful and business like administration of public affairs, and from the list of candidates, from mayor down to constable, there should be reason why the people should not feel perfectly certain and sure that business men would continue to prevail in the conduct of public affairs, in the election of either of the party tickets to be voted on.

MICHIGAN WOMAN'S STOMACH ILLS ENDED BY A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Mrs. Beamer of Flint is Delivered from Headaches by Just a Few Doses.

Mrs. Guy A. Beamer of 1307 North street, Flint, Mich., was for a long time a victim of stomach and digestive troubles. One of the serious effects was in bad headaches, which attacked her almost daily. She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Then she wrote: "I thank you very much for what your medicine has done for me. I never saw anything work such wonders as just the three bottles have. There was never a day to my life that I did not have my head tied up with a cloth and I have not had a headache since. I had been doctor-ed by specialists, too, and received very little benefit." Just such stories are told by thousands who have used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It is known all over the United States. It cleans the digestive tract of mucoid secretions and removes poisons from matter. It brings quick relief to sufferers with stomach ailments, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved their lives. Because of its success there are many imitations, so be cautious. Be sure it's MAYR'S. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing among people they know—or send to George H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting street, Chicago, Illinois, for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects. For sale at all drug stores.

WE HAVE FAITH IN THIS STOMACH REMEDY

A woman customer said to us the other day: "Say, you ought to tell everyone in town about Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets. I would myself if I could." That set us to thinking. So many people have used them and have so enthusiastically sounded their praises both to us and their friends that we had an idea you all knew about them. But in the chance that some of you who suffer from indigestion, heartburn, dyspepsia, or some other stomach complaint, don't know about them we are writing this.

They contain Bismuth and Pepsin—two of the greatest digestive aids known to medical science. They soothe and comfort the stomach, promote the secretion of gastric juice, help to quickly digest the food and convert it into rich, red blood and improve the action of the bowels. We believe them to be the best remedy made for indigestion and dyspepsia. We certainly would not offer them to you entirely at our risk unless we felt sure they would do you a lot of good. If Rexall Dyspepsia Tablets do not relieve your indigestion, check the heartburn and make it possible for you to eat what you like whenever you like come back and get your money.

Sold only at the more than 7000 Rexall Stores, and in this town only at our store. Three sizes—25c, 50c and $1.—The Ivy Drug Store, Frank N. Metcalf, Prop., Charlevoix, Mich.

Has Petoskey Found the Same

The Answer is found in the Straightforward Statement of a Petoskey Resident.

We have been reading week after week in the local press of Charlevoix citizens who have been rid of distressing kidney and bladder troubles by Doan's Kidney Pills and we have often wondered whether the same high opinion of this medicine is to be found in our neighboring towns. This frank and earnest statement by a well known and respected resident of Petoskey will set this doubt at rest.

John E. Warren, 923 Howard St., Petoskey, Mich., says: "I have used Doan's Kidney Pills at different times for kidney complaint and lame back and have always been benefited. I was subject to attacks of lame back and at times my kidneys didn't act as they should. I had to get up frequently at night and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I used Doan's Kidney Pills and they relieved me."

Price 50c, at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Warren used. Foster-McBarn Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal
BY
REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt. Jefferson Locke insinuates himself into the college men's party.
Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.
"Drugs" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.
Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.
Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.
Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.
Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Johnson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intriguers to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.
Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Runnels, master of transportation.
The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taboga, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.
Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

CHAPTER XI.

Chiquita.
THE next day Kirk borrowed a shotgun and went hunting. He wanted to get away somewhere and collect his thoughts. For the present, at least, he wished to avoid an interview with Mrs. Cortlandt.
At midday he paused in an open glade against a hillside to eat his lunch. Back of him the rising ground was heavily timbered; beneath him a confusion of thickets and groves and cleared fields led out of a green plain as clean as any golf links, upon which were scattered dwellings.
Evidently this was the Savannas of which he had heard so much, and these foreign looking bungalows were the country homes of the rich Panamanians.
The wood was crowded with plant life utterly strange to him. Vines and creepers, abundant, from the tiny honeysuckle that reared itself with feeble filaments, to the giant liana creeping through the forest like a python, throttling tall grove trees in its embrace. On every side was the never ceasing battle for light and the struggle of the weak against the strong.
Tiring of the scene at last, Kirk stumbled out into a cleared space, where he paused with an exclamation of surprise.
A brook had been dammed and widened into a deep, limpid pool to which the clean, white sand of its bottom lent a golden hue. At the lower end it overflowed to a waterfall, the purring music of which filled the glade.

gasp with delight. The place had an air of sturdiest privacy. A spring board mirrored in the depths below invited one to plunge, a pair of iron gymnastic rings were swung by chains to a massive limb, a flight of stone steps led up the bank and into a but artistically thatched and walled with palm leaves in harmonize with its setting.
After staring at it for a long time he took a lingering, farewell look and turned to retrace his steps, whereupon some one laughed at him softly. He paused abruptly, then turned around. Then with the sweetest foreign accent imaginable he heard some one say:
"You had better cross upon the waterfall, sir. There is no bridge above." After an instant, during which he strained his eyes to find the owner of the voice, she laughed again.
"Here I am in the tree across the pond."
"Oh!" Looking over the fork of a tree trunk, perhaps twice the height of his head above the ground, Anthony beheld a ravishing face and two very bright eyes. Without removing his gaze he leaned his gun carefully against a bush—fearless have an abundant effect upon hamadryads—and said, "How did you get up there?"
"I climbed up."
"Why didn't you hide under the waterfall?"
"I did not hide, senior. I am trying to reach my orchid."
A little hand appeared beside the face, and a finger pointed to one of the big air plants above her. Kirk beheld a marvelous white, dove shaped flower nodding upon a slender stalk.
"Do you wish to cross the stream?" she asked.
"If you please."
"Wait." The face disappeared. There was a sound from behind the twisted tree trunk; a twig fell, then a piece of bark, and the next instant the girl herself stepped into view.
"I was afraid you'd gone for good," acknowledged the young man gravely. He took up his gun and stepped out upon the crest of the dam.
"You must look where you go," she admonished, "or you will fall—splash!" She laughed delightedly at the thought.
"Will you promise not to whisk yourself away if I look down?" he asked.
"Yes."
But even with this assurance he found it difficult to remove his eyes from her even for the brief instant necessary for a safe passage, and when at last he stood beside her he felt an irresistible desire to seize her gently so that she could not escape.
"Well?" she said at length, and he found he had been standing stock still staring at her for several seconds.
"Excuse me! I really took you for a wood nymph. I'm not sure yet. You see, the place is so well suited. It was a natural mistake."
She dropped her eyes shyly and turned away at his look.
"It is only our swimming pool. There have been no fairies here since I was a very little girl. But once upon a time there were many—oh, a great many!" It was impossible to describe the odd, sweet sound her tongue gave to the English words. It was not a dialect, hardly an accent, just a delicious, hesitating mannerism born of unfamiliarity.
"Did you ever see them?"
"No! I arrived always a little too late. But there are such things." She pointed to a path, saying:
"This way will bring you to the road, sir, if you wish."
"But I don't wish—not yet." He sought wildly for an excuse to stay and exclaimed: "Oh, the orchid. I must get it for you."
"That will be very nice of you, sir. For two years I have awaited its blooming. If you had not arrived I would have got it anyhow."
"Girls shouldn't climb trees," he said severely. "It tears their dresses."
"Oh, one cannot tear a dress like this." She glanced down at her skirt. Allowing his eyes to leave her face for a moment, Kirk saw that she was clad, oddly enough, in a suit of denim which was buttoned snugly clear to her neck.
He broke his gun and removed the shells; then, leaving it beside the bathhouse, went to the tree where he had first seen her. With one hand resting upon the trunk, he turned to say:
"Promise you won't disappear while I'm up there or change into a squirrel or a blimp or anything like that."
"Yes, yes."
Then instead of beginning his climb the young man lounged idly against the tree.
"Fanny how I found you, wasn't it?" he remarked. "I mean it's funny I should have stumbled right on you this way. There's only one of you and one of me, and—er—this country is so big!"

"But the orchid, senior. Do you fear to climb so high?" she inquired, with the faintest gleam of amusement at his obvious effort to prolong the conversation.
"Oh, no!"
When he had reached the first fork he turned and seated himself comfortably, peering downward through the leaves for a sight of her.
"Not gone yet?" he exclaimed.
"That's good."
"Are you out of breath that you stop so soon?"
He nodded. "I need to rest a minute. Say, my name is Anthony—Kirk Anthony." Then, after a pause, "I'm an American."
"So am I, at least I am almost. My mother was an American."
"You don't say?" The young man's face lighted up with interest, and he started eagerly down the tree trunk, but she checked him promptly.
"The orchid!"
"Oh, yes!" He resented himself.
"Well, well, I suppose your mother taught you to speak English?"
"I also attended school in Baltimore."
Now that the first surprise of meeting was over, Kirk began a really attentive scrutiny of this delightful young person. His first glimpse had told him she was ravishingly pretty, but it had failed to show how dainty and small she was. Her chief charm lay in a certain winsome vivacity. Even now pure mischief looked out of her eyes as she asked:
"Have you rested enough to attack the orchid?"
"Yes." He roused himself from his trance, and with a strangely leaping heart proceeded carefully to detach the big air plant from its resting place.
"Don't break it," she cautioned as he came gingerly down the tree. "It is what we call 'Espiritu Santa,' the 'holy spirit' flower. See, it is like a white bird."
"May I rest a moment? I'm awfully tired."
"Certainly. You may stay as long as you wish. When you are rested the little path will bring you out."
"But you mustn't go!" he exclaimed in a panic as she turned away. "Oh, I say, please! You wouldn't do a thing like that?"
"I cannot speak to you this way, sir." The young lady blushed prettily.
"Why not, like to know?"
"Oh!" She raised her hand and shook her head to express the absolute impossibility of such a thing. "Already I have been terrible. What will Stephanie say?"
"You've been nothing of the sort, and who is Stephanie?"
"She is a big black woman—very fierce. It is because of Stephanie that the fairies have gone away from here."
"I'm so tired that I must sit down. I thought these country places were unoccupied at this season."
"So they are. But you see, I am doing a penance. I am a bad girl. I am disobedient. Otherwise I would not allow you to speak to me alone like this. You are the first gentleman I have ever been so long in the company with, Senior Antonio. For six months I must wear these garments—no pretty ones. I must not go out in public also, and I have been sent here away from the city for a time to cure my rebellious spirit."
"Those dresses must be hot."
"Oh, very uncomfortable! But, you see, I was bad."
"Not very bad?"
"Indeed, I disobeyed my father, my uncle, everybody." For the first time her eyes grew bright with anger. "But I did not wish to be married."
"Now I see." They wanted you to marry some fellow you don't like? It's awful to marry somebody you don't like," he declared, with such earnest conviction that she inquired quickly:
"Ah, then are you married?"
"Not. But everybody says it's positively criminal to marry without love."
"The gentleman is very handsome."
He, shuddered. "Beware of handsome men. If you have any idea of marriage select a large, plain man with blue eyes and light hair."
"I do not know such a person."
"Not yet, of course—that is, not well enough to marry him."
"It is not nice to speak of such things," said the young lady primly. "And it is not nice also to speak with strange gentlemen who come out of the forest when one is doing penance."
"Will you catch it for talking to me?"
"Oh, yes. It is not allowed."
"Then I suppose I'd better leave." Anthony settled himself more comfortably upon the bench. "And yet there is nothing really wrong about it, is there? Why, it's done every day in my country. Besides, who's going to know?"
"The padre. I tell him everything."
"How does a fellow ever get acquainted with a girl down here? How does he get a chance to propose?"
"One's people attend to that, of course," she managed to say at length, then changed the subject quickly.
"What did you say is your whole name?"
"Kirk Anthony."
"Keek! It has a funny sound, has it not?"
"I never noticed it. And yours?"
"My name is Chiquita."
He repeated it after her. "It's pretty. What is your last name?"
"That is it. If I told you my first name you could not use it. It would not be proper."
"It ought to be something like Ariel. That means 'spirit of the air and water,' I believe. Ariel Chiquita. No, they don't go together. See here, Miss Chiquita, may I call on you?"
"Oh!" She lifted her brows in amazement. "Such ideas! Of a certainly not!"
"Why?"
"You do not understand. Our young men do not do those things."
"Then I'll do whatever is customary

For the of Board Public Works ☐ YES
 For the Board of Public Works ☒ NO

THERE is a current belief held by many who do not understand the real and fundamental principles of citizenship that the best way to get satisfactory results out of public officials is to find fault with what they do and censure them for what they do not do. This is not only a wrong idea, but one that will soon result in chaos in public affairs, for it discourages competent men from seeking or even accepting public office. What public officials of the present day need the most is not more backbone, but more backbone of the public. When a man who is known to be honest and capable is selected to fill a public position it is the duty of the people to stand by him and aid in every way to make his administration a success. Everybody needs encouragement in their work, which condition applies to the man who is trying to conduct public business more than any other. The success of any public enterprise depends entirely upon the interest manifested by the public. If the people are willing to help their officials perform their duties in a satisfactory manner it will be possible to accomplish things worth while, but if they are indifferent and hang back when their moral support and real assistance is most needed it is a long gamble as to whether or not anything worth while will be done. The road of a public official is a hard one and lies uphill all the way. If the people do not lift him in throwing rocks and other debris in the way while traveling the work becomes that much harder and discouraging. When the people cooperate with those in office any system of government is productive of good, but when they fail to take any interest, except in the way of criticism, there is little hope of success, no matter what the governing system may chance to be. The people themselves are the government and if they help their representatives in doing their best there will be much good wrought. Public officials are no worse than the people who elect them and they cannot do more effective work in office than the people will let them. The people can get whatever they want along administrative lines and if they fail to get what they want it is their fault, because they have failed to cooperate with those whom they placed in power. Government derives its powers from the consent of the governed. It is then up to the people to make or unmake the men who represent them in official power.

If there were as many people who really understood public questions as there are those who think they do how easy it would be to establish an ideal system of government in this country.

UNCLE Sam bars babies from the parcels post. This will be a great disappointment to the little ones who were expecting to get a baby brother that way.

SEVERAL Charlevoix citizens have been "forced by their friends" to run for various public offices. What sort of friendship is that, pray tell?

THE lemon crop is said to be large this year. So we have noticed.

"Go! Go quick, you man!"

peal of silvery laughter and chattered to her servant. But her words, instead of placating the black woman, only added to her fury. She pointed with quivering hand to the path along the creek bank and cried:

"Go! Go quick, you man!" Then to her charge: "You had, had! Go to the house!"

"Miss Chilpita hasn't done anything to make you huffy. I came out of the woods yonder, and she was good enough to direct me to the road."

But Stephanie was not to be appeased. She stamped her foot and repeated her command in so savage a tone that Kirk perceived the uselessness of trying to explain. He looked reproachfully at the girl, but she merely nodded her head and motioned him to be gone.

That evening he sat for a long time alone on the gallery of his hotel, his spirit uplifted with the joy of love, a thousand whispering voices in his ears. And when at last he fell asleep it was to dream of an olive, oval face with eyes like black peaches.

CHAPTER XII.

The Path That Led Nowhere.

WHEN "Senor Antonio" awoke the next morning he lay for an instant striving to recall what it was that had haunted his sleeping hours, what great event awaited him. Then as it rushed through his mind he leaped out of bed. This was tomorrow! But the afternoon was still a long way off, and he must be content to dream until the hour came.

It was the hottest part of the day when he set out, sun on arm, yet never thought of the discomfort. After skirting the city he swung into the fine macadam road that had brought him home the night before, and much sooner than he expected he arrived at the little path that led into the forest. As upon the previous day, he broke into the glade before he suspected his presence. There was the tree from which she had called to him, yonder the bench where they had sat together.

Of course he was too early. He wanted to be in order not to miss an instant of her company, so he seated himself and dreamed about her. The minutes dragged, the jungle drowned. An hour passed. Why didn't she come? A sudden apprehension overtook him, which grew and grew as the afternoon wore away.

It was a very miserable young man who wandered out through the fragrant path as the first evening shadows settled and bent his dejected steps toward the city. Evidently something had occurred to prevent her keeping her tryst, but he determined to return on the morrow and then if she did not come to follow that other path right up to her house, which must be near the pool. He would risk everything for a word with her. He wondered if she had stayed away, purposely to test him, and the thought gave him a thrill. If so she would soon learn that he was in earnest. He resolved to go hunting earlier hereafter and give the whole day to it. Meanwhile he would make cautious inquiries.

It was considerably after dark when he reached the hotel, and his friends had dined. But he encountered Mr. Cortlandt later. If Edith's husband suspected anything of what had occurred a night or two ago his own tongue gave no sign of it. For some reason or other Kirk had not been troubled in the slightest by the thought that Cortlandt might be told. He could not imagine Edith making him the confidant of her outraged feelings. Besides, would such a strangely impassive person resent any little indiscretion in which his wife might choose to indulge? Kirk did not know. The man was a puzzle to him.

Cortlandt's voice was thoroughly noncommittal as he inquired:

"Where have you been keeping yourself?"

"I've been hunting to kill time."

"By the way," continued the other, "your friend Allan has been beseeching Edith imploring her to use her influence to get him a position. He has set his heart upon going to work with you."

"He is becoming a positive nuisance. I can't get rid of him."

"I never saw such hero worship."

"Oh, all niggers are hysterical."

"Let me give you a bit of advice, Anthony. Remember, there are no 'niggers' and 'whites' in this country—they are both about equal. The president of the republic is a black man, and a very good one too."

"That reminds me, I hear he is to be succeeded by the father of my friend, Alvarez."

Cortlandt hesitated. "General Alvarez is a candidate. He is a very strong man, but—"

"I am glad there is a 'but'."

"It isn't settled, by any means. The successful candidate will need the support of our government."

"I suppose the Alvarez family is one of the first settlers—Mayflower stock?"

"Oh, worse than that. The name runs back to Balboa's time."

"What are some of the other leading families?" Kirk artfully inquired.

"There are a number. The Martinezes, the Moras, the Garavels—I couldn't name them all. They are very fine people too."

"Do you know the Chilpitas?"

Cortlandt's face relaxed in an involuntary smile.

"There is no such family. Who has been teaching you Spanish?"

"Really, isn't there?"

"Chilpita" means "very small," "little one," "little girl" or something like that. It's not a family name. It's a term of endearment usually. What made you take it for a proper name?"

"A—little girl told me."

"Oh, naturally. All children are 'Chilpitas' or 'Chiquitos'—everything, in fact, that is a pet."

Kirk felt somewhat uncomfortable under the older man's gaze of quiet amusement.

"But these other families," he went on in some confusion, "I mean the ones like those you just mentioned, they sometimes intermarry with Americans, don't they?"

"No, not the better class. There have been a few instances, I believe, but for the most part they keep to themselves."

"How would a fellow set about meeting the nice people?"

"He wouldn't. He would probably live here indefinitely and never see the inside of a Panamanian house."

"But there must be some way," the young man exclaimed in desperation. "There must be dances, parties—"

"Of course, but Americans are not invited. The men are easy to get acquainted with, charming, courteous, gentlemanly, but I dare say you will leave Panama without so much as meeting their wives or sisters. But why this consuming curiosity? Has some senorita struck your fancy?"

In spite of his effort to appear unconcerned Kirk felt that he looked uncomfortably self-conscious. Without waiting for a reply Cortlandt continued to give him information as if he enjoyed it.

"I suppose one reason why so few Americans marry Panamanians is that our men like to get acquainted with their brides before marriage, and that is impossible in this country. A man never sees a girl alone, you know. When he calls to court her he woos the whole family, who vote on him, so to speak."

Kirk suddenly realized to the full how egregious his request to call must have appeared to the Spanish girl. What a fool he had been, to be sure! For a moment he lost himself in a contemplation of the difficulties so unexpectedly presented. He was brought to himself by the words:

"Tomorrow you will go to work."

"What's that?" he broke forth in a panic. "I can't go to work tomorrow. I'm going hunting."

Cortlandt eyed him curiously.

"I didn't say tomorrow. I said tomorrow you will go to work. What is the matter with you? Have you lost your head over shooting, or don't you care to work?"

"Oh, neither," he said hastily. "I merely misunderstood you. Of course the sooner the better."

"Yes, as you say, the sooner the better," said Cortlandt, with a shade of meaning. "Well, good night and good luck to you in your shooting."

He hunted the vicinity of the meeting place all the morning, but no one came, and a heavy shower of midday drove him into the palm thicket that he had chosen. When it had passed he put an end to his indecision and boldly took the other path. At least he would find out where she lived, and who she was. But once again he was disappointed. The trail led out through the grove to the rain-drenched pasture, where it disappeared.

stead of one house he saw three, half hidden in foliage and all facing in the opposite direction. They stood upon the crest of a hill fronting the road, and he realized that the pool might be the bathing place for the inmates of one or all of them. He went to all three, but nowhere did he see the girl or the Barbadian woman; nowhere did he receive an intelligible answer to his questions.

Whether the girl had been playing with him or whether she had been prevented from keeping her word was of little moment now. He loved her, and he intended to have her.

He was detailed to ride No. 2, which left Panama at 6:25, returning on No. 7, which arrived at 7 p. m. For a few days he made the run in company with the train collector, whose position he was destined to fill, and, as the duties were by no means difficult, he quickly mastered them.

He was glad of his new found independence, moreover, for, though it did not cancel his obligation to the Cortlandts, it made him feel less keenly. Certainly he could not complain of a lack of incident in his new life. On his first trip to Colon and back he had nine disputes and two fights and threw out a man off—a record achievement, he was told, for a beginner.

A further diversion was furnished by Allan, who appeared early in the morning and all but assaulted the gentleman, who refused to let him pass without a ticket. It took the entire station force to prevent him from starting for Colon as Kirk's guest. He considered it a matter of course that his friend should offer him the courtesies of the road, and he went away at last, woefully disappointed, but not discouraged.

On the evening of that eventful day, instead of returning to his new quarters, Kirk proceeded to walk the streets in search of a certain face. He strolled through the plazas; he idled in front of the most pretentious residences; he tramped wearily back and forth through the lit, narrow streets, gazing up at windows and balconies, harkening for the tone of a voice or the sound of a girl's laughter. But he was without the slightest success, and it was very late when he finally retired, to dream, as usual, of Chilpita.

Several days passed, and he began to feel a little dull. He was making no progress in his quest, and he did feel the lack of congenial society. Then one evening there came a note from Edith Cortlandt briefly requesting him to come and see her.

Promptly at 8 o'clock he presented himself.

"I'm a laboring man now," he said as he stood before her, "and I usually hold my cap in my hand and shuffle my feet when talking to ladies. Pray excuse my embarrassment."

She did not respond to the lightness of his tone. Her glance seemed intended to warn him that she meant to be serious.

"I suppose you are wondering why I sent for you. I've discovered what Jefferson Locke is."

"Not who he is?" Kirk was instantly all attention. He had almost forgotten Locke.

"His real name is Frank Weller, and he is an absconder. He was a bookkeeper in St. Louis, and he made off with something like $80,000 in cash."

"Good heavens!" said Anthony. "How did you find out?"

"A bundle of New York papers. They came today."

"Where did they catch him?"

"They haven't caught him. He has disappeared completely. That's the strangest part of it. Your detective didn't die after all. But I can't understand why the police haven't discovered your whereabouts. You left New York openly under the name of Locke."

"Perhaps it was so easy they overlooked it," he smiled ruefully. "I'd hate to be arrested just now when I'm getting to be such a good conductor."

"Don't worry about that until this time comes. I'll get you the papers."

Chased by an Unfeeling Man With a Club.

later. He began to feel embarrassed. It seemed to be his fate to receive benefits at this woman's hand whether he willed it or not.

"I must go now, but first I want to make you feel how grateful I am for your kindness and for your continued trust in me. I haven't deserved it, I know, but—"

He turned as if to leave, but faced her again as he heard her pronounce his name. He was surprised to see that there were tears in her eyes.

"EVER-LASTING-LY GOOD"

P. Lorillard Co.—Established 1760

"Kirk," she said, "I'm an awfully good sort, and I can't stay angry with you."

"You're tremendously good," he answered, really touched. "I can't say anything except that I'll try to be worthy of your kindness."

She gave him a half-dressed look, then smiled brightly.

"We won't talk of it any more," she said. "Now, do sit down and tell me what you have been doing all this time. How have you been getting along with your work?"

"All right, except one morning when I overslept."

In the days that followed he tried his very best to make good on his job. Every evening he had to himself. He spent in search of the Spanish girl. Aside from his inability to find her and an occasional moment of misgiving at the thought of Frank Weller, alias Jefferson Locke, Kirk had but one worry, and that was caused by Allan. Never a day passed that the worshipful black boy did not fairly bombard him with his attentions; never a night journey down into the city that Allan did not accompany him or, failing permission to do so, follow him at a safe distance. For a time Anthony rebelled at this espionage, but the constant effort of refusal grew tiresome after awhile, especially as the Jamaican did just as he pleased anyhow, and Kirk ended by letting him have his way.

He turned up regularly every day on Kirk's trains without money to pay his fare. Becoming really concerned lest he should be accused of withholding fare, Kirk spoke to humors about Allan, explaining fully, whereupon a watch was set, with the result that on the very next morning Allan was chased out of the railroad yards by an unfeeling man with a club. He was waiting when the train pulled in that evening, glared at the iron bars, his eyes showing as white in the gloom as his expansive grin of welcome.

For several days this procedure was repeated with variations until the dreadful threat of arrest put an end to it. Allan had conceived a wholesome respect for St. Louis police, and for a few days thereafter Kirk was rid of him. Then one morning he reappeared as usual in one of the forward coaches and proudly, triumphantly, displayed a ticket, exclaiming:

"It is of no avail to prevent me, now."

"That ticket is good only to Corozal, the first station. You'll have to get off there." But when Corozal had been passed he found Allan still comfortably ensconced in his seat.

"Now, boss, we shall have fine visits today," the negro predicted warmly, and Kirk did not have the heart to object him.

At the other end of the line Allan repeated the process, and thereafter worked diligently to amass sufficient money to buy tickets from Panama to Corozal and from Corozal to Mount Hope, relying with splendid faith upon his friend to protect him once he penetrated past the lynx-eyed gatekeeper.

Humors accepted Kirk's explanation, and so far exceeded his authority as to make no objection. Allan, therefore, managed to spend about half his time in company with the object of his adoration.

Although the master of transportation never referred to his conversation with Kirk on the occasion of their trip through Culebra cut, he watched his new subordinate carefully, and he felt his instinctive liking for him increase. It gave Humors pleasure to see how he attended to his work once he had settled down to it.

Accordingly, it afforded him no unpleasant surprise when he received a printed letter from a St. Louis detective agency relative to one Frank Weller, alias Jefferson Locke, last seen in Panama.

New York, city, Nov. 25 and offering a substantial reward for information leading to his arrest. The communication reached Humors through the usual channel, copies having been distributed to the heads of various departments. It was the description that caught his attention:

"White; age, twenty-eight years; occupation, clerk; eyes, bluish gray; hair, light, shading upon yellow; complexion, fair; height, six feet; weight, 180 pounds. No prominent scars or marks, so far as known, but very particular as to personal appearance and considered a good athlete, having been captain of U. of C. football team."

There was but one man in Humors' department whose appearance tallied with all this. Nevertheless he held the letter on his desk and did nothing for a time except to question his new collector upon the first occasion. The result was not at all reassuring. A few days later, chancing to encounter John Weeks on his way across the isthmus, he recalled Kirk's mention of his first experience at Colon.

"Anthony? Oh, yes," wheezed the fat man. "I see you've got him at last. There's something about him I don't understand. Either he's on the level or he's got the nerve of a burglar."

"How so?"

"Well, I know he isn't what he claims to be. I have proof. He's no more Darwin K. Anthony's son than—"

"Darwin K. Anthony?" exclaimed the railroad man in amazement. "Did he claim that?"

"He did, and he—" The speaker checked himself with admirable diplomatic caution. "Say, he's taught me one thing, and that is that it doesn't pay to butt into other people's business. I played him to lose, and he won, and I got into a fine mess over it. Alvarez lost his job for arresting him."

"You'll get your money, Anthony told me he'd square up on pay day."

Weeks snorted at this. "Why, I've got it already. I've been paid. Mr. Cortlandt sent me her check."

He winked one red eye in a manner that yet humors to thinking deeply.

BLACK SILK
LIQUID STOVE POLISH

Keeps Your Stove
"Always Ready for Company"

A bright, clean, glossy stove is the joy and pride of every housekeeper. But it is hard to keep a stove nice and shiny—unless Black Silk Stove Polish is used.

Here is the reason: Black Silk Stove Polish sticks right to the iron. It doesn't rub off or dust off. Its shine lasts four times longer than the shine of any other polish. You only need to polish one-fourth as often, yet your stove will be cleaner, brighter and better looking than it has been since you first bought it. Use on your parlor stove, kitchen stove or gas stove, get a can from your hardware or stove dealer. If you do not find it better than any other stove polish you have ever used before, your dealer is authorized to refund your money. But we feel sure you will agree with the thousands of other up-to-date women who are now using Black Silk Stove Polish and who say it is the "best stove polish ever made."

LIQUID OR PASTE
ONE QUALITY

Be sure to get the genuine. Black Silk Stove Polish costs you no more than the ordinary kind. Keep your grates, registers, fenders and stove pipes bright and free from rusting by using BLACK SILK AIR-DRYING ENAMEL. Brush it with each can of enamel only.

Use BLACK SILK METAL POLISH for silver, brass, nickel, hardware or brass. It works quickly, easily and leaves a brilliant surface. It has no equal for use on automobiles.

HELPED CELEBRATE BIRTHDAY

Mrs. Joel King of Ironton Surprised by Her Friends.

Seventy-second Birthday Made an Event Long to be Remembered.

The party Tuesday evening, March 3rd, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Joel King in honor of Mrs. King's 72nd birthday was a complete surprise. Mr. King's birthday is also in February and for the past twelve years they have been surprised on one or the other of the dates.

This year, however, when Mrs. Cora Hammond invited the friends to supper they were no longer surprised. About 400 one of the boys of the neighborhood, age six years, was sent on an errand, but, getting places mixed, he went to the King residence and informed them that his father and mother would be over to spend the evening, but not to tell anybody. Here Mrs. Webb, who was present, came to the rescue and smoothed matters over very nicely.

After a late supper Mrs. Hammond—knowing that a number of guests had arrived at the King residence just across the street—feigned a headache, whereupon Mr. King offered to get something from home for its relief. Mrs. King decided to go along. Mrs. Hammond then followed closely behind, leaving her headache at home.

Upon their arrival they found the house lighted and 25 guests holding sway. A potluck lunch was served and a very enjoyable evening was spent.

One of the features which particularly amused Mrs. King was the fact that one of the guests, who had walked over a mile upon slippery roads, had come with one rubber shoe and one on.

After the 1914 surprise it will probably take more than an invitation to supper to put Mr. and Mrs. King off the record.

CUTS HUGE TREE

Thirty-five Hundred Feet of Lumber Scaled from the Body.

A large elm which has stood for years on the E. H. Wagonman property, seven miles from Boyne on the Ironton road, was cut down the other day, the owner thinking it was a cull and intending to make stove wood out of it. When the monarch had been felled it was found to be anything but a hollow shell. From the body 3500 feet of lumber was scaled, netting $49, and eight cords of stove wood, of which $8 worth was sold. From what was supposed to be good for only a few cords of stove wood $57 cash was derived.

The resources of this forest giant did not end in wood and lumber, for in the branches were found three coons, two of which were captured alive and the hide taken from the body of the third. In addition to this was a swarm of bees, but no honey.

The elm was the largest tree on the Ironton peninsula and doubtless had stood there for hundreds of years, a mute witness of the changes of the ages, finally giving its life in all its richness, to add to the prosperity of a member of the race which has been a history from the black depths of the primeval forest.—Boyne City Journal.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

LAWFUL ON THE SABBATH. Luke 13:10-17; 14:1-6—March 15.

The Sabbath was made for man, and not man for the Sabbath. Mark 2:27.

MUCH confusion prevails respecting the Sabbath. Few realize that God's arrangements with Jesus' followers are totally different from those which He made with Natural Israel under the Law Covenant. Everything under that Covenant contained a valuable lesson for Christians; but to mistake type for antitype to confuse our minds and to make the force of the antitype.

There was no Sabbath before the Jewish Law, except that God rested on the seventh great Day of the Creative Week. Enoch, Abraham, and others, pleasing to God, knew nothing about the Sabbath, even as they knew nothing about the Atonement Day sacrifices or other matters appertaining to Israel's Law Covenant.

Israel a House of Servants—The Church a House of Sons.

Israel was a House of Servants, under Moses; but the Church is a House of Sons, under Christ. (Hebrews 3:12.) God's method of dealing with the House of Servants very properly differed from that with the House of Sons. Commandments are given servants without explaining why or wherefore; but to the Christian the Heavenly Father makes known His purposes, that His sons may sympathetically enter into those plans, by joyful obedience to the extent of self-sacrifice.

Jesus and the Apostles were Jews, and were under the Law Covenant until Jesus by His death became "the end of the Law for righteousness to every one that believeth." Since then Jesus' followers are no longer bound by the Jewish Law. In dealing with the House of Sons God, through the Head of that House, has set up a new Law, which means much more than Moses' Law was understood to signify. It is the Law of Love. Jesus said: "A new commandment I give you, That ye love one another as I have loved you."

Early in the Gospel Dispensation Jesus' followers began to meet on the first day of the week. Jesus arose from the dead on that day, and appeared several times to His followers. Apparently it became a custom amongst the disciples to fellowship on that day because of their desire to remember the Master. Quite probably they kept the Sabbath as well, for a time. Evidently they had difficulty in realizing how completely they had passed from the domination of Moses' Law to be under the Headship of Jesus.

To Do Good on the Sabbath.

Jesus did many of His miracles on the Sabbath, partly no doubt to emphasize the fact that the Great Sabbath, the seventh thousand-year Day of earth's history, will be the time of His Kingdom. In which mankind will be privileged to be healed from sin, sorrow and pain, and brought to the full perfection of human nature, lost in Eden and redeemed at Calvary.

Since Jesus was a Jew, and therefore bound by the Jewish Law, He could do nothing contrary to that Law. But He corrected certain misapprehensions of the Law, which had crept in through the teachings of the Doctors of the Law and the Pharisees. For show these exaggerated the letter of the Law in some respects, while entirely ignoring its spirit. In various ways they made God's Law appear unreasonable; and while particular in inconsiderable trifles, they set aside the much more weighty matters of justice, love and mercy.

In today's lesson, we have two instances of healing on the Sabbath. Jesus healed a woman who had been bowed down for eighteen years with an infirmity. But the ruler of the synagogue was indignant, and said to the people, "There are six days in which you can come and be healed, rather than on the Sabbath. This was intended as a special rebuke to Jesus, intimating that He violated the Law. But the Lord's reply put His adversaries to shame.

The other case was that of a man troubled with dropsy. Jesus, knowing their mental attitude, discussed the subject in advance, asking the Doctors of the Law and the Pharisees, "Is it lawful to heal on the Sabbath, or not?" They made an answer. Then He healed the sick man, and turned to the critics, "Which of you having an ass or an ox fall into a pit would not straightway draw him out on a Sabbath day?" They could not answer.

A proper understanding of the Sabbath, the rest which God has provided for His people, is a great blessing—a perpetual joy. Without regard to which day, the Apostle suggests that we forsake not the assembling of ourselves together, as the manner of some is; and so much the more as we see the glorious Day of Messiah's Kingdom approaching, and the shadows of darkness, ignorance and superstition passing away.—Hebrews 10:25.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend making a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

PLANTING OF EARLY POTATOES

Information as to the Best Methods of Getting Satisfactory Results.

KEEP SEED IN A COLD PLACE

Temperature of About 35 Degrees Will Prove the Best.

Long White Sprouts Which Start in the Cellar are of No Use—Fertilizer Should Always Be Used When Planting.

In planting early potatoes where the acreage is large enough to make it necessary that the work should be done with the planter the sprouts cannot be allowed to start as much as with the carefully hand-planted tubers. Still, if the crop is desired early quite a little time can be gained by starting the sprouts in a warm, light place. The long white sprouts which start in the cellar are of no use. They only sap the vitality of the tuber and cause the next set of sprouts to be weaker and they will not produce the crop of potatoes the first would.

The seed should be kept in a cold, dark place, where the temperature is about thirty-five degrees, to get the best results. A few weeks previous to planting they should be brought into a warm, light place and spread where the sprouts will start. I do not prefer for the sun to shine directly upon potatoes put to sprout, for the very early crop to be planted in a small way by hand, as described under that head, but it is alright for those which are to be planted through a machine. The sun will green and toughen the sprouts and at the same time soften up the tubers.

Potatoes exposed to direct sunlight will start their sprouts more slowly and they will be stouter and less liable to break off. In other words, direct sunlight will seem to put the potato in better shape to start its sprouts quickly when planted in suitable soil and at the same time start them the least before planting. As it won't do for seed which is to go through a planter to have the sprouts, but just will start, owing to their breaking off, this is a decided advantage.

Potatoes warmed and softened by the sun with the sprouts just well showing in the eyes will come forward and be from nine to two weeks ahead of the same seed taken right from the cellar or pit and when cutting this gives a chance to throw away all infertile eyes and all tubers in which the sprouts fail to start. This means a much better stand of plants.

The ground should be well fitted in order that the planter can do its best work. The depth to plant early potatoes with a machine must, to a certain extent, be governed by local conditions. In sections where there is but little danger of moisture becoming short early in the season they can be planted more shallow. The deeper they are covered the longer they will be in coming up and in many cases the weaker they will be.

If the crop was desired as early as possible I should not have them covered over two inches below the surface of the ground when the ridges which the machine left in planting is leveled off. This leveling off should be done as soon as possible after planting. In order to be sure that all seed is covered on an average of two inches after the surface has been smoothed down the planter must be set so that there will be at least five inches of soil over the greater part of it, as the planter leaves the rows before leveling. This extra three inches of soil should be worked off at once, as it prevents to the planted seed and delays growth and would retard the crop many days.

The top soil is the warmest in the early spring, but we have got to keep in mind the fact that later in the season the soil deeper down contains more moisture and is in better condition for growth of tubers than in that nearer the surface. We must have even our early potatoes rooted deeply as we can and when we have planted them only two inches below the surface we have made as great a sacrifice for warmth and an early start of the crop as the exigencies of the latter part of the season will warrant.

In planting early varieties of potatoes I have found it best not to use over seven or eight hundred pounds of high grade fertilizer per acre in the drill at planting time. Early varieties are not so vigorous as a rule as the latter or main crop, and the amount of fertilizer that many times will not cause any appreciable damage in the later kinds will do quite an amount of damage to the seed of an early variety. The rows of an early variety with its usually smaller growth of vine can be several inches nearer together, most growers planting from 20 to 30 inches.

In planting early potatoes it is better to have fertilizer of two different formulas. The one to be used in the drill to have its nitrogen in a slower form than nitrate of soda, as it is usually several weeks before the plants would have root growth enough to readily use it. Nitrate of soda is available over night when placed in damp soil, and would be in case of heavy rain previous to the potatoes breaking ground, largely lost to the crop.

When the plants are well up so that the rows can be plainly seen the balance of the fertilizer to be used should be applied. In my experience I have got the best results from applying this along the row and by hilling the plants, covering them some three or more inches.

The second application of fertilizer can have its nitrogen content largely in the form of nitrate of soda. The plants will now have a large root system and it will cause them to make a very quick growth at this time.

WILL OPEN A VARIETY STORE

Charles L. Gonser to Leave Employ of Pere Marquette Railroad.

Expects to be Ready for Business by April 10th in the Wilbur Building.

Chas. L. Gonser, who has for the past nine years been in the employ of the Pere Marquette Railroad as station agent in this city, will soon tender his resignation and open a variety store in the Wilbur building next the bridge. Mr. Gonser states that he will carry a full line of notions, dishes, glassware, granite, toys, in fact, everything that is to be found in an up-to-date variety store. He expects to be ready for business by the 10th of April.

Previous to holding his present position he was in the employ of the same company at Traverse City for about ten years. He is well known and needs no introduction to the buying public.

Mr. and Mrs. Gonser left Monday for Chicago, where they expect to purchase a full line of goods for their new store.

Masonic Potluck Supper.

On Tuesday, March 24th, at 6 o'clock potluck supper will be served at the Masonic Temple for Masons and their wives and Eastern Stars and their husbands. After supper the evening will be spent with games and in visiting. It is hoped that all members of both orders will come out and make this a pleasant gathering. Visiting members will be welcomed.

NORMALS WERE WINNERS

Won Out in Debate Held in the High School Assembly Room Friday.

The 1914 Seniors and the Normal class held a debate in the assembly room Friday morning. The Senior class team consisted of Paul Harsha, Dean Scroggie and Ole Lyngklip, while those of the Normal class were Edna Strigley, Velma LaCount and Rhoda Cliff. The subject was: Resolved, "That the United States Should Own and Control the Railroads in the U. S."

Many fine points were brought out, showing that a careful study had been made of the subject by every member who took part. R. L. Lewis, Rev. C. E. Toggart and R. W. Kane presided as judges and awarded the decision in favor of the Normal class.

NEW INDUSTRIES BADLY NEEDED

Should Have Employment for Laboring Men All the Year Round.

Why Not Make a United Effort to Have Industries Located Here?

One of the greatest needs of the city of Charlevoix is something along the line of industries—something that will keep the hundreds of laboring men employed every day in the year. In the summer time business is good and everyone has employment, but after the resort season is over there is practically nothing doing in any line.

We have been informed that the Hart Preserving & Canning Co. are looking for a location for a branch factory. Where is there a better place to locate than right here at Charlevoix? And what place in Michigan is more in need of a good canning factory than Charlevoix? And, further, where is there a place in Northern Michigan where there is more of the products used by a canning factory grown than right here in our immediate vicinity?

During the season there is any amount of fruit and vegetables allowed to go to waste on account of over production. If we had a canning factory here not only would this surplus be taken care of but the acreage would be more than doubled. The hickster could take care of his regular customers and dispose of the balance of his products to the canning factory. He would grow double what he does now and have a market for all he produces.

Charlevoix owns or can easily obtain many desirable factory sites, not only of this nature but suitable for almost any industry that can be induced to locate here. Industries that are worth having must also have more than promises and a favorable climate to induce them to locate at any place. A good industry does not want a bonus but a favorable site with adequate shipping facilities. The small industry that makes a good line of staple products is the best kind of a proposition for Charlevoix and there are plenty of them that would be paying investments in this part of the state if we could get them headed this way. We have the sites and the next requisite needed is the development of the spirit of cooperation among the citizens, which will make them all boosters for the city and any new industry that may chance to look good.

If Charlevoix wants new industries she can have them. All that is needed is for the people to get together and determine that they will work together along this line and pull together until something has really been accomplished.

Committee of Twenty-one, here's a chance to do something for the good of Charlevoix along the line of new industries.

VISIT THE SCHOOLS

Teachers Urge Parents to Visit the Public Schools
Tuesday, March 24.

Parents are urged by the teachers to make it a point to visit the schools Tuesday, March 24, as this day has been set aside as Visiting Day and a special effort will be made to show the work that has been accomplished and in no small way the progress that is being made. Specimens of work done by the students will be on display and the regular school work will be carried on.

In the evening an entertainment will be given in the high school room. Stereoscopic views will be shown of the Panama Canal, a feature that should be of interest to everyone.

To All Whom It May Concern.

The undersigned is a candidate for the office of Mayor at the spring election. My name will appear on the ticket named "Progressive" and that name will stand for a new administration and to be plain about it, that means exactly that those now holding appointive offices need not apply.

HELD THEIR ANNUAL MEETING

W. C. T. U. Elect Officers for the Ensuing Year.

Miss Agnes Rodgers Chosen as President—Large Attendance Enjoyed the Fine Program.

The Women's Christian Temperance Union meeting last Friday afternoon with Mrs. J. H. Connor was one of special interest. In spite of the fact that the walking was about as bad as it could be, there was a large attendance both of members and those taking part in the program and visitors.

Thirty-five members were in attendance. Mrs. John Burns presided. Mrs. Richard Lewis had charge of the devotional exercises. As this was the annual meeting, reports of superintendents and officers for the past year were given. The report of the flower mission, Mrs. John Burns superintended, was especially fine and a rising vote of thanks was given her. The report of the recording secretary was given and accepted with thanks. The financial secretary gave a report, which was accepted. A number of those who have been remembered with flowers during sickness expressed their warm appreciation.

The result of the election of officers was as follows. The nominating ballot was scattering, but of those who received the highest number several declined to have their names voted on further. On the next ballot Miss Agnes Rogers received 22 out of 32 votes and was declared elected. Mrs. Lewis was re-elected corresponding secretary and Mrs. Wilkinson recording secretary.

It was decided to have the offices of financial secretary and treasurer combined and the election for this office was postponed until the next meeting. The following vice-presidents were chosen: First, Mrs. Campbell; 2nd, Mrs. Taggart; 3rd, Mrs. Edwards; 4th, Mrs. Runkel. Mrs. Alcox was chosen president emerita.

An executive board meeting will be held with Mrs. Wilkinson Tuesday afternoon, March 24th, for the purpose of choosing superintendents and planning the year's work.

It was also decided to have a supper in the near future to raise money for the work. The chair appointed a committee to look after this as follows: Mesdames Geiken, Cooper, Saunders, Scroggie, Arnold, Weikel and Campbell. We are sure that with this committee in charge those who patronize this supper will have their wants well looked after and we bespeak a good patronage. Time and place announced later.

The program, in charge of Miss Jessie Hines and Miss Annie McCall, was a most enjoyable one, creating much enthusiasm. The song "The Children's Happy Day" by grade children was fine and they were encored to the echo.

Thelma Crandall gave a recitation and the grade children gave another selection, "Prohibition's Coming," and such songs and recitations by the boys and girls are going to help bring it about. Some of the young folks gave a yell for the W. C. T. U. outside on the porch. The campaign rally song by the county normal class was fine and they responded after being encored by singing one verse again. Mrs. Cooper had prepared some delicious home-made candy for the children who helped with the program, but they did not make way with it all, as many can testify to having a share, too.

The next meeting will be held with Mrs. Shores.

ECLIPSE OF THE MOON

Astronomers Say It is the Only One That Will Be Visible This Year.

The almost total eclipse of the moon was viewed Wednesday evening by many people in this city. Never has the sky been so clear on the occasion of an eclipse as it was this time. Not a cloud was to be seen and the myriad of stars that were visible made the sight all the more beautiful.

Soon after eight o'clock a shadow began creeping over the orb of which poets sing. By ten o'clock it was almost obscured. But it was not for long, for by midnight the moon was on the job again.

It was a sight that has been anxiously looked forward to by the scientists of the country for a number of weeks and in all large observatories hundreds of photographs were taken.

HANDS STIFF SENTENCES

Judge Mayne Sends Smith and Taylor to Jail on Various Charges.

Last week Judge Mayne sentenced Edward J. Smith to serve from one to three years at Ionia, with the recommendation that he serve the full three years.

Smith was arrested last fall at Boyne City on the charge of wife desertion, and brought to this city for trial. When up before the judge he told a very pitiful tale and begged that he be given another chance. He was placed on parole and from what can be learned from his movements, left for the Canadian Soo. It was learned later that he was at Port Huron and was arrested there by Sheriff Robbins and brought to this city. While at Port Huron Robbins was told that he had another wife living there, to whom he was married before his arrest on the charge of desertion at Boyne City. He was taken to Ionia Tuesday.

Jack Taylor was also sentenced to serve from one to two years at Ionia upon his conviction of the charge of carrying concealed weapons. Taylor was the fellow who some time ago was arrested for jumping a board bill while stopping at the Ferguson House.

OFFERS HORSE MEAT FOR BEEF

Joel Johnston, Real Estate Dealer, Convicted on Serious Charge.

SECOND CARCASS IN BARN

Which He Intended to Dispose Of If Not Apprehended.

Inspector Mickel of State Dairy and Food Department on the Ground—More Convictions to Follow.

One of the vilest crimes ever perpetrated upon the general public was attempted at Boyne City about a week ago, when a farmer by the name of Galinsky, living near Petoskey, sold infected meat to a local dealer. He brought five hogs to the city which had died from cholera and the meat in the stages of decay. They were brought into the city at night while frozen and were not detected until the following morning. The carcasses were immediately taken out and buried and the State food and dairy department notified.

In answer to the complaint W. J. Mickel, inspector from Grand Rapids, went to the city and upon inspection swore out a warrant for Galinsky. Further investigation of his record showed that he had been previously arrested on a like charge and upon conviction he will probably be given the limit of the law.

Inspector Mickel after his arrival in the city began a rigid inspection of all meat markets and compelled several of them to clean up and run their places of business strictly within the law. It was while on this tour of inspection that he was notified that someone had been offering horseflesh for sale which was known to be diseased and impure.

Following up the many tips he had received he soon traced the matter down and found that Joel Johnston, the well-known real estate dealer, who lives near East Jordan, was the man who had made the attempt to sell the dead horse. He was placed under arrest and admitted that he was the guilty party. He had brought the horseflesh to the city about the time the lights were turned on. Many of the butchers did not like the looks of the meat and refused to buy. Further investigation revealed the fact that the horse had died of colic and that Johnston had prepared the meat for the markets knowing that it was unfit for even a dog to eat. A later investigation showed that he had the carcasses of another horse, said to have died of old age, hung up in his barn with the intention of making a sale of the meat after the first horse had been disposed of. It is also said that Johnston admitted at the time he tried to dispose of the meat that it looked bad and tough, but stated that it could be worked up into sausage and hamburger.

He was taken before Justice Hammond of Boyne City. Two charges were brought against him and he was sentenced to serve 90 days in the county jail, which he is now serving. At the trial Johnston claimed that the meat, though horseflesh, was clean and pure and that it had been unloaded upon him as beef.

Saturday the town was again thrown into another convulsion of indignation when it became known that Ed Leits of Horton Bay had tried to dispose of a two weeks old veal at one of the local markets. The same day another case of a man trying to dispose of a hide taken from a dead cow was brought to light.

Residents of the city are at present on a fish and egg diet and the price of these commodities will probably soar beyond reach in a few days. If you are looking for trouble ask a Boyne Cityite which he prefers—hamburger or sausage.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal
BY
REX BEACH

Copyright 1910, 1911, by Harper & Brothers

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hired, Jefferson Locke, to investigate himself into the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Johnson, head of the canal zone. The Cortlandts are intriguing to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Honnel, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taloca, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

The girl tells him her name is "Ciquita." He learns later that that means only "little one." Kirk begins his work. Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Wellar) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries in vain in Panama to learn something of Ciquita and meets Alfarez again.

CHAPTER XIII.

FOR a few days after this conversation the master of transportation was in doubt as to what course he should pursue. In the end he did nothing, and the letter from St. Louis was permanently filed away. There were several reasons for this action. For one thing, he was a salaried man and could not afford to lose his job. What influenced him most, however, was his genuine liking for Anthony.

The first thing Kirk did when pay day came was to huclose the greater part of his salary in an envelope and send it to John Weeks, with a note explaining that he had withheld only enough for his own actual needs, and promising to continue reducing his indebtedness by a like amount monthly. He was surprised beyond measure to have the remittance promptly returned. The brief letter that accompanied it brought him a flash of discomfort. What the devil had made Mrs. Cortlandt do that? For a time he was undecided whether to be offended at her conduct or gratified, and he had not settled the matter to his satisfaction when he called upon her that evening.

"Weeks wrote me you had squared my account with him," he said awkwardly. "I'm tremendously obliged, of course, and I'll give this to you instead of him." He offered her the envelope with his pay inclosed.

"Don't be silly, Kirk," she said in a matter of fact tone. "I didn't wish Weeks to have any opportunity to talk. You need this money and I don't."

"Perhaps I should have offered it to Mr. Cortlandt."

"Stephen knows nothing about the Weeks affair. If you choose to regard my little favor as a debt, however, please let it run on until you are better able to pay."

But Anthony remained indelible, and at last she accepted his proffer with some impatience.

"You are the most foolish person I ever knew," she remarked. "You have the most disappointing way of receiving favors. I had a decent position for you, but you would go to collecting fares. I hope you have had enough of it by now and are ready to take something worth while."

"Not until it comes naturally. Na, hop, skip and jump for mine."

Edith sighed. "It is terribly dull for me here at present," she said. "Mr. Cortlandt is very busy. I have no one to talk to, no one to advise me. Why, I've scarcely seen you since you went to work. Will you come to the dance tomorrow night?"

"He should have been. You will meet some nice people. If you remember, one of your qualifications for a position was that you are a good dancer."

"I've learned something about chess conditions. What would people say if Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt were seen dancing with the new collector of No. 2? Besides, to tell the sad truth, I haven't any clothes."

Edith shortly extended the envelope in her hand, but he laughed.

"Perhaps I'll come to the next dance. I'll be rich then. See?" He showed her a long slip of paper consisting of five coupons, each numbered "8838."

"Lottery tickets?"

He nodded. "Allan had a very particular dream about the number 8, so I invested $5 'silver' on his hunch. It's the number of my automobile license." Kirk sighed at the memory of his new French car. "You don't object to such gambling?"

"Hardly," laughed Edith, "when I have a ticket for the same drawing. Every one does it, you know."

"If I win the capital prize I'll come to the next party and claim all the dances you will allow me. The drawing comes off next Sunday, and it happens that I've been shifted to No. 6 for a few trips, so I'll have a chance to see the fun."

Inasmuch as No. 6 did not leave until 1 o'clock on Sunday, he had ample time in which to witness the lottery drawing, a thing he had been curious to see since he had first heard of it. This form of gambling was well recognized, not only the natives, but all classes of canal zone workers, engaged in it freely. The drawings were conducted under rigid government supervision.

Allan, easily excited, was, of course, waiting to accompany him.

"Oh, boss," exclaimed the negro, "I feel that we shall have a good fortune today!"

"Did you buy a ticket?"

"No, sir; I haven't all my monies traveling on those railroad trains. Now see how foolish you are. If you'd stayed at home you might have bought the winning number today."

"I prefer to accompany you. But I have been thinking to make you a proposition of partnership, Master h'Anthony. I will stay home and dream numbers, which you can purchase with your salary. In that manner we shall certainly burst this lottery. I do not desire the profits, however, for being partners with you, I would like you to have plenty of monies, that is all. I love you, sir."

"Don't! You embarrass me."

The drawing, which was for a capital prize of $15,000 (silver), had drawn a larger crowd than usual, and when the two reached Cathedral square they found the lottery building and plaza thronged to overflowing with the usual polyglot elements that make up these Latin-American gatherings.

By dint of considerable effort Kirk succeeded in working his way through the wide double doors, and, being much above the average height, he was able to get a good view of the proceedings. Upon a platform a group of ceremonious officials were gathered about a revolving wire cage, so arranged that it could be whirled rapidly upon its axis. Into it were put ten ivory spheres, resembling billiard balls in size and appearance. When this had been done the cage was closed, and a very badly frightened twelve-year-old girl was selected at random from the audience, then lifted to the stage, where it required the commands and entreaties of her excited parents to prevent her from dissolving in tears.

At a word from the master of ceremonies the cage was spun until the ivory balls inside leaped and capered like captive squirrels. Then another signal it was stopped. The door was opened, and the little girl reached in a trembling hand and selected a sphere. It proved to be hollow, with two halves screwed together, and in full sight of the assembly it was opened, displaying a bit of paper inside.

"Ocho," cried the announcer, and a card bearing the numeral "8" was raised. The paper was replaced inside the ivory ball, the ball itself was dropped into the wire cage, the door was closed and once more the cage was spun.

Kirk was much interested in the scene, not from any faintest hope that he would draw a prize, but purely from the novel atmosphere and color of the thing. While his eyes were busied and just as the child prepared to draw another ball he felt a clutch upon his arm and, glancing down, he held the glowing black eyes of Senor Ramon Alferez fixed upon him. He started to whisper little words, with which he passed his former prisoner to attract his attention.

At sight of him Kirk drew down his brows and said gruffly:

"Don't poke me with that umbrella. He moved away, but again Alfarez looked him up.

"If you keep jabbing me with that crutch I'll break it, and then you can't walk home."

Ramon jerked his head toward the square outside in an imperious fashion, and Kirk, curious to learn the cause of unusual excitement, followed him without delay. When they had reached the street the Spaniard turned with flashing eyes and a mischievous smile.

"Well," he said dramatically, "Pretty well. How goes it with you?"

"So. You have succeeded in your cowardly attempt."

"My what?"

"I lose my position as commandante of police."

"You don't say so?" Kirk's face broke into a smile of real pleasure.

"Hah! Makes it you to laugh, then?" exclaimed the Panamanian excitedly. "Perhaps you shall answer to those detestable notions, senior."

"Perhaps! I see you blame me for the loss of your job. Well, maybe you won't beat up the next American you get your hands on."

"But—I have another possession!" Ramon exclaimed. "I have been promoted! I am appointed yesterday by his excellency the president to be his secretary."

"I suppose it's a good job, but you ought to be selling poison in a drug store."

Narrowing his eyes, Alfarez said menacingly in a voice that none might overhear, "Panama is sometimes very unhealthily chfy for fat Americans." He ran a hostile glance up and down Anthony's burly frame. "It is the climate perhaps—of too great heat. The senior is really man's son, eh? Those do not gevee the appearance."

With supreme insolence he touched one of the buttons upon Kirk's linen uniform with his cane, whereat the American snatched the stick out of his hand, broke it and tossed it into the street. His blood was up, and in another breath he would have struck the

"You have won the capital prize."

Spaniard, regardless of consequences, but just at that moment Allan dashed out of the crowd crying breathlessly:

"Oh, boss! Oh, boss! Glory to God. It is true! Oh-h-h, glory!" Seizing Kirk's hands, he kissed them before the other could prevent, then ran off frantically: "Come quick! Come! Come! Come!"

"Look out!" snapped Kirk angrily.

"What's happened?"

"The dream! The dream is come! Oh, God, sir! You—you have won the capital prize, sir! You—do not say you have lost the ticket or I shall die and kill myself!"

"Here it is!" In his hand Anthony waved a slip of paper, out of which leaped four big, red numbers—"8838!"

"Quinto!" came from behind him, and he turned to behold Alfarez, livid of face and with shaking hand, fling a handful of similar coupons after the broken cage. Without another word or a glance behind him the Panamanian made off across the plaza, barely in time to escape the crowd that surged around the two he had quitted.

Bombarded by a fusillade of questions in a dozen tongues, jostled by a clamoring, curious throng, the lucky owner of 8838 fought his way back into the lottery building, and as he went the news spread like flaming oil.

There it was, plainly displayed, "8838." There could be no possible mistake, and it meant 15,000 silver pesos, a princely fortune indeed for the collector of No. 2.

Promptly in five minutes to 1 o'clock that afternoon Allan, late of Jpanaca, strode through the Panama railroad station and flung a first class round trip ticket to Colon before the eyes of his enemy, the gatekeeper. He was smoking a huge Jamaican cigar, and his pockets bulged with others. When he came to board the train he called loudly for a porter to bring him the step and once inside selected a shady seat with the languid air of a bored club tourist.

Only when Kirk glanced upon his rounds did he forget his healthy complexion. Then his wide lips, which nature had shaped to a perpetual grin, curved back as they were widened, his smile lit up the car, and he thrust into the air his cane.

Kirk found that the report of his good fortune had spread far and wide; he was hailed a score of times for con-

Good Advice

John, Wanamaker, the merchant prince, who began poor says:

"The difference between the clerk who spends all his salary and the clerk who saves part of it is the difference—in ten years—between the ownership of a business and the man out of a job."

Only the man who has saved money for himself realizes the enormous part played in making money in business by effecting little savings.

I'll Silence the Skeptic

To the Man who knows—who has tried me in Charlevoix, who being satisfied himself, has sent me his brother, his father or his friends—the pleased customer, I send this message: I am particularly anxious, when opportunity affords, that former customers take advantage of any of the extraordinary offerings which I am from time to time enabled to make. I want you to get your order in now at these prices. You can take the suit home at your leisure, a month or two hence—but give me your order now. You have my public word in advance that the values are great, so come in and look them over. Make your selections if the bargains impress you, take your sample home and I'll have your suit ready in a short time or whenever you are ready to wear it. In the meantime, send in your friends.

graduations; operators at the various stations yelled at him and waved their hands; Rannels wired "Hurrah!" at Gatun. A certain respect was in these greetings, too, for he had suddenly become a character.

As yet, however, he had not fully considered what this whirlwind meant to him. His first thought had been that he could now discharge his debts, go back to New York and clear himself before the law. Yet the more he thought of it the less eager he became to return. Seven thousand five hundred dollars in gold to Kirk Anthony of Panama, collector, was a substantial fortune. To Kirk Anthony of Albany, distributor, it was nothing. Suppose he went home and squared some into contact with her recognized the master mind directing the campaign and, consciously or unconsciously, released her husband to the background.

To the Latin intellect this display of power on the part of the woman was a revelation. She knew the effect she produced and made the most of it.

Old Anthony Alferez was perhaps the last fully to appreciate her. He did, however, learn to time that, while he could successfully match his craft against that of the husband, the wife read him merrily. The result was that he broke with them openly.

When news of this reached the members of the canal commission they

 BIBLE STUDY ON

PARABLES OF THE KINGDOM.

Luke 13:18-30—March 22.
 "Not every one that saith unto Me, Lord, Lord, shall enter into the kingdom of Heaven; but he that doeth the will of My Father which is in Heaven."—Matthew 7:21.

TWO illustrations of the Kingdom occur in this lesson. In one case the Lord likens the Kingdom to a grain of mite-hard seed, which from a small beginning became a large bush, in whose branches "the birds lodged." This evidently was intended to picture the outward appearance of the Church—so prosperous as to invite the birds. Elsewhere Jesus declared that the birds represented the Wicked One and his agents, ever ready to take away the seed of Truth and to work adversely as respects the Gospel program. (Matt.
 13:4, 19.) In Revelation also the Great Teacher speaks of the Church as becoming Babylon, confusion, and "a cage of every unclean and hateful bird."—Revelation 18:2.

Again the Master illustrated the experience of His Church as an em-bryotic Kingdom. His second parable tells of a woman who hid some leaven in three measures of meal, until the whole was leavened. This, little students are coming to understand, signifies a corrupting of the living Message—the spiritual food which God had prepared for the Church.

A woman in symbolic language represents a church system; and the Master tells us that such a church system will mix leaven, ferment, in the food of God's family until the whole mass will be corrupted. For be it not ed that in the Bible leaven is always used as a symbol of sin. This parable shows that the faith once delivered to the saints will be mixed with error, until it will no longer be nourishing to the family. St. Paul pictures the same matter, saying that in the latter days
 "some shall depart from the faith, giving heed to seducing spirits and doctrines of demons."—1 Timothy 4:1.

These false doctrines are "what are troubling the people of God today. Our hearts are better than our heads; for the hearts of the consecrated are in tune with the Infinite One, while the creeds of the Dark Ages are quite out of tune. The blessings coming to Bible students result from breaking loose from the creeds formulated in the Dark Ages and getting back to the teachings of Scripture. The Word of God is sufficient, that the man of God may be thoroughly furnished.—2 Tim. 3:16, 17.

Some dear Christian people, looking at matters from a wrong angle are still deceived into thinking that it is possible for the Church, as the Kingdom of God in an embryotic condition, to do the work which God assigns to that church in her future glorified condition.

The Called Saved.
 Some inquired of the Lord, Will there be but few saved? Jesus did not give a direct answer, doubtless for two reasons:

(1) The Holy Spirit had not yet come, and His followers could not then understand God's Plan thoroughly.

(2) It was not due time to explain all the particulars of the spiritual salvation of the Church, and then later the restitution of the world to human perfection.

For a certain time the door to the High Calling stands ajar. The possibilities of entering were first presented to the Jews. After finding the "Israelites" unready, God has directed this selection amongst the Gentiles for more than eighteen centuries. Apparently the gathering of the Elect is nearly completed. As soon as the last one shall have passed through the door, it will shut.

About that time, a great awakening of religious thought will come to the world, in the midst of a great Time of Trouble. Then many will begin to say that they have neglected the prize.
 There will be lamentations amongst this class, and a crying, Lord, Lord, are we not to be of the Bride class?

But the Lord will disown them as respects the Bride company. Then they will be in great sorrow. Weeping and gnashing of teeth will prevail.

This will not be in some far-off place
 of eternal torture,
 as once we supposed, but, as the narrative intimates, it will be right here on earth, amongst a class who neglected the privileges of the High Calling when they knew of it.

The Lord intimates that some of these will have been in close touch with Him and His followers. They had a form of godliness and claimed to have done many mighty works, yet the Lord will disown them as respects Kingdom privileges. They will not have a share even in the earthly Kingdom. It will be given to the Worthies of the past who lived and died before the High Calling was opened up.

The hour is fast passing and will not be long when the first class will be taken away. The second class will be called to the High Calling. The third class will be left behind. The fourth class will be taken away. The fifth class will be taken away. The sixth class will be taken away. The seventh class will be taken away. The eighth class will be taken away. The ninth class will be taken away. The tenth class will be taken away.

ELECTROCUTED WHILE AT WORK

Ivan Sinkler Meets Instant Death in Chemical Co.'s Plant at Boyne City.

Ivan Sinkler, 20 years of age, was electrocuted early Friday morning while at work on the acetate floor of the Boyne City Chemical Co. He received the current from an extension light cord, death coming instantly.

The heat in this room is so excessive at times that the men cannot wear rubber gloves and they use light canvas ones. This room is continually full of steam and everything is saturated with water. Several times previously men have received shocks from the same source but none have proved serious. One man received a voltage of 240 without injury and another had 2200 volts pass through him without being seriously hurt. Sinkler leaves a wife and two children.

Asparagus Analyzed.
Asparagus belongs to the family of plants—Ullaceae—that includes onions, leeks and garlic. Each of these vegetables contains a small quantity of sulphur in the form of an oil. The presence of the sulphur is more noticeable in onions than in asparagus, but it shoots off asparagus are left in water for a few days the odor of onion develops and becomes quite strong. The food value of asparagus is slight, and much of it is lost in the process of boiling. The London Lancet declares that after boiling for twenty minutes asparagus has virtually no food value.

Perpetual Motion.
Perpetual motion is a very old dream. For this purpose machines have been constructed from time immemorial, but nothing has ever come of it. Men have gone mad on the subject, but without any practical results. It was demonstrated long ago by Sir Isaac Newton and De la Hire that perpetual motion is impossible of attainment. Even the solar system, the most wonderful machine of which we have any knowledge, will run down in the course of time, some say in about 11,000,000 of years from now.—New York American.

were alarmed, and Colonel Tolson felt it necessary to make known their views upon the situation. Accordingly, a few nights later the Cortlandts dined at his handsome residence on the heights above Culera. After their return to Panama the colonel, in whom was vested the supreme authority over his nation's interests, acknowledged that his acquaintance with diplomacy was as nothing as compared with Edith Cortlandt's.

"She thinks Garavel is the proper man," he said to Colonel Blank.

"Garavel is a banker. He's not a politician."

"The chief engineer laughed.

"All Spanish-Americans are politicians, colonel. They can't help it."

"Would he accept?"

"It is her business to find out. I had my doubts."

"But could he win? It would be a calamity if he had American backing and failed. It would mean disaster."

"Cortlandt has been working carefully, and he has been in all the seven provinces. He admits that if he might be done, and she is certain. Of course it will mean a fight—Alvarez won't give up easily—but if Garavel should be the next president it would be a fine thing for both countries."

Over at Panama the Cortlandts were looking for a house to lease. Affairs had reached a point where it seemed advisable to give up their quarters at the Tivoli and enter into closer contact with the life of the Spanish city. Meanwhile they gave a ceremonious little dinner, the one and only guest being Andres Garavel, the banker.

Of all the charming peoples of Central America there are perhaps none more polished and well bred than the upper class Panamanians. Of this agreeable type Senator Garavel was an admirable example, having sprung from the finest Castilian stock, as a name running back through the pages of history to the earliest conquests attested.

The present head of the name was of distinguished appearance. He was swarthy of skin, his hair was snow white, and he had stern black eyes of great intelligence. He was courteous and deliberate, evincing a pride that sprang not only from good blood but from good deeds. His poise was that of a man with heavy responsibilities, for Andres Garavel was a careful banker and a rich one. He was widely traveled, well informed and an agreeable talker.

"I am so disappointed that your daughter could not come," Edith told him for the second time. "I'm afraid she objects to our American informality."

"No, no, my dear lady," said their guest. "She admires American customs as I do. We are progressive—we have traveled. In my home, in my private life, perhaps, I am a Panamanian, but in my business and in my contact with other people I am as they are. It is the same with my daughter. She has had a wide education for a child. She has traveled, she speaks five languages, and yet underneath it all she is a Garavel and hence a Panamanian. She is all I have, and my life is hers."

The meal progressed with only the customary small talk to cushion it, but as soon as the third had adjourned to the Cortlandts and the host of the evening proceeded to approach the subject in his mind as directly as the circumstances permitted. Through a series of natural transitions the conversation was brought around to politics, and Garavel was actually stumped. But he displayed little interest. When at last he consented to show his awareness of the suggestion so constantly held out to him by his host, he spoke with deliberate intention.

"General Alvarez is my respected friend," he said, with a quietness that intensified his meaning, "and I rejoice that he will be the next president of Panama."

"You, of course, know that there is opposition to him?"

"All Panamas knows that."

"General Alvarez does not seem to be a friend of the United States. May I speak frankly?"

Garavel lifted his white head without removing his intense, dark eyes from the speaker.

"Don Andres! Alvarez can never be president of Panama!"

The banker made no visible movement, yet the effect of this positive declaration was almost like that of a blow. After a pause he said:

"May I tell you my son?"

"If you wish, but I do not think you will."

"The honor let his eyes fall question-ingly to Mrs. Cortlandt's face to find her smiling at him."

"Believe me, dear lady," he said, "I suspect that if he were grave and sons for this interview, but as yet I am at sea. I am not a politician, you know. I shall have no voice in our political affairs."

"Of course," he knew that, Senator Garavel, and of course there are grave reasons why we wished to talk with you. As Stephen has said, General Alvarez cannot be president."

"Modest," he said softly. "Panama is his account with the police, what would he do then? Nothing, as usual. Here, he was 'proving' that the Anthony breed was self supporting at least. And there was another reason, the weightiest of all. Long before he had reached the end of his career he had that not too many I'm afraid of this capital prize would tempt him to leave Panama before he had seen his quilt."

Chiquita was beginning to seem like a dream. At times during the past week he had begun to wonder if she were not really a product of his own imagination. His fancy had played upon her so extravagantly that he feared he would not know her if ever they came face to face.

This was most unsatisfactory, and he reproached himself bitterly for the involuntary faithfulness that could allow her image to grow dim. He was almost without hope of seeing her again. And then, with the inconsequence of dreams and spells, she appeared to him.

It was but a glimpse he had and a tantalizing flash of recognition from her eyes. It happened in the dusk during the confusion that accompanied the arrival of No. 7 at Panama. It lasted only a moment, and he lost sight of her again in the crowd.

But there was no doubt that she had recognized him, and nothing now could prevent him from continuing his search. The trouble was that his present occupation allowed him no opportunity. He was tied to the railroad except at night.

It was perhaps two weeks later that a serious shakeup occurred in the office force, of which no one seemed to know the cause. There was a mad scramble for advancement all along the line, in which Kirk took no part. But unexpectedly Rumsel summoned him to his office.

"How would you like an inside position?" said the master of transportation, eyeing him keenly.

"So soon?"

"I said I'd advance you if you made good." He paused an instant, then said deliberately, "When you get the hang of things here you'll have a chance to be my assistant."

Kirk opened his eyes in amazement. "Gee! That's great! But do you think I can get away with it?"

"Not at once. It will take time, of course, and you'll have to work like the devil. Look here, Anthony, I'm partly selfish in this, for I believe you're the sort I'm going to want with me in the next year. The superintendent has had an offer from a big system in the states, and he's going to quit when his vacation comes. He likes me and he says I'll probably step into his shoes. Do you understand what that means? I'll need fellows I can count on—fellows who won't double-cross me to make a dollar for themselves, or knife me when my back is turned. I've got to have an efficient, unselfish organization. Otherwise we'll all go under, for we'll be into politics up to our necks. I think you're my sort, so if you'll stick to me I'll help you and for every step I take I'll drag you up with me."

"It's a go!" The two young men clasped hands heartily. Rumsel had struck the right note. He had his finger on the pulse of the man he was to place himself at the head of. Kirk now felt a strong sense of loyalty to the one who had recognized his worth.

When he told his good news to Mrs. Cortlandt, her surprise was so deeply tinged with joy that he never dreamed that she had been at great pains to bring this thing about. Not that Rumsel was possessed to act upon his own initiative, but the circumstances that had made his action possible had been due to her. It was hard to help a man against his will, but she gratified her experience and took the line of least resistance.

The young man himself did not inquire too closely into the occasion of his advancement, and Edith Cortlandt was but little in his mind. He was consumed with the thought of Chiquita. He hoped that his new work would allow him more control of his time and perhaps put him in the way of learning her name. He could move in better society now.

To the General Public:

The annual report of the financial condition of the city was made, in accordance with the law, in October, 1913, and was published in the Charlevoix Courier. Copies of the report can be examined at the City Clerk's office.

In this issue is the trial balance showing the condition of the various funds on the first day of March, 1914.

On March 1st, 1913 the General funds showed a balance of $1,811.82 and the Special Improvement Funds of $1,123.15.

On March 1st, 1914 the General funds showed a cash balance of $10,275.47 and the Special Improvement Funds of $5,884.55.

The special improvement funds are those funds out of which the bonds for building sewers and the paving of the streets are paid, and can be used for no other purpose.

The cash in the General funds is derived chiefly from the July taxes of each year, which are the only taxes levied by the city, and the money received for water and electric current.

All obligations of the city maturing between March 1st, 1913 and March 1st, 1914 held by investors have been paid. All general bonds and all improvement bonds have been paid as they became due. None have been refunded.

In 1912 the City issued four time orders, drawn on the General funds, these are not general or improvement bonds.

1. Due August 30, 1913 at 6 per cent for $10,000.

2. Due August 20, 1915 at 6 per cent for $10,000.

3. Due August 20, 1916 at 6 per cent for $10,000.

These orders were never sold; but the City Treasurer was instructed to use $6,000.00 of the special improvement money, in other words, $6,000.00 of the City's Sinking Funds was used to pay a portion of the City's share for paving Dixon Avenue.

This year the City paid out of its general funds into the proper special sinking funds $1,500.00 leaving $1,500.00 yet to be paid on the above time orders.

When the annual budget was adopted the city, decided it was better to pay the amount of these time orders as they are needed to pay the outstanding bonds against the Michigan and Dixon Avenue paving fund, out of which this money was taken, the last bond of which falls due October 17, 1916. The budget as reported to the council provided for $1,500 to be paid each year, which with the money still due on the special assessment will pay the bonds as they come due.

Another reason for this change was due to the fact that when these orders were issued by the city in 1912, the tax payers were paying into the General funds, taxes at the rate of $15.00 for every one thousand dollars of assessed valuation, and the city in 1912, no doubt anticipated the same rate would be made in 1913. However in 1913 the city tax rate was reduced in $10.00 for every one thousand dollars of assessed valuation.

This explanation is given so that the public might know the exact condition of the city finances. It is evident from the large cash balance in the General funds that the entire issue of $6,000.00 in time orders could have been paid this year and still left the city in a better financial condition than on March 1st, 1913, and it is also evident that the tax rate can be lowered, still further, which the present administration agrees to do if continued in office.

Respectfully yours,

Harry Nicholls, Mayor.

The regular order of business was transacted and the lecture hour consisted of songs, readings and recitations, after which grange was closed to meet again March 24. Visitors always welcome and members are urged to attend and also be prepared to assist the lecturer.

TANKAGE FOR HOGS.

Fed With Discretion, It Is a Profitable Pork Producer.

A great many farmers are beginning to use tankage. I find it beneficial and in a large degree profitable where hogs are kept, writes H. W. Swope in the American Agriculturist. "There isn't anything about good tankage or meat meal that is in any way injurious to hogs, whether young or old. Good tankage contains over 50 per cent protein, and for that reason it answers an important question in animal economy. It is a good feed to use with corn and highly palatable. It need not be fed in large quantities, and, especially when beginning to feed tankage, one part tankage to about ten parts of corn is a very satisfactory ration."

Tankage is animal matter from which the grease and oil have been extracted. This consists of meat scraps and bone from meat markets and packing houses picked up fresh in a large tank and thoroughly cooked at a high temperature. The grease is removed from the surface and tankage is then dried thoroughly, after which it is ground, screened and placed in bags for shipment. The high temperature employed in cooking destroys all disease germs that might be present. Tankage, therefore, all summed up is a pure, safe feed for hogs. It contains 8 to 10 per cent moisture, and in a good, dry place it can be kept for an indefinite period of time.

I have fed tankage to hogs of all ages for several years now and with excellent results in every case. With the high cost of feed a little tankage fed with the corn or ration to the hogs each day will be found a good feed in itself. The cost of feeding tankage seems to increase a trifle every year, but I am sure it will pay off who can use it to do so as long as the price is as reasonable as it is today, considering its protein contents compared with other feeds.

Tankage may be fed dry, either alone or with grain rations. I have found it very satisfactory in a thin soup. One station says that a ration made up of one part tankage and six or eight parts corn has proved to be the most satisfactory, and a greater gain per 100 pounds was secured in this manner of feeding.

A Quick Growing Pig.

I bought a Duroc Jersey pig on March 4, 1913. The pig was two and one-half months old and weighed twenty pounds, writes a Louisiana farmer in the Farm and Home.

The first month I fed one pint of chops mixed with the same amount of wheat shorts and half a gallon of swill three times a day. The second month I added one pint of chops and a quart of swill, making six pints of chops, three pints of shorts and nine quarts of swill per day. I fed the same amount of food up till May 19. Then I began feeding two pints of both chops and shorts and a gallon of swill three times per day. My pig stays in a Bermuda grass pasture all the time and has plenty of fresh water. The first two weeks my pig gained fifteen pounds, April 14 he weighed sixty pounds, April 29 he weighed ninety pounds, on July 11 he weighed 225 pounds, a gain of 205 pounds since the 1st of March; Aug. 29 Prince weighed 316 pounds and on Sept. 16 Prince was nine months old and weighed 391 pounds.

In Interest of Re-forestation.

To encourage the planting of trees the Public Domain Commission is able to furnish seedlings of several varieties at exceedingly low prices. Made a now unsightly and practically worthless tract of land could be set with these varieties and with a small amount of care in a few years the timber would greatly increase in value. If you are interested write to the State Forester, Room common, Michigan.

THE DAIRYMAN.

Clip the long hairs from the under and flanks of the cow. Never allow any manure, mud or filth to remain upon the tail, flanks, under or belly of the cow. If your bull is not of pure blood get rid of him and buy one that is.

Unless the weather is very bad all cows should have at least two hours' exercise in the open air. There are some cattle that are no better in the dairy barn than are the weeds in the cornfield. Keeping two rows to do the work of one is the cause of many losses in dairymaking.

THE BOARD OF PUBLIC WORKS

Brief History of Their Work During the Past Seven Years.

WHAT HAS BEEN ACCOMPLISHED

By Them in Regards to the South Side Sewer During This Time.

How Many Times is it Necessary for Property Owners to Petition for a Sewer—Is Board a Hindrance?

Under the law governing cities of the fourth class, of which Charlevoix is one, the Board of Public Works is entrusted with the management of the water plant and system, the electric light plant and system and the sewer system and its construction.

At the present time much criticism is being directed towards the Common Council in regard to the south side sewer, which embraces a proposed sewer in the second and third wards south of Antrim street.

Perhaps a brief history of this matter would be instructive. July 9, 1907, nearly seven years ago, a petition of property owners on East Huriburt avenue was tendered the Common Council asking for a sewer and the petition was promptly referred to the Board of Public Works, where it has remained ever since. On February 6, 1912, another and still larger petition, signed by Jas. Saunders and twenty-four other property owners on East Huriburt avenue, was presented to the Common Council, at which time a motion made by Captain G. C. Geiken and seconded by Amos Webster was adopted by the Council, providing that the petition as presented be accepted and referred to the Board of Public Works with instructions to prepare the necessary plans, and specifications and estimates of costs and to take immediate action to comply with the request of the petitioners.

On March 5th, 1912, the Board of Public Works passed a resolution to have the south side sewer district in the hands of the sewer committee. From that date until September 22nd, 1913, the Board of Public Works were considering the south side sewer and the petition of the property holders on East Huriburt avenue.

It was presumed that the Board—which consists of a president and four assistants, chosen from representative business men—was giving the sewer question their best efforts, and they, on the 22nd day of September, 1913, adopted a motion as follows: "Moved by Adams and seconded by Bergeon, that the resolution prepared by the city attorney be presented to the Common Council for adoption, for the laying of a sewer in Bridge street, Helvedere avenue, May street and Alice street, together with connecting laterals, be and is hereby approved, adopted and recommended for adoption by the Common Council. Motion carried by the following ye and nay vote," which consisted of the entire sewer committee.

The same resolution is the one that recites "that the plans, diagrams, specifications and estimates of the Board of Public Works" and the property be assessed was established. On September 20, 1913, the above resolutions were presented to the Common Council with the written approval of the Board of Public Works, signed by N. R. Washburn, president of the Board, and Fred L. Slaght, clerk of the Board. Similar resolutions were adopted for the second ward sewer and the blanket sewer.

The Council had every reason to presume that the Board of Public Works had carefully considered the proposition and knew what the property owners wanted and what the second and third wards needed, especially as the matter of the Huriburt avenue sewer had been in the Board's hands for nearly seven years and they were supposed to be competent to judge and adjust all matters as to the plans and estimates.

The Council promptly passed the proposed resolution and gave the notice to hear objections, as required by law. No objections were offered and the Council proceeded to cause the tax to be spread and gave notice to review the tax, and after the tax was spread and reviewed and the people notified to pay their taxes, objections were raised. After two hearings on the question the Common Council rescinded all resolutions, leaving the matter still in the hands of the Board of Public Works. Nothing further has been done by the Board.

March 16th, 1914, a majority of the property owners on East Huriburt avenue again petitioned the Council for a sewer.

The question naturally arises, how many times must the property owners petition for a sewer on Huriburt avenue? It has been nearly seven years since the matter of this sewer has been before the Board. Have the property owners any assurance of anything ever being accomplished unless the Council takes the matter out of the hands of the Board of Public Works?

If so, why then a Board of Public Works?

CAUGHT WITH STOLEN MONEY

Detroit Youth Robs East Jordan Relative While on Visit.

George Franklin, Now in County Jail and Will Be Tried in May.

The boldest robbery East Jordan has known in several years was perpetrated by a Detroit youth in that city Wednesday night.

Geo. Franklin, aged 18 years, came up from Detroit a week ago to visit Elias W. Gilea, his uncle, and family. On Wednesday evening, during the absence of the members of the family, he extracted from a bureau drawer $100 in cash and certificates of deposit and a mortgage to the value of $300 belonging to Enoch Gilea. He immediately made his getaway, but the robbery was not reported to the East Jordan officers until Thursday morning. The surrounding towns were notified and about 11 a. m. he was picked up by Alva officers while on his way to the bank there. The stolen property was found on his person.

He was returned to East Jordan, admitted his guilt to Prosecuting Attorney Fitch and was bound over to the May term of circuit court. In default of $1000 bonds he was taken to Charlevoix and placed in jail by Sheriff Robbins.

MAKES NEW RULING

Postmaster General Says a Letter May Accompany Parcel Post Package.

To add to the popularity of the parcel post, Postmaster General Burleson has signed an order which will permit the attaching of a letter to a package when both bear their respective rates of postage and are addressed to the same individual. The sending of a communication with a parcel post package heretofore has not been permissible.

Postal officials pointed out that it is often of the utmost importance that the sender of an article of merchandise write a letter concerning it, and that, in order to avoid delay and facilitate the transaction of business, it is highly desirable that the parcels and communications be delivered at the same time. It was with this in mind that the order was issued.

The letter is not to be enclosed in the package but is to be tied or otherwise securely fastened to the outside.

Pleasantly Entertained.

About 35 friends and neighbors were entertained at the home of Mr. and Mrs. J. H. Blackwood Thursday evening. Games were played and refreshments served. All reported a good time.

To All Whom It May Concern.

The undersigned is a candidate for the office of Mayor at the spring election. My name will appear on the ticket named "Progressive" and that name will stand for a new administration and to be plain about it, that means exactly that those now holding appointive offices need not apply.

RAISING OF NUTS IN THE NORTH

General Supposition That This Cannot Be Done is Wrong.

No Better Shade Trees Can Be Set Out Than the Walnut or Pecan.

The following article offers some suggestions that are worthy of immediate attention. What could be more beautiful or profitable than a row of shade trees as suggested below?

Editor of the Courier:

There are great possibilities in the raising of nuts in the north. It is generally supposed that the English walnut is too tender for the north, but they are being grown in portions of New York, Connecticut, Ohio and Michigan. By grafting hardy varieties on black walnut stock they are better able to stand the zero weather. The franquette is claimed to have stood 32 below without injury. The pecan is also supposed to be too tender for the north, but it is claimed they grow naturally as far north as Davenport, Iowa, where the temperature sometimes goes to 40 below. It was thought that we could not raise grapes here, but hardy kinds were uninjured on the trellis last winter and the winter before.

Dr. Robt. T. Morris, ex-president of the Northern Nut Growers Association, says: "The stately pecan and the sturdy shagbark can be made to replace, north and south, the millions of poplars, willows and other bunches of leaves which please the eye but render no valuable annual or final returns. The chief reason why this has not been done is because people have not thought about it."

The United States imports over 25,000,000 pounds of English walnuts annually at from 18 to 25 cents wholesale or 22 to 30 cents retail, or more than the export value in apples of the United States and Canada combined. There are no better trees for shade or ornament than the walnut or pecan and if those who are purchasing shade trees would set out good nut trees they would get the double advantage.

I would not advise the buying of fruit tree nurseries, as most of them only offer improperly grafted trees or seedlings. I presume any information needed would be supplied by Dr. W. C. Deming, Georgetown, Conn., secretary of the Northern Nut Growers Association.

A not catalogue quotes from B. W. Kirkpatrick: "I have seen wild pecan trees producing many bushels of nuts. I have seen a single tree the production of which was sufficient to support a small family for a year."

What could we do that would do more to benefit the coming generations than plant trees that would bear for over a century? What would be a better monument to our memory?

H. C. Newman.

R. L. LEWIS CHOSEN

Will Act as Chairman of the Republican City Committee for the Coming Year.

At the meeting of the candidates on the Republican ticket held March 18th the following city committee was selected for the coming year:

Chairman—R. L. Lewis; secretary, Leslie Shanahan; treasurer, L. S. See. First ward committee men—Darwin F. Meach, Robert W. Paddock. Second ward committee men—G. E. Dutton, Harold Bedford. Third ward committee men—R. B. Armstrong, E. B. Ward.

It is with pleasure that we see the younger Republicans taking an active part in the political affairs of the city. Mr. Lewis is a young man and a product of Charlevoix who has decided to cast his lot with his home city and bids fair to be an honor to his city. His success in his chosen profession is assured and we congratulate the Republican party on its foresight in selecting Mr. Lewis as chairman of its city committee.

ACCIDENT MAY COST TWO LIVES

Explosion of Gasoline, Thought To Be Kerosene, Cause of Disaster.

Home of H. Hogelworth Totally Destroyed and Wife May Die from Burns.

Another disastrous fire caused by pouring gasoline into a stove, supposed to be kerosene has already cost the life of one person and another will die, besides several other members of the family being terribly burned.

The scene of the horrible affair was at the home of H. Hogelworth, two miles west of Ellsworth. From what can be learned it seems that Mrs. Hogelworth, Mrs. Defree and child and the young daughter of Mrs. Lonie Dennis were in the house at the time the accident happened. Some time during the day, from what we are told, an attempt was made to start a fire in the kitchen stove. To make a quick blaze a member of the party poured gasoline on the fire taken from a can supposed to contain kerosene. An explosion took place and in a flash the whole room was a mass of flames. Those in the room rushed to the door, which opened inside, but were unable to open it on account of the other members crowding against it. Mr. Hogelworth, who was outside the house at the time, heard the explosion and rushed to the house and tried to open the door, which he was unable to do. He proceeded to kick the door in and found his wife's clothes alight, as were also those of the other members of the party. With his bare hands he tore the burning garments from her, badly burning himself while doing so. The little Dennis girl was burned almost to a crisp before anyone could render her aid.

The suffering ones were taken to the homes of neighbors and medical assistance was called. Tuesday at midnight the little Dennis girl died from the burns received and Mrs. Hogelworth's condition is reported critical, with little hopes of recovery.

Mr. Hogelworth's hands and arms were badly burned and the others who were in the house at the time were more or less burned. The house was a new one, built last summer, and is a total loss with all the contents.

JOE SHORES BADLY HURT

Cable Breaks Allowing Telephone Pole to Fall and Strike Him in Breast.

Joe Shores, who has charge of the Charlevoix Lumber company's operations at Chéstonia the past winter, was badly hurt Saturday when the cable used in loading poles on the cars broke, allowing the pole to roll back, striking him in the breast, throwing him about six feet onto a pile of logs.

At the time the accident happened it was thought that Mr. Shores had been killed, but after being unconscious for some time, recovered and was given medical attendance. He was brought to his home in this city Tuesday, and is in a serious condition.

SUPT. DEVOE SURPRISED

Twenty Members of the School Faculty Help Him Celebrate His Birthday.

Supt. I. M. DeVoe was pleasantly surprised last Monday evening by twenty members of the faculty, who gathered in his home at six o'clock to celebrate his 71 birthday, which occurred March 24th.

The guests were obliged to wait some time for their host to put in an appearance, as he took his own time about coming home. Consequently their appetites and tempers were in a dangerous condition by the time the superintendent strolled in and he was duly punished by the impatient mob. As soon as he recovered a dainty luncheon was served and the evening spent with mirth and music.

GAVE ENTERTAINMENT

"Aunt Sally Martin's Rag-Cutting Bee" Furnished Considerable Amusement.

The Lady Maccabees gave an entertainment at the L. O. O. F. hall Tuesday evening, which, from all reports, was one of the funniest affairs puffed off this season. The farce was called "Aunt Sally Martin's Rag-Cutting Bee" and was greatly enjoyed by those who attended.

About 115 were present and after the entertainment candy was served. Among the characters present were Nancy, with Mandy and her cow.

Two Small Blazes.

Saturday fire was discovered near the chimney at the home of W. T. Crandall, Antrim street. An overheated chimney was the cause and little damage was done.

Tuesday night the old icehouse at the rear of the vacant lot owned by Meyer & Schubert on Bridge St. was discovered on fire. The fire department responded and soon had the blaze under control.

TIME TO IMPROVE THE CITY

All Rubbish Should Be At Once Removed and Taken Care of.

Several Conspicuous Spots Should Be Cleaned Up for the Good of the Town.

The city beautiful theory, according to critics who have inspected various parts of the city, does not consist of cleaning up a back yard and dumping the refuse on some other person's vacant lot. Very often a property owner who has a neighbor with an unused piece of ground is prone to the practice of shooting tin cans and other refuse over the fence to the innocent taxpayer's land and it is a question whether one lot thus littered with the combined rubbish of several backyards is not more unsightly than the same backyards would be had they remained uncleaned. The city maintains dump grounds and they are established for use. Often farmers who haul wood or produce to city customers will, as an accommodation, pick up a barrel or box of rubbish and dump it off by the roadside somewhere en route to their homes. And quite frequently the somewhere is in a most conspicuous place within or without the city limits. The river bank and the shores of Round Lake, too, have come in for a grilling, several spots in plain view from the bridges being designated as eyesores. Although a certain day is usually set for clean-up day, it is never too early to do a little renovating and once done the person responsible may take a little chestiness upon himself and point to his backyard with the knowledge that it is clean ahead of time and the satisfaction of having been the sponsor of a good deed well done.

HOW TO SELECT YOUR SEED CORN

Should Be Performed Only at Corn Ripening Time in Fall.

SPEND A DAY RIGHT NOW

And Get Your Seed Corn Ready for Spring Planting.

Discard Discolored Kernels or Cobs That Have a Dead Appearance—It Will Pay You To Do This.

Requests are now reaching the U. S. Department of Agriculture for information in regard to preparing seed corn for planting. The most vital part of seed corn selection work can be performed only at corn ripening time in the fall. Of thousands of different lots of seed corn planted by the Office of Corn Investigations not one lot of seed that matured properly and was gathered as soon as mature and promptly dried has been found poor of germination.

Every corn grower should now spend a day or more getting his seed corn entirely ready for planting. The present work consists of discarding undesirable ears, germination testing, rubbing, classifying the ears, shelling, and testing the accuracy of drop of the corn planter.

The quality and productiveness of the seed supply can now be improved by discarding the poorer ears and the poorer kernels.

The seed corn should now be "as dry as a bone" and among the ears that appeared desirable fast fall some undesirable ones will now be found. Discard any that have discolored kernels or cob or that have a dead appearance. Discard any that are light in weight and any with undesirable kernels, such as small size, very sharp beaks, germs of poor development and appearance, etc.

All the ears retained should show good development and maturity, be heavy for their size and contain solid, vigorous-looking kernels of fairly uniform size and shape. These desirable ears should now be tested to determine whether all the kernels will grow.

Although good seed selection and preservation usually make a separate testing of the germination of each ear unnecessary, it is advisable to exercise precaution by demonstrating that the ears will germinate well. Ten kernels from each of 50 ears can be tested by one of the various methods that have been as well described in literature. This demonstration that 50 representative ears germinate satisfactorily is sufficient evidence of the usefulness of testing each ear of the entire supply. If ears of poor germination should be found it will be advisable to test each ear of the entire supply in order to be able to discard those in poor germination.

Discard the small, partially developed kernels from the tip of the ear. Why? Because such kernels do not yield well. Careful field experiments have demonstrated that they grow into small, barren and poor producing stalks.

Discard the round, thick kernels from the butts of the ears. Why? Because the corn planter cannot drop evenly if they are included with the other kernels.

Kernels that have been injured by mice or weevils or that are otherwise undesirable should also be discarded before the ears are shelled.

As it is highly advisable that the corn planter should drop an equal number of kernels in each hill—which it cannot do unless the kernels are of uniform size and shape—it is advisable to classify the ears before shelling them. Those having large kernels should be included in one class and those having medium size kernels in another class. Each class should be shelled and bagged separately. To these bags the planter plates that testing has shown will drop regularly the proper number of kernels should be tied for convenience at planting time.

Shelled seed corn can be cleaned and graded by expensive, properly adjusted graders, but the method (Continued on page 4)

Winter's Chills Breed Kidney Ills

Chilly, damp, changing weather is hard on the kidneys. Even more irritating are colds, grip, pneumonia, tonsillitis, quinsy and other infections. The kidneys get congested and inflamed, and this causes backache and disordered kidney action. Though serious in its latter stages, kidney disease is not hard to conquer if a good kidney remedy is used when the first signs of kidney trouble are noticed.

The best recommended kidney remedy in the world is Doan's Kidney Pills. You hear it everywhere. Get a box.

"Every Picture Tells a Story"

Spring is Breaking; Backs are Aching

Backache is often the first sign of some form of kidney disease that has been coming on for months. Look for the other signs:—lame back, sharp pains when stooping or lifting, dizzy spells, nervousness or despondency, with irregular, painful or distressing action of the kidneys; if these signs exist, decide that the kidneys need attention, ere the trouble turns to gravel, dropsy or Bright's disease.

Read this home testimony and then give Doan's Kidney Pills a trial.

Charlevoix People Testify

CLINTON STREET

Mrs. W. L. Cowan 211 Clinton St., Charlevoix, says: "I don't hesitate to recommend Doan's Kidney Pills for I have had good results from them. I had severe backache and pains in my kidneys and was also annoyed by the kidney secretions. I used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store, and they brought me great relief."

MAY STREET

J. B. Lancaster, 203 May St., says: "I suffered for seven years from weak kidneys. My back ached at night and when I got up in the morning I was stiff and lame. The kidney secretions passed too frequently and my rest was broken. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got them from the Ivy Drug Store. They have done me a world of good. I can rest better at night, my back is stronger and the aches and pains are gone."

W. HURLBUT AVE.

Mrs. M. Olney, 310 W. Hurlbut Ave., Charlevoix, says: "I consider Doan's Kidney Pills a valuable kidney remedy. I have taken them several times for kidney complaint and severe backaches and have been greatly benefited. Others of the family have used Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store for lame back and pains in the kidneys and have had good results."

BRIDGE STREET

Bert Beaudoin, 325 Bridge St., Charlevoix, says: "I have been bothered off and on for several months by my kidneys. The kidney secretions were irregular in passage and I suffered from severe backaches and pains in my loins. I used a box of Doan's Kidney Pills, obtained at the Ivy Drug Store, and they brought fine results. I am now free from the aches and pains and my kidneys are normal."

W. LINCOLN AVE.

Mrs. John Hall, 102 W. Lincoln Ave., Charlevoix, says: "About a year ago I had a severe attack of lumbago. I suffered greatly and tried many remedies, but got no relief until I took Doan's Kidney Pills, procured at the Ivy Drug Store. A few months ago I was again having trouble from weak kidneys and backache. I again took Doan's Kidney Pills and they acted promptly in bringing me relief."

SHERIDAN STREET

Henry Newman, 203 Sheridan St., Charlevoix, says: "I have been troubled for years by my kidneys. I was annoyed by too frequent passages of the kidney secretions at night and I also had backache. I read of Doan's Kidney Pills and got a box at the Ivy Drug Store. They gave me great relief. I can now rest better and I don't have much backache."

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal

BY

REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective, who is hurt, Jefferson Locke, instantaneously identifies the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Hecins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Johnson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intruding to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Rummels, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taboga, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

The girl tells him her name is "Chiquita." He learns later that that means only "little one." Kirk begins his work. Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Weiler) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries in vain in Panama to learn something of Chiquita and meets Alfarez again.

Kirk wins the capital prize, $15,000, in the lottery. He and Rummels make plans for advancement. The Cortlandts, having turned from the older Alfarez, intend to make Senor Garavel, a banker, president of Panama.

Alfarez's son, Kirk's foe, is engaged to Gertrudis, Garavel's daughter. She is Kirk's "Chiquita." He meets her again at the opera through Mrs. Cortlandt's aid.

CHAPTER XIV.

Garavel and His Daughter.

THESE were busy days for the Cortlandts. They entertained constantly, and the occasions when they dined without from one to a dozen guests became so exceptional as to elicit remark around the hotel. Most of their efforts were devoted to certain Panamanians of the influential class, and in company with one or more of these Cortlandt made frequent trips to the various quarters of the republic, sometimes absenting himself for days at a time.

During these intervals his wife assumed the direction of affairs and continued to entertain or be entertained. Her energy and resource seemed inexhaustible. Soon she became the social dictator of the city, and the most exclusive circles, American and Panamanian alike, allowed her to assume control.

The result was just what had been designed. Tourists and visiting news-papers spoke glowingly of the hospitality of the two nations and wondered at the absence of that Spanish prejudice of which they had heard so much. Those who chanced to know the deeper significance of it all and were aware of the smoldering resentment that lay in the Latin mind commended unreservedly upon her work and wondered what effort it would have upon the coming election.

No one but the woman herself and her husband really understood the tremendous difficulties of their task, or the vital issues at stake. All who came into contact with her recognized the master mind directing the campaign and, consciously or unconsciously, relegated her husband to the background.

Power on the part of the woman was a revelation. She knew the effect she produced and made the most of it.

Old Anibal Alfarez was perhaps the last fully to appreciate her. He did, however, learn in time that, while he could successfully match his craft against that of the husband, the wife read him unerringly. The result was that he broke with them openly.

When news of this reached the members of the canal commission they were amazed, and Colonel Johnson felt it necessary to make known their views upon the situation. Accordingly, a few nights later the Cortlandts dined at his handsome residence on the heights above Culebra. After their return to Panama the colonel, in whom was vested the supreme authority over his nation's interests, acknowledged that his acquaintance with diplomacy was as nothing as compared with Edith Cortlandt's.

"She thinks Garavel is the proper man," he said to Colonel Bland.

"Garavel is a banker. He's not a politician."

The chief engineer laughed.

"All Spanish-Americans are politicians, colonel. They can't help it."

"Would he accept?"

"It is her business to find out. I had my doubts."

"But could he win? It would be a calamity if he had American backing and failed. It would mean disaster."

"Cortlandt has been working carefully, and he has been in all the seven provinces. He admits that it might be done, and she is certain. Of course it will mean a fight—Alfarez won't give up easily—but if Garavel should be the next president it would be a fine thing for both countries."

Over at Panama the Cortlandts were looking for a house to lease. Affairs had reached a point where it seemed advisable to give up their quarters at the Tivoli and enter into closer contact with the life of the Spanish city.

Meanwhile they gave a ceremonious little dinner, the one and only guest being Andres Garavel, the banker.

Of all the charming peoples of Central America there are perhaps none more polished and well bred than the upper class Panamanians. Of this agreeable type Senor Garavel was an admirable example, having sprung from the finest Castilian stock, as a name running back through the pages of history to the earliest conquests attested.

The present bearer of the name was of distinguished appearance. He was swarthy of skin, his hair was snow white, and he had stern black eyes of great intelligence. He was courtly and deliberate, exuding a pride that sprang not only from good blood but from good deeds. His pulse was that of a man with heavy responsibilities, for Andres Garavel was a careful banker and a rich one. He was widely traveled, well informed and an agreeable talker.

"I am so disappointed that your daughter could not come," Edith told him for the second time. "I'm afraid she objects to our American informality."

"No, no, my dear lady," said their guest. "She admires American customs as I do. We are progressive—we have traveled. In my home, in my private life, perhaps, I am a Panamanian, but in my business and in my contact with other people I am as they are. It is the same with my daughter. She has had a wide education for a child. She has traveled, she speaks five languages, and yet underneath it all she is a Garavel and hence a Panamanian. She is all I have, and my life is hers."

The meal progressed with only the customary small talk to relieve it, but as soon as the three had adjourned to the Cortlandt's the host of the evening proceeded to approach the subject in his mind as directly as the circumstances permitted. Through a series of natural transitions the conversation was brought around to politics, and Garavel was actually smiling. But he displayed little interest. When at last he consented to show his awareness of the suggestion so constantly held out he spoke with deliberation.

"General Alfarez is my respected friend," he said, with a quietness that intensified his meaning, "and I rejoice that he will be the next president of Panama."

"Yes, of course, know that there is opposition to him?"

"All Panama knows that."

"General Alfarez does not seem to be a friend of the United States. May I speak frankly?"

Garavel inclined his white head without removing his intense, dark eyes from the speaker.

"Don Anibal Alfarez can never be president of Panama."

The banker made no visible movement, yet the effect of this positive declaration was almost like that of a blow. After a pause he said:

"May I tell you my son said so?"

"If you wish, but I do not think you will."

The honor let his eyes fall questioningly to Mrs. Cortlandt's face to find her smiling at him.

"Believe me, dear lady," he said, "I suspected that there were grave reasons for this interview, but as yet I am at sea. I am not a politician, you know. I shall have no voice in our political affairs."

"Of course we know that, Senor Garavel, and of course there are grave reasons why we wished to talk with you. As Stephen has said, General Alfarez cannot be president."

"Madam," he said coolly, "Panama is a republic. The voice of the people is supreme."

"Down in your heart do you really think so?" She was still smiling at him. "No! The United States is supreme."

"Ah! That day will come, perhaps—I have said so. I look forward to it as the best solution, but—"

"The day has come."

"Even so, Alfarez is an honorable man, a strong man and the wealthiest man in our country."

"You are also a rich man, a man of ability," said Cortlandt. "Your name is second to none in all Central America. There is no one better."

"Impossible!" exclaimed the banker. In a strange voice. "No, no!"

"And why not? Have you never had political aspirations?"

"Of course. All men have dreams. I was secretary of finance under Anador, but the Garavels have never really been public men. Politics have been a curse to our house. My grandfather—"

"I know," broke in Mrs. Cortlandt. "But times have changed. Panama has seen her last revolution, and she needs a business man at her head. Panama is a healthy country, with no national debt. She is growing, developing. She holds the gateway to the western world, and her finances must be administered wisely. There is no one who can direct her so well as you."

"It is impossible!" repeated Garavel, his agitation growing more pronounced. "General Alfarez is my friend. His son will be my son."

"Ramon! Is Ramon engaged to your daughter?"

"Yes," exclaimed the banker, shortly. He began to pace the room.

"What difference would that make. If the young people love each other?"

"Certainly," Cortlandt agreed. "They are not children."

"As for love, Ramon loves, and—my daughter will love also, once she is married, for she is a Garavel."

"If Ramon isn't satisfactory to her, ought you to force her inclination?" Mrs. Cortlandt offered, eagerly. But the banker flung his arms aloft in a gesture of half humorous despair.

"Oh! These young ladies!" he cried. "They do not know what they want." He paused abruptly. "This comes upon me like a flood, my friends. I am swept away, and yet I—I will need to think seriously."

"Certainly."

"To an honorable man the salary will mean nothing. I have many affairs. I fear I cannot afford this sacrifice."

"Would you retire in favor of some one who could afford it?"

"Alfarez is honest."

"Alfarez cannot be president."

"It would require a great deal of money. I am considered a rich man, but I have discredited the future, and my enterprises—"

He flung out his arms. "I have spread out. I must be careful. It is not alone my money that I have invested."

"It will require very little money," said Cortlandt. "I have been from David to Durlin, from Boons to Colon and I know the public sentiment."

It was midnight before Senor Andres Garavel, the banker, made his friends goodby. When he descended the hotel steps to his carriage he held his white hand proudly erect, and there was new dignity in his bearing.

The winter season was at its height now. Every ship from the north came

"Oh-h! These young ladies!" he cried. Indeed with tourists, and the social life of the city grew brilliant and gay. Now that culture smiled, the work upon the canal went forward with ever growing eagerness. Records were broken in every department, the railroad groaned beneath its burden, the giant-human machine was strained to its fullest efficiency.

Young Anthony mastered the details of his work very rapidly. Belug intensely interested in his work, he avoided all social engagements, despite repeated invitations from Mrs. Cortlandt. But when the grand opera season began he made an exception and joined her box party on the opening night.

It seemed quite like old times to don an evening suit; the stiff white linen awakened a pang of regret. There was a somewhat formal dinner in the Cortlandt's new home, at which there were a dozen guests, so Kirk had no opportunity of speaking with his hostess until they had reached the theater.

Good Advice

John Wanamaker, the merchant prince, who began poor says:

"The difference between the clerk who spends all his salary and the clerk who saves part of it is the difference—in ten years—between the ownership of a business and the man out of a job."

Only the man who has saved money for himself realizes the enormous part played in making money in business by effecting little savings.

I'll Silence the Skeptic

To the Man who knows—who has tried me in Charlevoix, who being satisfied himself, has sent me his brother, his father or his friends—the pleased customer, I send this message: I am particularly anxious, when opportunity affords, that former customers take advantage of any of the extraordinary offerings which I am from time to time enabled to make. I want you to get your order in now at these prices. You can take the suit home at your leisure, a month or two hence—but give me your order now. You have my public word in advance that the values are great, so come in and look them over. Make your selections if the bargains impress you, take your sample home and I'll have your suit ready in a short time or whenever you are ready to wear it. In the meantime, send in your friends.

"I've scarcely seen you lately," she said at the first opportunity. "You're a very neglectful young man. I began to think you were avoiding us."

"You must know better than that."

"She regarded him shrewdly over her shoulder. "You're not still thinking of—that night at 'Taboga'?"

He blushed and nodded frankly. "I can't help thinking about it. You were mighty nice to overlook a break like that, but—"

"Unconsciously" his eyes shifted to Gertrudis, who was conversing politely with a slightly old lady.

She tapped his cheek lightly with her fan. "Just to show you how forgiving I am, I am going to ask you to go riding with me. The late afternoons are lovely now, and I've found a good horse for you. I suppose you ride?"

"I love it."

"Wednesday at 5, then." She turned to another guest, and Kirk leaned back to take in the scene about him.

TWENTIETH ANNIVERSARY

Friends and Relatives Help Mr. and Mrs. George Hammond Celebrate Event.

Friday evening, March 20th, about fifty of the friends and relatives of Mr. and Mrs. Geo. Hammond gathered at their home to help them celebrate their twentieth wedding anniversary. As on the same date occurred the birthday of Dell Provoost, he was also recluded of the occasion in no small way by those present.

The evening was spent in playing games, etc., after which a fine lunch was served. The occasion is one that will long be remembered by those present.

GOOD WORK DONE

Scientific Temperance Instruction Accomplished in the Public Schools.

Report of scientific temperance instruction in the Charlevoix public schools:

The work of instruction regarding the effect of alcohol and tobacco on the human system has already been done in nearly all of the grades. In two or three grades the work will begin next month and continue for six weeks.

With the primary grades the subject is presented in the form of health talks, the general care of the body, and is continued throughout the year in an incidental way.

The grades which use a text book for their regular physiology work have also definite instruction in temperance physiology. The law requires that at least one-fourth of the text in physiology shall be devoted to the subject of the effect of alcoholic drinks and narcotics.

The Charlevoix teachers have done their duty faithfully and our thanks are due to them for their efficient work.

PETOSKEY WON OUT

Gets Decision in Petoskey-Bay City Debate Held Last Friday.

Supt. I. M. Devote attended the Petoskey-Bay City debate at Petoskey Friday, March 20th, acting as a judge with Supt. L. H. Van den Berg of the Central State Normal and Supt. G. E. Gifford of East Jordan.

The debate between the respective high schools on the question, "Resolved, That the Federal Government and the Various States Should Establish Courts of Compulsory Arbitration for the Settlement of Labor Disputes Whenever One of the Parties to the Dispute Shall Hold a Franchise of a Public Nature" was held in the Presbyterian church and brought up a crowd of about three hundred and fifty loyal debate fans.

Petoskey defended the negative side of the question and won out in a very decisive manner, receiving the unanimous decision of the three judges.

U. S. EXPRESS COMPANY

Goes Out of Business After Activity of Over a Half Century.

The passing of the United States Express Co. has been attributed to the parcel post by many, but President Duncanson J. Roberts says that "there is no quarrel over the parcel post; it fills a want the express companies never could with the utter impracticability of rural deliveries by them. The fault lies with the change in our rates made by the interstate commerce commission." Under the new rates the company did a larger business, but not large enough to make up for the loss in revenue. The 1556 stockholders will receive $90 per share of their stocks. The E. H. Harriman estate with 21,000 shares will be paid $1,800,000.

No word of the change has come to the Charlevoix office except such as the agent has seen in newspapers and if a change is made here it may be some time before it is made.

just described of classifying the ears before shelling is more satisfactory.

Seed corn should be shelled by hand. Careful hand shelling pays the man who plants but a few acres and it pays to a greater degree the man who plants hundreds of acres. Each ear should be shelled separately into a hand sieve. This permits the chaff from the cob to fall through and the kernels from each ear to be closely inspected before being dumped into the general supply. The value of this close inspection is lost if the ears are run through a corn sheller and some of the kernels cracked or broken.

THEATRICAL

Copper mining at the Calumet and Hecla is the title of the new motion picture to be shown at the Majestic Thursday, April 2. The picture shows actual mining 5,300 feet in the earth. Views taken in the world's greatest copper mine, during the time of the big copper country strike.

These pictures, comprising two reels of motion pictures show every detail of the copper industry from the one-man drill 5,300 feet under the earth to the crushing and smelting of the ore. Also showing different scenes of the great strike which we have read so much about in our daily papers.

They show views of the mounted police, the body which has been so effective in quelling disorder during the latter part of the strike. Views of the citizens' alliance which has attracted nation wide interest because of the deportation of President Chas. H. Moyer of the Western Federation of Miners and numerous other strike scenes.

Altogether, it is one of the best industrial pictures of the day.

At the Majestic Theatre Thursday, April 2. Don't forget the date.

Economy Hints

A penny saved is a penny earned.—Benjamin Franklin.

How to Reduce Flesh.

As a change from the strenuous exercises usually advised for obesity by expensive specialists why not embody these gymnastics in the everyday task, thereby adding interest to the task and grace to the body? If your waist is inclined to thickness you can incline it to suppleness by always washing your hands in the bottom of the bathtub. Do this, if possible, without bending the knee. If faithfully pursued this little practice will accomplish as much as ten minutes of bending exercises.

Have you a desire to improve your carriage and add weight to your appearance? Have the hooks in your wardrobe almost beyond your reach so that every time you go for your hat or a garment you will have to stretch your arms upward and stand on tip toe.

Do not sit down to put on your shoes and stockings. You may have to perform all sorts of queer antics to accomplish your purpose, but the bending exercise you go through in doing so is worth more than those of the gymnasium, because you will work harder with a tangible object in view.

Halbrius is a wearisome task, but if the desire to move with grace is put into every stroke and if the wrist is held firm the action is certain to be an excellent hand and wrist exercise. If you do your own marketing walk to and from the market fresh, taking long, even strides and swinging the limb from the hip without bending the knee. All the bending and reaching exercises of your household work may be transformed into benefits if they only will be considered in that light and if the mind will work with the body in utilizing them as beneficial exercises instead of physical exertions.

dressed audience, for although the pit was plentifully sprinkled with men in white, the two lower galleries were in solid full dress. In the center box of the first tier, ornately hung with flags and a coat of arms, Anthony beheld a giant black man of majestic appearance, flanked by a half-dozen aids to uniform.

"That is President Galles," Edith told him. As the curtain fell on the first act, Kirk rose with the others and, accompanied by Mrs. Cortlandt, made his way down the long passageway and out into a brightly lighted, highly decorated foyer, filling now with voluble people. It was a splendid room, but he had no eyes for it. His gaze was fixed upon the welcome open air promenade outside, and his fingers fumbled with his cigarette case.

"Oh, wait, please," he heard Edith say. "I want you to meet one." There, not a yard away, was the girl of his dreams demurely bowing to Edith Cortlandt, her hand upon the arm of a swarthy man, whom Kirk knew at once as her father. He felt the blood rush blindingly to his head, felt it drumming at his ears, knew that he must be staring like a man bereft. Mrs. Cortlandt was speaking, and he caught the name "Garavel" like a magic spell.

She was the same dainty, desirous mold he had met in the forest, but now splendidly radiant and perfect beyond his imagining. She was no longer the simple wood sprite, but a tiny princess in filmy white molded by some master craftsman. As on that earlier meeting, she was thrilling with some subtle mirth which flickered on her lips or danced in the depths of her great, dark eyes.

How he ever got through that wild introductory moment without making a show of himself Anthony never knew. The general confusion perhaps helped to hide his emotion, for around them eddied a constant human tide, through which at last came Mr. Cortlandt and the other members of his party. Then by some glorious miracle Kirk found himself moving toward the open air at her side, with Mrs. Cortlandt and the banker in advance of them.

"Oh, Chiquita," he said softly, "I thought I'd never had you. I've hunted everywhere."

At the tremendous intensity of his tone she flushed him a startled glance.

"Chiquita is not my name," she said, reproachfully.

"Yes, it is. It must be. I can't think of you by any other. Haven't I been whispering at my ears ever since you said it? It has nearly driven me mad. Why didn't you come back as you promised?"

"It was Stephanie she is brought a ferocious person. I was brought to the city that day but no senior. I did not promise. I said only 'perhaps.'"

"Have you done your penance?"

"I was finished yesterday. This is the first time I have been out. Oh, it is delightful. The music—the people!"

"And I can come to see you now?"

"Very well do you know that you cannot. Have you not learned our customs? You had be foolish, or I shall be forced to walk with my father."

"Don't do that. Can't you see we must make haste while the curtain is down?"

"I do not see, I am strolling in search of the two of you." She bowed and smiled at some passing friends. She seemed very careless, very light. She was not at all the imperious, unrelenting Chiquita he had met in the woods.

"See here," he said, soberly. "We can't go on this way. Now that I've met your father, I'm going to explain my intentions to him, and ask his permission to call on you."

"My father is a stern man. In his home he is entirely a Spaniard, and if he learned how we met, for instance—even under the electric light he saw her flash—he would create a terrible scene."

"Trust me! I shan't tell him."

"There are so many reasons why it is useless."

"Name one."

"None." She shrugged lightly. "In the first place I care nothing for you. Is not that enough?"

"No, indeed. You'll get over that."

"Let us imagine, then, the contrary. You Americans are entirely different from our people. You are cold, de-merite, wicked—your social customs are not like ours. You do not at all understand us. How then could you be interested to meet a Spanish family?"

"Why, you're half-American."

"Oh, yes, although it is to be regretted. Why, there is no other nice girl in all Panama who would have talked with you as I did in the forest."

that day?

"But what has all this to do with my coming to see you?"

"It is difficult to explain, since you will not understand. When a young man is accepted into a Spanish house, many things are taken for granted. Besides that, we do not know each other, you and I. Also, if you should come to see me it would cause gossip, misunderstanding among my friends."

"I'll declare myself in advance," he promised warmly.

"No, no, no! We Spanish-Americans do not care for strangers. We have our own people and we are satisfied. It is much better that old people who are of more experience should discuss these questions."

"But don't you want to have a voice in your own affairs?" he eagerly asked. She answered frankly: "I do not sometimes. I protest, but it is only the American blood in me."

"If you'd learn to know me a little bit, maybe you'd enjoy having me around the house."

"But I cannot know you any more than you can know me," she cried with a little gesture of despair at his dullness. "Don't you see before we could get acquainted merely people would be talking?"

"Let's try. You're living at the country place again, aren't you? Suppose I should get lost some day—tomorrow, for instance?"

"No, no! Listen. It is the warning bell, and we must return."

The crowd was filling into the theater now. They fell in behind Señor Garavel and Mrs. Cortlandt.

"I'm going hunting again tomorrow," prophesied Kirk, "and I'm almost certain to lose my way about 3 o'clock. Suppose we have another stroll after the next act?"

"I shall be with my father. Never before have I enjoyed so much liberty." She sighed gratefully.

"Oh, I detest your hamlet, strait-laced Spanish customs," he cried hotly. "What do they amount to, anyhow? I love you, I do, I do!"

She laughed and darted to her father's side.

"Don't you think Miss Garavel is a pretty girl?" Mrs. Cortlandt questioned, as they strolled toward their box.

"She's a dream," Anthony's tone left nothing unsaid.

"You got along together capitally. Most of the señoritas are impossible."

"By the way, what is her name?"

"Gertrudis. Rather pleasing, I think."

Kirk thought so too. When, after an age, the curtain fell for a second time he escaped from his companions, mumbling some excuse or other, and made haste to find her again. But as he approached he felt a sudden pang of jealous rage.

Ramon Alfarez was beside her, and the two were chatting with an appearance of intimacy that made him furious. Close at hand stood Garavel, deep in conversation with Colonel Tolson.

"Ah, Ramon, I wish you to meet Mr. Anthony," said Gertrudis. "So! You have met before?"

"In Colón," Kirk explained, while Alfarez scowled him with his eyes. "Mr. Alfarez was very hospitable to me."

"Yes," the Spaniard exclaimed. "It is my great regret that Señor Anthony did not remain for longer. Dams, Señor Alfarez, does our effort to be still agreeable?"

"Very. It hasn't grown too warm for me yet."

"We are but preparing our 'old season'." The speaker's eyes snapped.

Therefore Kirk had hated Ramon in secret, and now he felt a good deal of feeling that he owed him a good drubbing, which he would be pleased to administer if ever a fitting opportunity arose.

But now, since he saw that the Spaniard had the audacity to love Gertrudis, his feelings became intense. The girl, of course, was rich, and in the situation and, although she evidently enjoyed it, she did not seem to stand between the two men.

As for Alfarez, he was quick to feel the sudden force of hostility he had aroused, and it seemed to make him nervous. Moreover, he conceived that he had scored heavily by his last retort, at which Kirk had only smiled. He therefore seemed best to him to withdraw from the conversation and to be fully conducted in English and a few moments later he stalked majestically away. There was just what Kirk wanted, and he quickly suggested the lady. But Gertrudis was obstinate.

"I must remain with my father," she said.

"May I sit beside you, then? Do you know, I'm going to settle up to your father and make him like me."

"Again you are speaking of that snub. You talk of nothing but my father, of me, of coming to call. I have lost all modesty to speak of those things. You force me to embarrass myself."

"You once spoke of a chap your people had picked out. It isn't Alfarez?"

She let her dark eyes rest upon his a moment, and his senses swam. Then she nodded slowly.

"You do not like him?"

"Just like a nose bleed. The day you and I are married I'm going to send him a wreath of poison ivy."

"It doesn't you always to joke?"

"No joke about that. You won't give in, will you?"

"There is no question of force nor of surrender, señor. I insist now that we shall speak of other things."

A few moments later he was constrained to rejoin his modest party.

"When are you going back to Las Savannas?" he asked as he reluctantly arose.

"Tomorrow."

"The hunting ought to be good,"—that she frowned at him in annoyance, and he left her after all without knowing whether he had gained or lost ground. She was not so warm and impulsive as he had supposed. Her girlishness, her simplicity, her little American ways, cloaked a deep reserve and a fine sense of the difference in their positions. The plague of it was that if anything he was more in love with the definite and dazzling Gertrudis Garavel than he had been with the mysteriously alluring Chiquita. And then, too, there was Alfarez!

HUMANE EDUCATION

Superintendent Keeler is Urging the School Children of the State to Feed the Birds.

The legislature of 1913 passed a law providing for humane education in the schools of the state, which will include kind treatment of domestic and wild animals and birds. Superintendent F. F. Keeler believes that practice is better than precept. He suggests the following work for schools. The next few weeks are the hardest of all the year for the birds, as those that have remained here for the winter have by now nearly exhausted their natural food supply of wild fruits, weed seeds and insects. Through February and March the weather conditions are variable, and howling blizzards, deep snow and sleet storms may occur. Every bush, tree and weed may be incased in ice. If the condition last several days some birds will starve unless food is furnished them. Every school should have a feeding place for the birds. A raw fresh pork or beef bone with some fat attached should be nailed to a pole or tree ten high for dogs to reach. This is the best food for the chickadees, nuthatches, brown creepers, blue jays and the hairy and downy woodpeckers. A good feeding shelf may be made by fastening a wooden box a foot or more square on edge against a pole or tree. Crumbs and scraps should be scattered on this each day. Snow may be cleared from a space in a nearby field and wheat, buckwheat, millet, cracked corn or sunflower seeds scattered there for the tree sparrows, juncos, snow buntings and other shy birds.

Makes Healthy Bowels

THIS simple rule of health is daily called attention to by every doctor in the land, whose first question to the patient almost invariably is, "Are your bowels regular?" Yet there's not one person in fifty who takes proper care of the bowels. And the result of this foolish neglect is nine-tenths of all ill-health.

If today you are unable to free your body of waste matter at the usual time, or if the act causes straining, pains and discomfort, don't let that condition occur again tomorrow. Unless your bowels can carry away the waste materials left after food is digested, decay sets in, the poisons of which, taken up by the blood, increase the risk of Typhoid Fever, Appendicitis, and many other serious diseases.

In treating constipation, there is a right way and a wrong way. The wrong way is to take harsh purgatives which even though they do clear the bowels, cause griping and nausea, injure the delicate tissues, and so disturb the normal functions as to cause the return of constipation. The right way is to help Nature to produce natural movement, without pain or discomfort, by using

Rexall Orderlies

More Than One Hundred Million Were Sold Last Year

—a gentle laxative in the form of a chocolate-tasting tablet. One of these tablets eaten just before going to bed will help to restore your bowels to normal activity at a time when your body being at rest, the medicine can do its best work. As a result of taking that tablet (or say two, if your case is obstinate), your bowels will move easily and naturally in the morning. The use of Rexall Orderlies for a few days afterward will restore normal regularity. Even chronic constipation is benefited by them, and it is not necessary to continue the treatment for a long time, because, instead of driving Nature, they simply help her to help herself.

Keeps Your Stove "Always Ready for Company"

A bright, clean, glossy stove is the joy and pride of every housekeeper. It is hard to keep a stove nice and shiny unless Black Silk Stove Polish is used. Here is the reason: Black Silk Stove Polish sticks right to the iron. It doesn't rub off or dust off. Its shine lasts four times longer than the shine of any other polish. You only need to polish once, fourth as often, yet your stove will be cleaner, brighter and better looking than it has been since you first bought it. Use on your parlor stove, kitchen stove or gas stove. Get a can from your hardware or stove dealer. If you do not find it better than any other stove polish you have ever used before, your dealer is authorized to refund your money. But we feel sure you will agree to it in the thousands of orders that come to us every day. We are now using Black Silk Stove Polish and who says it is the best stove polish ever made.

BLACK SILK STOVE POLISH

LIQUID OR PASTE ONE QUALITY

Be sure to get the genuine. Black Silk Stove Polish costs you no more than the ordinary kind. Keep your grates, registers, fenders and stove pipes bright and free from rusting by using BLACK SILK AIR-DRYING ENAMEL. It is a true metal polish and costs only one cent per can. Use the BLACK SILK METAL POLISH for silver, brass, tinware and other metals. It works quickly, easily, and leaves a brilliant surface. It is no equal for use on automobiles.

EXPERTS ARE MAKING EFFORT

To Stop Bean Disease That is Ruining Crop in State.

Loss in Michigan Last Year Amounted to Two Million Dollars.

Bean diseases caused a loss of $2,000,000 to Michigan farmers during the year 1913, according to a bulletin just issued by the plant pathology department of the M. A. C. Specialists at the college are engaged in a search for cures for the bean blight and anthracnose, but only indifferent success has been attained so far. The college bulletin states that a workable method for checking anthracnose has been developed, but that no means of stopping the blight has been found. It is said to be likely, therefore, that other big losses will be caused farmers.

The estimate of $2,000,000 as the amount of damage done the bean crop in 1913 is conservative, in the opinion of the college specialists, for the average "pick" in 1913 ran about eight pounds to the bushel and in some cases as high as twenty pounds per bushel. On examination of cull beans from various portions of the state it was found that fully fifty per cent of the pickings were made up of diseased seed.

The M. A. C. plant pathologists are undecided as to which of the bean diseases is the most injurious. It is known that in areas where continued wet weather is prevalent anthracnose is most noticeable, especially on the pods and seeds. Blight also is widespread under such conditions and causes serious damage to the crops by its attack upon the leaves.

In an effort to find a way of controlling the bean troubles seed from every county in Michigan and from every state thought to raise desirable seed is being examined to determine the prevalence of the disease.

Seed worthy of trial will be planted this spring in at least ten counties of the state. It is hoped by the experts that from these experiments the value of seed importation can be determined.

TOWNSHIP CAUCUSES

Results as Reported from Townships of Marion and Eveline.

Friendly disputes as to whom shall be named to fill the various offices seem to prevail in the townships as well as in Charlevoix. At the township caucuses held in Eveline last week it took considerable haggling to decide who should have the different positions to be filled. One hundred and forty ballots were cast, with the following result:

Supervisor, M. A. MacDonald; clerk, Joseph William Flandere; treasurer, Frank Wageman; highway commissioner, Joseph Cairner; justice of the peace, Frank Russell. In Marion township the following ticket was named: Supervisor, Elmer Ingalls; clerk, Wm. Withers; treasurer, James C. Cook; highway commissioner, Albert Elliott; justice of the peace, John H. O'Neill.

Godfrey McDonald Dead.

Godfrey McDonald, father of M. A. McDonald, supervisor of Eveline township, died this (Wednesday) morning at 5 o'clock of pneumonia, aged 76. He was a pioneer of this county, coming to South Arm in the early 70's, and had since resided in Eveline township.

MANY TOPICS WERE DISCUSSED

Third Meeting of Y. M. C. A. Leaders Conference Held Sunday

Splendid Work Being Accomplished by the Boys of This County

The third meeting of the Y. M. C. A. leaders' conference was held at the Elston hotel parlors Sunday. The meeting was called to order by President Pierce and was followed by devotionals by Mr. Ball.

The business session was opened by the reading of the minutes of the last meeting by Secretary Cross, after which the details of the county high school field meet were brought up and discussed. The committee assigned to this work had chosen East Jordan as the place of the meet, and the fourth Saturday in May as the date. Mr. Ball expressed his wish to have all the boys who possibly could attend the camp at Torch Lake this summer.

Then came the discussion of the county conference to be held at Charlevoix, April 22, at which time 75 boys from all over the county will be present. The banquet will be held on Friday night, and State Secretary VanDus and other prominent leaders will be present, at which time many good talks will be given. On Saturday the meeting will continue both forenoon and afternoon. The business session was then closed and Boyne City chosen as the next meeting place.

Mr. Hatfield, a prominent Y. M. C. A. worker was present and during the forenoon session made many interesting remarks. Then came a general discussion by all the boys and the difficulties confronting them were talked over, and many good pointers were given by Mr. Ball. After the remarks by Mr. Ball, William Fairchild of Boyne City gave an interesting talk on "Lessons in Teaching." This concluded the morning session, and those present adjourned to the dining room where an excellent dinner was served.

On the way to the dining room it was necessary to cross some planks, which were being used to protect the newly varnished floor. On the way in, the planks bent but an inch, but on the way out, they bent to the floor, which contradicts all statements regarding light eating. The afternoon session was opened by a talk by President Pierce on "Sympathy and Sincerity," which was followed by Fred Efron, whose topic was "Fascination of the Books." A. L. Conner, chairman of the county board, followed with a short address. He said there was no use of trying to be a good fellow in the manner followed by the tough, such as setting up the drinks or cigars, as in this manner you gain no friends and will never do any good in the future.

Mr. Hatfield in a few brief remarks stated that often great sacrifices had to be made to do the great work you wanted to accomplish, and gave some good examples. Mr. Ball made a few remarks at the close of the meeting, expressing his thanks for the interest taken in the work by the boys in the county. The next meeting will be held at Boyne City.

WILL AGAIN REDUCE TAXES

Mayor Nichols Pledges Further Reduction if He is Re-elected.

City is a Better Financial Condition Today Than for Many Years.

The management of a city by its executive, elective and appointive officers should be so conducted as to provide the greatest safety and security to life, liberty and property. The greatest abuse is in regard to property. A person may be over-taxed, or his property over-valued, his property may be destroyed by fire, unless a competent fire department is maintained.

Our city is justly proud of its fire fighting equipment and its volunteer firemen.

As to taxes: The burden for some years has been heavy, due in a great measure to the city being obliged to maintain a water and electric light system for a city of 7,000 during three months of the year, and for the balance of the year having but 2,500 people to support such a large system. Again, public improvements have been many. There is no city of equal size that can point to as many miles of cement sidewalk, of sewer and pavements.

In 1910 during Mr. Hampton's administration, the annual tax budget for city taxes was $19,934.25. In 1911 the State Tax Commission reviewed Charlevoix county and the valuations were greatly increased, and the annual tax budget was $25,635.20. At the end of Mr. Hampton's second administration a report was made as of March 1, 1912, signed by Will E. Hampton, Mayor, a portion of which is as follows: "Two years ago, on March 1, 1910, the city owed the banks borrowed money, advanced to pay running expenses, amounting to $3,886.46. It is surely a pleasure to report that we now owe them nothing, and have in addition to wiping out this floating debt paid off $3,900 of bonds and time orders issued in previous years, and have paid our running expenses in cash, during the two years since March 1, 1910."

In April 1912 Mr. Nordrum was elected mayor by the Republican party, and took the reins of government with the city's finances in the best condition they had been in a great many years.

The annual tax budget for 1912, under Mr. Nordrum's administration was $35,080.22, nearly $10,000.00 greater than under Mr. Hampton's administration. No explanation of this large tax was ever made, and when the annual report was made, March 1, 1913, the general fund showed a balance of $4,811.82.

During the month of March, 1913, Mayor Nichols made a campaign advocating and promising a reduction in the taxes and on that platform was elected, and proceeded to reduce the taxes for 1913 from the sum of $35,080.22 to a one per cent tax amounting to $22,946.45.

Mr. Nichols' administration has paid all debts due by the city, and on March 1, 1914, had $10,238.47 cash in the general fund.

Mayor Nichols' appropriated in taxes $12,133.77 less than under Mr. Nordrum and at the end of the year had $5,466.65 cash, more than Mr. Nordrum had at the end of his term.

This would apparently show that Mayor Nichols ran the city for $17,900.42 less than Mr. Nordrum. However, Mr. Nordrum should be given credit for spending $5,500.00 of the general funds on the Dixon avenue paving, the balance of $6,000.00 that was expended on Dixon avenue paving was made in the form of time orders and taken from the sinking funds, of which $1,500.00 was paid under Mr. Nichols, this would entitle Mr. Nordrum to a credit of $4,000.00, which would show that Mr. Nichols operated the city for $13,900.00 less than Mr. Nordrum. In other words, under Mr. Nordrum the tax rate for every man, woman and child residing in the city of Charlevoix was $14.19. Under Mr. Nichols the tax rate was $9.07, a difference of $5.12.

Mr. Nichols brought to the city a business management and reduced the taxes just as he promised. This year Mr. Nichols agrees to further reduce the taxes, and asks the support of the voters of Charlevoix that the burden of taxation may be so lowered that future administrations will hesitate before they raise such a large tax as was raised under Mr. Nordrum.

REMOVES TO WINGLETON

Hugh C. McCartney Accepts Position as Caretaker of Kine Creek Association.

Hugh C. McCartney, for the past four years engaged in the dry business in this city, left Monday for Wingleton, Michigan, where he has accepted the position as caretaker of the Kine Creek Association grounds.

The land owned by the Kine Creek Association consist of about three sections of land, located four miles west of Baldwin, and is probably one of the best private fishing and hunting grounds in the state. Its membership is largely from Saginaw and Detroit. Hugh will have charge of the grounds and club house and will take care of the many fishing parties who spend weeks at a time there during the fishing season.

Mrs. McCartney and son, William expect to leave the latter part of the week. Their removal from Charlevoix is to be regretted as both were well liked and will be missed by a host of friends, who wish them the very best of success in their new home.

BEAVER ISLAND CABLE

Headquarters Will Be at Regular Telephone Office After April 1.

Beginning with April 1, the Beaver Island cable line, which has had its headquarters in the Western Union office in this city, will be changed to the main office of the Michigan State Telephone company.

The change has been contemplated for a number of years, but up to a few weeks ago no definite action was taken. Parties wishing to transact business with the island will now be able to do so over the regular telephone line.

DEATH TAKES ANOTHER PIONEER

Had Lived on farm in Eveline Township Since 1880.

Godfrey McDonald Was Well Known and Held in High Esteem by His Acquaintances.

In the death of Godfrey McDonald which took place on March 25, the township of Eveline has lost another of her early pioneers.

Deceased was born in Lobo, Ontario in 1838 and spent his life there and in Plympton. In 1883 he was united in marriage to Annie Cameron Dewar of Plympton, Ontario. They celebrated their golden wedding last September. In 1898 he moved to Wisconsin where he lived for about three years, removing then to Michigan and settling first in Norwood and then in South Arm. In 1899 he moved to Eveline, where he has since resided. His sickness was of short duration, pneumonia setting in and taking him in less than a week. The funeral took place at his late residence on Friday, March 27th.

He leaves besides his widow, three sons, Dan, Malcolm and Duncan all of Eveline, and three daughters, Mrs. Alonzo Sheldon of East Jordan, Mrs. George Jardine of Eveline and Mrs. Samuel D. Pepper of Lansing, all of whom were with him at the time of his death. He also leaves three brothers and one sister. Two brothers Angus and Donald of Stratroy, Ontario, were present at the funeral.

Reverend G. A. Weaver of Potosky, assisted by Reverend Hugh Nickel of Sarnia, Ontario, officiated.

Death of Edward Kraska.

Edward Kraska, died at his home on the Graham farm Friday of tuberculosis, age 24 years. He had been an sufferer from this terrible disease for some time. The remains were taken to Chicago, Saturday for burial. He leaves a wife and one child.

NEWS THAT IS REAL NEWS

Comparison Between Kind Used By Country Weekly and Big Daily.

Community Papers Contain More Real News of Interest to Their Readers Than Dailies.

The Grand Rapids News makes the following observations in drawing a comparison between the kind of news handled by the country paper and that published by the city daily.

"It has been the custom in the past to poke fun at the country newspapers for mentioning the important items such as the fact that Abner Jones has painted his barn or Miss Angelica Botts has gone to the city to look at the spring millinery. Big papers have snorted loudly every time little papers have mentioned the fact that a sewing circle was held at the home of Mrs. Late Perkins.

"Yet one might pick up any New York paper and have a lot more fun reading the 'real' news of the day as it is published. The other day Lord Decies who was traveling in California, lost his handbag containing his comb and brush, and he was forced to use his wife's toilet articles. This intimate little family incident was telegraphed over the land and the big papers played it up on the first page. The other night Miss Eleanor Wilson, daughter of the president, went to the theater without first having had her dinner. She sat in the shadow in the box and ate a bun. This was a big item of news and the papers treated it as such.

"When Abner Jones painted his barn it meant more to him and to his neighbors than the loss of a hundred combs and brushes, and when Mrs. Late Perkins entertained the sewing circle it meant more to her and to the community of Poke Center than all the theater parties Miss Eleanor Wilson ever attended. The value of news depends entirely upon the point of view. The little community papers contain more real news of interest to their readers than do all of the big newspapers in the country combined and rolled into one."

HELD DEBATE

Sophmores Win Decisive Victory Over Juniors On Important Topic.

A debate was held at the high school Friday between the junior and sophomore classes. The subject was: "Resolved, That the United States Should Intervene in Mexico." The affirmative was taken by the sophmores, who were represented by Ruth Hammett, Perry Mason Lawrence Dittleson. The negative, taken by the juniors, were represented by Huber Taggart, Cecil Burns and Bernice Palephier. The affirmative won an overwhelming victory, and all who took part received considerable applause.

Charlevoix Democracy and What It Stands For.

The Charlevoix City Democratic ticket stands for:

A more progressive city government of the people, for the people and by the people.

Our platform is: Concentration of city affairs into one elective body. City inspection of weights and measures. Immediate settlement of water system question. Efficiency first consideration in selection of appointive officers.

We promise you, in addition to the stipulations set forth in our platform, a further reduction in tax rates so far as consistent with proper, economical and efficient management of city affairs.

We favor enforcement of law and order.

We favor the extension of our sewer system only as last as the people and good sanitary conditions demand it.

We favor improved sanitary conditions of our Charlevoix the beautiful.

In good faith we solicit your support at the polls Monday April 6th. Charlevoix City Democratic Committee. Adv. 1311.

SUNDAY SCHOOL BANQUET

Many Attend Event at the Methodist Church Tuesday Evening.

Sometime ago the promise of having a fine banquet served them was made to the members of the M. E. church Sunday school who individually brought in a new member. Last evening at the church parlors the event was held, but it not only included those who helped increase the membership, but all members of the Sunday school.

The large dining room was filled to overflowing and the tables lavishly groined under the weight of the many good things to eat.

After the banquet a fine program was rendered, Dr. A. M. Wilkinson, acting as toast master. The program opened with the singing of the song, "A Saloonless Nation in 1920." This was followed by a short talk on the topic, "Our Goal," by Miss Nettie Correll. Floyd Bettes responded to the toast, "The New Baby," which was followed by Miss Himes, whose subject was "How We Grow." Leslie Beattie gave an interesting talk on his experience as apprentice aboard a battleship, which was much enjoyed. The male quartet sang several selections, a duet by Ney Smith and Miss Naud Shapton, and a solo by Mildred Eckinger were among the pleasing numbers of the evening. That the M. E. Sunday school is a live and growing body was much in evidence by the enthusiasm shown.

Will Erect Electric Sign.

Monday evening the council granted permission to Mrs. C. E. Noble to erect suitable poles upon which to hang a large electric sign across Bridge street, at the foot of Antrim street. The electric sign will be a large one, containing the words "Hotel Klaton," and when illuminated can be read from a long distance.

WILL LOCATE HERE

Harry L. Oldham Removes from Decatur, Illinois to Make His Home in Charlevoix.

According to an article in "Buildings and Building Management" the more times you meet Harry L. Oldham, the better you will like him. The magazine goes on and says a bunch of nice things about Mr. Oldham, who has been a resident of Decatur, Illinois, since 1892. He started in from the day of his arrival to put Decatur on the map, and from all reports has succeeded in doing so. He was engaged in the insurance business and the H. L. Oldham Insurance Agency did more business in that line than any city outside of Chicago. He had a hobby—street lighting—and the result was that Decatur is considered as one of the best lighted cities in the United States. He had other hobbies, too, and they all worked out for the good of the community in which he lived.

The article states: "Harry L. Oldham will succeed wherever he goes, but, golly, his hard to divorce Oldham and Decatur."

Mr. Oldham intends to locate in Charlevoix and has leased the Perkins house, 216 Park avenue. He is expected to arrive this week. Charlevoix extends a hand of hearty welcome to Mr. Oldham—he will locate in a community where new blood and enthusiasm is needed.

Will Hold Box Social.

On Monday, April 13, a box social will be given under the auspices of the young ladies of St. Mary's church at the school hall. Be sure and procure one of these "lunches for two." A good time is promised to all who attend. Besides the social other attractions in the shape of a program, fish pond, etc. will be provided. Do not fail to attend.

RESULTS OF THE CAUCUSES

Townships of Norwood, Hayes and Charlevoix Select Their Candidates.

Two Tickets in Field in Norwood Township—Battle of Ballots Monday.

This is campaign week in Charlevoix, both townships and cities, and the poor voter is being besieged by a host of office seekers who want his vote at the election next Monday. From now on until Moudsy evening there will be a continuous hustle on the part of nearly all the candidates to line up their supporters. If politics are as hot in the township as they are in the city not a voter will be allowed to escape without at least one request.

In the township of Norwood there will be two tickets in the field—all Republican—but headed Ticket No. 1 and Ticket No. 2. The following is the result of the caucuses:

Ticket No. 1—Supervisor, Whitfield Fotten; clerk, F. E. Richardson; treasurer, Joseph Sprick; road commissioner, Plenny Genett; overseer of highways, Alfred Vandusen; member board of review, Thomas Cummings; justice of the peace, to fill vacancy, William Wiles; constables, Orton Vandusen and Harold Stallford.

Ticket No. 2—Supervisor, Henry Wagner; treasurer, Alden Stafford; highway commissioner, Wm. Richardson.

Hayes Township.

The following men were chosen for the various offices: Supervisor, Frank C. Burnett; clerk, Asahel C. Tilton; treasurer, Oscar S. Tilton; highway commissioner, Albert O'Brien; justice of the peace, full term, E. E. Stroud; justice of the peace, to fill vacancy, H. H. Smith; member board of review, Platt Webster; constables, Henry Hamlin, Joseph Jackson, Robert Minier and Wm. Gray, Jr.

Charlevoix Township.

Charlevoix township made the following selections for the various offices: Supervisor, George Durance; clerk, Neil McAulay; treasurer, James B. Wilkinson; highway commissioner, Samson Godbold; overseer of highways, David Alexander; justice of the peace, full term, Wesley Howard; member board of review, Albert Reynolds; constables, Joseph Cogswell, Peter Walker and Wm. McLain.

NO TWO YEARS ARE THE SAME

Impractical to Compare Operations of One Year With Another.

Ex-Mayor Nordrum Takes Exception to Recently Published Financial Statement.

Charlevoix, March 31, 1914. To the Mayor and Finance Committee:

With reference to the Financial Statement of the city for the past year recently published, there is nothing I wish to say with any intention of reflecting upon the present administration. I would, however, refer briefly to the last paragraph of your report in which you make reference to the financial condition as compared with March 1st, 1913, and the lower taxes, etc.

It is almost impractical to compare the operations of one year with another. The conditions vary too much and the only subjects you could possibly bring up for comparison would be:

The Hose Tower: You completed the hose tower, but the council of 1912 laid the foundation and furnished about $500 worth of new fire hose. Compare this item.

The Street Work: You made improvements on Ferry street and Belvedere avenue and the former administration put in quite a little work on the same. Compare this and the balance may be a little in your favor.

The Water Mains: You made extensions of the water mains and so did your predecessors. Compare this and you will find some in your favor.

What else have you to compare with the operations of the administration of 1912? Can you possibly find any item that will offset the following:

Audit of the books.....	$ 618.00
Adding machine.....	278.00
Street sweeper.....	256.00
Mason street dock.....	250.00
Water main accident.....	750.00
Suits for fire boys.....	171.00
City band.....	150.00
Paving (city share).....	5603.00
	$8074.00

Add to this cash turned over $811.00

And you'll have the sum of $12,885.00 that might have been turned over to you had it not been for the above items, but, I think you will agree that an audit is necessary in any corporation. The adding machine is in operation, the sweeper is in evidence on the streets, the fire boys are comfortable, the band played for us and we completed the big paving job on Dixon avenue. A real comparison would have been the gigantic South Side Sewer proposition and if you had gone ahead with it your cash balance would have been much lower than it is.

Just a word about taxes: You raised a 10 mill tax amounting to $22,711.00, to which add what the former council turned over to you, $4,811.00 and you have $27,522.00. You have now on hand something over $10,000.00 and it will take about $17,000.00 more to make up the same figures as last year. You can do it easily with a tax of 7½ mills and come out in fine shape.

Yours very truly,
Olin Nordrum.

Auto Tax Unconstitutional.

The supreme court Thursday gave out a batch of decisions, one being to declare unconstitutional the last automobile law. This means that the old law with $3.00 license for each machine is revived. It means also that there is but $300 of money in the state treasury with which to pay premiums on state award roads until after the legislature shall meet and make further appropriations. Trunk road work also will have to wait.

To The Voters of Charlevoix.

On election day, April 6, vote for J. A. Antd, for Mayor, a progressive Democrat, and ensure a new and efficient business administration for the CITY, and the promotion of the general welfare impartially, and without fear or favor.—Adv. 1311.

A social, accompanied by a thirty minute play, will be given at the Barnard Epworth church, Tuesday evening, April 10. All are invited.—Adv. 1311.

THE NEVER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal
BY
REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt. Jefferson Locke insinuates himself into the college man's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Jolson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intrigued to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Runnels, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Tabogu, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama, Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

The girl tells him her name is "Chiquita." He learns later that this means only "little one." Kirk begins his work. Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Wellar) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries in vain in Panama to learn something of Chiquita and meets Alfarez again.

Kirk wins the capital prize, $5,000, in the lottery. He and Runnels make plans for advancement. The Cortlandts, having turned from the older Alfarez, intend to make Senor Garavel, a banker, president of Panama.

Alfarez's son, Kirk's foe, is engaged to Gertrudis, Garavel's daughter. She is Kirk's "Chiquita." He meets her again at the opera through Mrs. Cortlandt's aid. Kirk makes love to Chiquita. Edith Cortlandt, infatuated with Kirk, goes riding with him frequently.

CHAPTER XVI. An Awakening.

HE was in no more satisfactory frame of mind when, on the next afternoon, he shouldered his gun and set out for the country. He went directly to the tiny pool and waited there in a very fevered anxiety. Despite the coolness and peace of the place, he felt his pulses throb and his face burn. If she came, it would mean everything to him. If she stayed away—why, then he would have to believe that after all the real Gertrudis Garavel had spoken last night at the opera. The sound of a voice shot through his troubled thoughts like a beam of sunlight through a dark room.

"Oh, Senor Antonio! How you startled me!"

Instantly his self-possession came back. He felt relieved and gay.

"Good afternoon, queen!" He rose and bowed politely. "I thought I saw one underneath the waterfall just now."

"Who would have expected you to be here?" she cried, with an extreme and obviously counterfeit amusement that filled him with delight.

"I'm lost," he declared; then, after one look into her eyes, he added, "Ah, suddenly, utterly, irrevocably lost. Won't you sit down?"

"Since we have met quite by accident, perhaps it would not be so very improper," she laughed mischievously and settled unceremoniously beside him like a butterfly just alighting, ready to take flight again on the instant.

"Perhaps I can help you to find your way, senor?" she said, with ingenious politeness.

"You are the only one who can, Miss Garavel. I don't know that I ever told you, but I'm in love."

"Indeed?"

"I am the most miserably happy person in the world. For I have just this moment begun to believe that the young lady likes me a little bit."

"Oh! But I forget the real reason why I came. I have something I must tell you."

"All right. But honestly now, didn't you want to come?"

She turned upon him in a little burst of passion. "Yes!" she cried, "of course I did! I wished to come, madly, senor. It makes my heart patter like that!" she made her little "quiver-patter" to be wooed even by a Yankee. But I do not love you in the least. Oh no! Even if I wished to do so, there are too many reasons why I could not, and when I explain you will understand."

"Oh, Senor Antonio! How you startled me."

"I know. It's Ramon Alfarez. You're halfway engaged to him. But you know you don't love him."

"Ah, it is not too sure! He is of fine family, he is rich, he is handsome. Not possibly could I care for any man who was not all of those. All my life I have thought him a very sweet gentleman, and for a long time it has been agreed that I should be his wife. There are so many reasons why I should say yes."

"You haven't mentioned any that would be binding in law."

"My father's wish. Is not that sufficient?"

"You disregarded that once."

"That was but a flutter. All the time I knew I should be Ramon's wife when the time arrived. Perhaps I could refuse to wed a man my father chose for me, but no nice Spanish girl would dare to wed a man her father did not like. Do you see?"

"But it's no such your father would positively blunder for me once we get chummy."

"You are too different. You disregard our customs, you are cold. You continue to come here against my wishes, which no Spanish gentleman would dare to do."

"Oh, I'm no Spanish gentleman. I'm just an emotional blond. But I'm bound to marry you. Let's arrange the details. Shall it be a church wedding?"

She laughed deliciously. "What a nice game it is we have played! But now I must talk seriously."

"You wish?" he breathed. "Do you think I could ever give you up?"

She checked him gravely. "Truly it was just a game, and yet it was not altogether so either. But here is what I came to say. The strangest thing has happened. Not until last night after the opera did I even dream of it, and even now I cannot believe. Oh, I am so proud! Coming home from the theater my father told me—oh, the most wonderful thing. I promised very faithfully not to tell, so—he is to be the next president of Panama."

"Free?" Anthony started at her in frank amazement. "Why, I thought Old Man Alfarez?"

"It seems your country does not like him because he hates Americans—see? Now that you know the truth you must see at once that by no means could I marry to a person like you."

"Why not?"

"Oh! Don't you understand? I shall be the finest lady in the republic. All the men will adore me. I will have suitors—not one or two as now, but many. My father will be the most famous man of all the republic—perhaps in the whole world. I don't know."

"I don't think it will make any difference with him when he knows who I am. I'll make my father, and I'll promise to love for him."

"You are very funny." She gazed at him seriously, one tiny foot curled under her, her chin nodding into her palm.

"Do you love me?"

"Not one single speck. I merely like you to make love at me and cause my heart to jump."

The little hypocrite continued to voice words of warning and denial, though her eyes loved him, and for a long time they continued this delightful play of pleading and evasion. But at last Chiquita jumped up with a great appearance of alarm.

"Heavens, the time!" she cried. "I have stayed too long by night. Stephanie will miss me."

He rose and stretched out his hand as if to hold her.

"Shall I come again tomorrow?"

She grew suddenly earnest.

"No, no, senor. That is something you should not ask. If ever we are to meet again it must be with my father's consent. Please! Do not urge, for truly I would have to refuse." She let her palm rest in his an instant, and her cheek went scarlet as he pressed it to his lips. Then she said: "Go, Mr. Brazen One. How greatly it surprised me to find you here! I cannot say. It gave me such a start! And, Senor Antonio—my father may be found any day at his bank." Before he could detain her she was gone, flitting up the path with just one flashing smile of mischief over her shoulder.

Anthony went home with his head in the clouds. All his doubts were now at rest; for while Chiquita had stubbornly denied him all encouragement, he felt sure that her heart had answered. It was in the highest spirits, therefore, that he opened a letter he found awaiting him and read as follows:

Dear Kirk—I hope you are heartily sick of yourself and ready to do something decent for a change. Knowing your oratorical habits as I do, I realize you must own a lot of money by this time, and your new friends must be getting tired of you. I have been expecting you to draw on me daily and am taking this occasion to warn you in your own expensively acquired college English that "there is nothing doing"—except upon one condition. If you will agree to behave yourself in future I will pay your debts, send you west and give you a job as operator at $40 a month. But you will go where I send you, and you will stay where you are put. I will do the thinking for both of us and judge of your associates. Maybe if you prove to be any good at all I will arrange with the police to let you spend your vacations in "that dear New York" which still shows signs of your red paint brush. I would be pleased to have an apology by return mail, so that I may meet you in New Orleans and start you off once more on the road to decency and self-respect. You will never succeed at anything, but I am always ready to do my duty. This is my last offer, and if you refuse you may distinctly and definitely go to the devil. As ever your loving father,

DARWIN K. ANTHONY.

"I can get good operators for $30 a month. The extra $10 is pure sentiment."

Spurred by his present exhilaration, Kirk wrote an answer, which he read with a good deal of satisfaction before sealing it up:

Dear Dad—You affectionate letter with the kind offer to take charge of a sailing out in the Dakotas is at hand. I would like to help you along with your business, but "Upward and Onward" is my motto, and you'll have to raise that salary a bit. I am drawing $25 a month at present, quarters furnished and promotion promised. I have made some good investments, and there are no debts to settle. Inclosed find my last bank statement which will doubtless prove a great disappointment to you.

If you need a good master of transportation I would be pleased to consider an offer at any time, provided the salary is satisfactory, but your proposal to edit my acquaintances is out of the question. My decency and self-respect are doing well, thank you, and I like the climate.

The salary would have to be about $5,000 a year. As always your devoted and obedient son, KIRK.

By 5 P. M. I would not care to locate farther west than Buffalo. My wife might not like it.

Kirk lost no time in calling at the bank, but was disappointed to learn that Senor Andres Garavel had left the city for an unexpected business tour of the provinces and would not return for at least two weeks.

In the days that followed he saw nothing of Gertrudis, but a great deal of Edith Cortlandt. She had redeemed her promise of getting him a good horse—something rare in this country—and he was grateful for the exercise, which came as a welcome relief from his indoor toil. Soon their old friendly intercourse was going on as if it had never been interrupted.

As for Edith, this scampish little thing came to be quite as much a pain as a pleasure to her. During these past few weeks she had been plunged in a mental turmoil, the signs of which she had concealed with difficulty. She had fought with herself; she had tried to reason; she had marshaled her pride, but all in vain. At last she awoke to the terrifying certainty that she was in love with Kirk.

She began to look upon her husband with a quickened curiosity, and found him a stranger. For years she had made allowance for his weaknesses, ignoring them as she ignored his virtues, but never before had he appeared so colorless, so insignificant, above all so alien. She had barely tolerated him hitherto, but now she began to despise him.

If Cortlandt was aware of her change of feeling and its cause, his method of dealing with her showed some keenness. Silent contempt was what she could least endure from him of all men; yet this was just what his manner toward her expressed—if it expressed anything.

Even if he did suspect, what then? It was no affair of his; she was her own mistress. She had given him all he possessed, she had made a man of him. He was her creature, and had no rights beyond what she chose to give. They saw less and less of each other. Only before others, or at their frequent political councils, were they quite the same as they had been.

Of Anthony, on the other hand, she arranged to see more than ever, flattering him by a new deference in her manner, making him feel always at ease with her. In their frequent rides they covered most of the roads about the city, even to the ruins of old Panama. Then they began to explore the bypaths and trails.

One afternoon they turned into an unfrequented road that led off to the jungle from the main highway, walking their horses while they marveled at the beauty of the foliage. They burst out into a rocky glade, where a spring of clear water bubbled forth.

"What a discovery!" exclaimed Edith.

I'll Silence the Skeptic

To the Man who knows---who has tried me in Charlevoix, who being satisfied himself, has sent me his brother, his father or his friends—the pleased customer, I send this message: I am particularly anxious, when opportunity affords, that former customers take advantage of any of the extraordinary offerings which I am from time to time enabled to make. I want you to get your order in now at these prices. You can take the suit home at your leisure, a month or two hence—but give me your order now. You have my public word in advance that the values are great, so come in and look them over. Make your selections if the bargains impress you, take your sample home and I'll have your suit ready in a short time or whenever you are ready to wear it. In the meantime, send in your friends.

"Help me down, please. I'm going to drink."

Kirk dismounted and lent her a hand. The horses snorted appreciatively and, stepping forward, thrust their soft muzzles eagerly into the stream, then fell to browsing upon the tender leaves at their shoulders.

Edith quenched her thirst, shook the cramp from her limbs and said: "Some time we will have to see where this road leads. There may be more surprises beyond." She broke a flower from its stem and fastened it in Kirk's buttonhole while he gazed down at her with friendly eyes.

"You're looking awfully well lately," he declared.

Glancing up, she met his gaze and held it for an instant. Something in her look gave him a little thrill of embarrassment.

"I don't. I'll give Marquis and Gyp their dinner," he said and, turning aside, began to gather a handful of the greenest leaves. The instant his eyes were off her she took the horses by their bridles, swung them about and with a sharp blow of her riding crop sent them snorting and clattering down the trail. Kirk wheeled barely in time to see them disappearing.

"Say, why did you do that?" he asked.

"Because I wanted to. Isn't that reason enough?" Her eyes were reckless and her lips white. "I did it because I wanted to."

"What a discovery!" exclaimed Edith.

RENEWS HIS CONTRACT

Booth Fisheries Co. Contract With Oluf Nordrum for Another Year.

Charlevoix, March 31, 1914.
To whom it may concern:

It has been rumored, and no doubt for campaign purposes, that Nordrum is soon to leave Charlevoix for other fields, and to set the people right on this matter, I wish to state that I have tendered my services to the Booth Fisheries Company for another year and that I have received a letter of acceptance, dated Chicago, March 26th, 1914, and reads as follows:

"Mr. Oluf Nordrum, Charlevoix, Mich. Dear Sir: In keeping with our conversation at Port Huron, I herewith accept your proposition covering your services for another year, beginning April 1, 1914, and to run until April 1, 1915, to be located at Charlevoix, Mich., in charge of our interests in that territory. Hoping that the coming year will be as pleasant and more prosperous than the past, I am,
Yours very truly,
(Signed) J. E. Tippet."

The letter above referred to may be examined at any time at my office. I have also another letter accompanying the above which reads in part as follows: "Am enclosing herewith acceptance of your proposition and hope that you will be with us for many years to come." All of which is respectfully submitted.
Oluf Nordrum.

How to Use Dried Fruit.

Take the required quantity of the dried fruit, rinse well under running water, then soak in fresh water for about fourteen hours. Next prepare a syrup to taste by adding best white sugar to boiling water. When the syrup has come to the boil place the soaked fruit very carefully in the sirup and allow it to simmer for fifteen minutes. On no account let the sirup boil when once the fruit is in it, as if you do it will become pulpy and unsightly.

Serve cold or hot, as required, stewed fruit or in pies and tarts.

To make jam prepare the dried fruit as for stewing. Place the required quantity of soaked fruit in a preserving pan and add one pound of the best white sugar for each pound of soaked fruit. The time is as with the fresh fruit, but it is necessary to add more water.

Moreover, one pound of dried fruit will make four pounds of jam.

How to Care For Overshoes.

When buying overshoes be careful to see that you get those that have not been left over from last season. Even the best quality will deteriorate during the heat of summer and wear out much faster than the new stock.

The cracks in rubber overshoes, which will soon result in holes, rendering the shoe useless, may be nicely mended with a piece of surgeon's adhesive plaster. Fill a piece of rubber or thick felt into the hole and then cover this with the plaster. It will be a protection against wear.

When rubber shoes are applied a coating of patent leather shoe polish and they will be like new.

How to Remove Match Scratches.

When palms have become scratched with matches rub them first with a slice of lemon and then wash with soap and water. This removes all traces of the match scratches.

Feed Rack For Hogs.

A very handy feed rack for hogs is easily made. Build a trough a foot wide and four inches deep for the bottom of the rack. This trough will catch the leaves of the hay. Nail four uprights, three feet long, one to each corner of the trough. Fasten the back uprights to the fence so as to keep the rack in place and make it hundler to fill. Nail a board between the tops of the front uprights and to this board fasten the strips, which should be from six to seven inches apart, and run from it to the center of the trough.

Alfalfa hay should always be kept to this rack during the winter. In the summer fresh alfalfa can be used if the hogs are not on pasture. It is surprising to find how much hay a hog will eat, and hay is cheaper than corn.

There was a hopeful gleam in the eyes of the young man with a slightly retreating chin as he approached the father of his ladylove.

"Will you give your daughter to me in marriage, sir?" he asked in as firm a tone as he could muster.

"I'm afraid you are not well enough acquainted with her, young man," remarked the father.

"Why, I've seen her twice a week for nearly a year," said the astonished suitor.

"That may all be," said the parent. "but if you knew much about her character, you'd leave said, 'Will you give me to your daughter in marriage?'"

Sound Choice.

The moving picture film, beginning with the far-off days when chaos lay on the waters, is depicting for us how God called the earth into being from the void and how He has upheld it and sustained it and carried it onward and upward toward its divinely appointed goal. All this is done while machinery, reproducing synchronously the tones of the human voice, helps in entertaining, enlightening and instructing the auditor.

All this is being accomplished and will be accomplished by the marvelous photo-drama of "Creation," produced by the International Bible Students Association. This body of earnest and active supporters and disseminators cause I wanted to talk with you."

"Well, those horses wouldn't overbear."

"Don't be angry, Kirk. I haven't seen you alone since—that night."

"Taboga?" he said guiltily. "You're not going to lecture me again? I'm sorry enough as it is."

"What a queer chap you are! Am I so unattractive that you really want to rush off after those horses? I have known men who would have thought it a privilege to be left alone with me like this."

"I—have no doubt."

"You remember, for instance, I told you there was one man at Taboga whom I did not wish to see?"

"Yes—at the sanitarium."

"And did you tell Mr. Cortlandt what I did?"

"Do you think I would have come riding with you if I had?" She shook her head. "Kirk, I used to think you were an unusually forward young man, but you're not very worldly, are you?"

"He began firmly: "See here, Mrs. Cortlandt, you have been mighty good to me, and I'm indebted to you and your husband for a whole lot. I am terribly fond of you both."

"I suppose," she said, half defiantly, "you know how things are with Stephen and me—everybody must know, I suppose. Happiness—that is what I want, and I will have it—I will have it at any cost. It is my right. Because a woman marries without love, is it right for her to forego love all her life? I think not."

"I can't pretend to misunderstand you, although—listen! He cut his words short. "Here comes some one."

She turned her head, as from the direction their mounts had taken came the sound of approaching hoofs.

"Natives from the hills," she nodded carelessly toward the purple mountains back of them. But the next moment she gave a little gasp of consternation. Out from the overhanging path, with a great rustling of leaves, came not the expected fleet-bitten Panamanian horse, but a familiar lay, astride of which was Stephen Cortlandt. He was leading Marquis and Gyp by their bridles and reined in at the sight of his wife and her companion.

"Hello!" he said. "I caught your horses for you."

"Jove, that's lucky!" Kirk greeted the husband's arrival with genuine relief. "They looked when we got down to take a drink, and we were getting ready for a long walk. Thanks, awfully."

"No trouble at all. I saw them as they came out on the main road," Cortlandt's plucky saddle creaked as he bent forward to deliver the reins. He was so cool and immaculate as ever. He met Edith's eyes without the slightest expression. "See afternoon for a ride. Pretty spot, isn't it? If you are going back I'll ride with you."

"Good enough. May I give you a hand, Mrs. Cortlandt?" Kirk helped Edith to her seat, at which her husband bowed his thanks. Then the three set out in single file.

"Which way?" Inquired Stephen as they reached the highroad.

"Back to town, I think," Edith told him. "And you?"

"I'm not ready yet. See you later." He raised his hat and cantered easily away, while the other two inquired their horses' heads toward the city.

CHAPTER XVII.
The Rest of the Family.

THE time for Senor Garavel's return having arrived, Kirk called at the bank and found not the least difficulty in gaining an audience.

"I remember you quite well, sir," said Garavel—"La Doca." Since you are a friend of Mrs. Cortlandt I shall be delighted to serve you."

"I have something very particular to say to you," Kirk began diffidently, "but I don't just know how to get at it."

Garavel smiled graciously. "I'm a business man."

"This isn't business," blurted Kirk; "it's much more important—I want to have it over as quickly as possible, so I'll be frank. I have met your daughter, Mr. Garavel—the banker's eyes widened at a look of disconcerting intensity—and I am in love with her—sort of a shock, isn't it? It was to me, I'd like to tell you who I am and anything else you may wish to know."

"My dear sir, you surprise me—if you are really serious. Why, you have seen her but once—a moment, at the theater?"

"I met her before that night, out at your country place. I had been hunting and on my way home through the woods I stumbled upon your swimming pool. She directed me to the road."

"But even so?"

"Well, I loved her the first instant I saw her."

"I know nothing of this. If you had reason to think that your suit would be acceptable, why did you not come to me before?"

"I couldn't. I didn't know your name. I was nearly crazy because I couldn't so much as learn the name of the girl I loved." Kirk plunged confusedly into the story of his meeting with Chiquita.

"That is a strange tale," said Senor Garavel when he had finished. "If you would tell me something about yourself I might know better in what light to regard this affair."

"Gladly, though there isn't much to tell. Just now I'm working on the P. R. R. as assistant to the master of transportation, you know. I like the work and expect to be promoted. I have a little money—just enough to give me a fresh start if I should lose out here, and—oh, well, I'm poor, but honest. I suppose that's about the size of it." He paused, vainly conscious that he had not done himself justice. "My father is a railroad man in Albany, N. Y."

"In what capacity is he employed, may I ask?"

Kirk grinned at this, and, seeing a copy of Bradstreet's on the banker's table, turned to his father's name which he pointed out rather shamefacedly. Senor Garavel became instantly less distant.

"Of course the financial world knows Darwin K. Anthony," said he. "Even we modest merchants of the tropics have heard of him, and that his son should seek to win success upon his own merits is greatly to his credit. I congratulate you, sir, upon your excellent progress."

"I ought to tell you, sir, that I am not on good terms with my father at present. In fact, he has cast me off. That is why I am here supporting myself by hard work, instead of living in idleness. But I'm beginning to like the work—and I'll make good—I'll do it if only to show my father his mistake. That's what I care about most. I don't want his money. It's easier to make money than to lose it. But I must succeed, for his sake and my own."

"May I inquire the cause of this estrangement?"

"Oh, general worthlessness on my part, I suppose. Come to think of it, I must have been a good deal of a cross. I never did anything very fierce, though." He smiled a little sadly.

A quick light of thought flashed through the banker's eyes. He was a keen judge of men.

"Well, well," he said, with a trace of impatience, "there is no need to go into the matter further. Your pro-

"She has been promised to Ramon."

"Is it possible—for many reasons it is impossible, and yet—your spirit is commendable."

"Does that mean you won't even allow me to see your daughter?"

"It would be useless."

"But I love Gertrudis," said Kirk, desperately.

Garavel looked a trifle pitying.

"You are by no means the first," he said. "I have been besieged by many who say always the same thing without Gertrudis they cannot, they will not, they should not live. And yet I have heard of no deaths. Their marriage has been unruined."

"Do you think that is quite fair to her? If she loves Ramon Alvarez?"

"Once again Garavel's brows signaled surprise. "Ah, you know?"

"Yes, sir. I was about to say if she really loves him I can't make any difference. But suppose she should care for me?"

"Again it could make no difference—once she had married Ramon. But she is too young to know her own mind. Youth is headstrong and blinded by dreams; hence it is better that marriage should be arranged by older persons."

"Exactly. That's why I want you to arrange mine." The banker smiled in spite of himself, for he was not without a sense of humor, and the young man's sincerity was winning.

"It is out of the question," he said; "useless to discuss. Forgetting for the moment all other considerations, there is an obstacle to your marriage into a Spanish family which you do not stop to consider, one which might prove insurmountable. I speak of religion."

"No trouble there, sir."

"You are then a Catholic?"

"It was my mother's faith, and I was brought up in it until she died. After that I sort of neglected it. You see, I am more of a Catholic than anything else."

"What we call a 'bad Catholic'?"

"Yes, sir. But if I were not it wouldn't make any difference. Chiquita is my religion."

"Who?" The father started.

"I—I call her that," Kirk explained in confusion, "to myself, of course."

"Indeed! So do I," said Senor Garavel dryly. For a moment he frowned in meditation. There were many things to consider. He felt a certain sympathy for this young man, with his straightforwardness and artless brusquerie. Moreover, though the banker was no great respecter of persons, the mention of Darwin K. Anthony had impressed him. If Kirk were all that he seemed he had no doubt of the ultimate reconciliation of father and son. At all events it would do no harm to earn more of this extraordinary suit or, and meanwhile he must treat him with respect while carefully guarding his own dignity against possible financial advances.

"She has been promised to Ramon," he said at last, "and I have considered her future quite settled. Of course, such arrangements are frequently altered for various causes, even at the last moment, but who knows?" He shrugged his shoulders. "She may not wish to entertain your suit. So why discuss it? Why make plans or promises? It is a matter to be handled when the time comes. There are important issues involved here. For a young man I have known so very short a time, he smiled gently, "you have impressed me not unfavorably. I thank you for coming to me at my rate."

The two men rose and shook hands; Kirk was not altogether cast down by the result of the interview. He understood the banker's allusion to the possibility of a change of arrangements, and felt sure that, but Chiquita had told him that her marriage with Ramon could not make sense after the true nature of Garavel's political aspirations became known.

The truth was that Andres Garavel had not hesitated long after that memorable night at the Tivoli before accepting the brilliant prize which the Cortlandts had dangled so alluringly before his eyes, and the decision once made, he had entered into the scheme with all his soul. He was wise enough, however, to leave his destiny largely in their hands.

It was not long after Kirk's visit to the bank that Garavel, during a conference with the Cortlandts, took occasion to bring up the young man's name. Cortlandt had been called to the telephone, and Edith was left free to answer without constraint.

"I have seen you and him riding quite frequently," he just remarked, with polite interest. "Is he, then, an old friend?"

"Yes, we are very fond of him. He will be promoted soon, by the way, although he doesn't know it. He is to replace Rannels as soon as he is able. Kirk is certain to succeed, and old Anthony will come round, if I know American affairs."

Garavel smiled, well pleased that he had treated his recent visitor with proper consideration. After all, why not invite the young fellow to his house? That would be rather a significant step according to Spanish custom, yet he need not be bound by it. He could put a stop to the affair at any time. Besides, despite his frequent protestations to the contrary, he was somewhat influenced by his daughter's desire for more liberty. It was not fair to her, he thought in his heart, that she should know only Ramon. One reason especially appealed to his pride. If a break came between him and Alvarez, Ramon must not appear to have filled Gertrudis. If, meanwhile, she had another suitor, and one of distinguished family, the affair would wear a better look. It cannot be denied that the name of Darwin K. Anthony rang musically in his ears.

"The boy has the right stuff in him," Edith went on. "He began at the bottom only a few months ago, preferring to work his way up, though he was offered a first rate position to begin with."

She would have said more, but just at that moment her husband entered. "You were saying that Alvarez suspects," said Cortlandt, addressing Garavel. "Has he said anything?"

"Not to me as yet, but he surely must know. The rumors must have reached him. He is cool, and Ramon nets quietly. I feel guilty—almost as if I had betrayed a friend."

"Nonsense! When the time comes you will be called for. But it must be the voice of the people calling. How's Chiquita, Colon—they must all demand Garavel," Cortlandt sighed. "I shall be very glad when it is over." He looked more pale, more bloodless, more world weary than ever.

"You need have no fear that it will cause serious trouble between you and the general," Mrs. Cortlandt assured Garavel. "Ramon should be able to effect peace, no matter what happens."

"Ah, I am not sure that there will be a marriage between Gertrudis and him."

"Is she growing rebellious?" Cortlandt inquired. "If I were you, then, I wouldn't force her. A hopeless marriage is a tragic thing."

His wife nodded her agreement.

"Not exactly rebellious. She would do whatever I asked regardless of her own feelings, for that is the way we Spaniards bring up our daughters. But she is cold to Ramon, and he, I believe, is suspicious of my intentions toward his father. Therefore the situation is strained. With Gertrudis I cannot be severe, but unless it becomes necessary to make conditions with my old friend, I should prefer to let the girl have her own way."

It was about this time, perhaps two weeks after Kirk had replied to his father's letter, that Rannels called him to one day to ask

"Do you know a man named Clifford?"

"No."

"He dropped in this morning, claiming to be a newspaper man from the States; wanted to know all about everything on the canal and the usual thing. He didn't talk like a writer, though. I thought you might know him. He asked about you."

"Me?" Kirk pricked up his ears.

"I gathered the impression he was trying to pump me," Rannels eyed his subordinate shrewdly. "I hoisted you."

"Is he short and thick set?"

"No; tall and thin." As Kirk merely looked at him in a puzzled way, he continued: "I suppose we're all suspicious down here, there's so much of that sort of thing. If he has anything on you?"

"He's got nothing on me."

"I'm glad of that. You're the best man I have, and that shakeup I told you about is coming off sooner than I expected. I'd hate to have anything happen to you. Do you think you could hold down your job?"

"What? Do you really mean it?"

"I do."

"It goes without saying that I'd like to be master of transportation, but not until you're through."

"Well, the old man has had another row with Colonel Johnson and may not wait for his vacation to quit. I'm promised the vacancy."

"Then you have seen the colonel?"

"No, but I have seen Mrs. Cortlandt. I felt I had a right to ask something from her in return for what I did for you. I know that sounds rotten, but you'll understand how it is. Colonel Johnson wants his brother-in-law, Blakeley, to have the place, but I'm entitled to it, and she has promised to fix it for me. If I do up you go too. That's why I was worried when this Clifford fellow appeared."

"There is something, I suppose, I ought to tell you, although it doesn't do much. I was mixed up in the night I left New York. A plain clothes man happened to get his head under a falling bottle and nearly died from the effects."

"This Clifford party is stepping at the Hotel Central. Better look him over."

"I will," said Kirk, feeling more concerned than he showed, but his apprehension turned out to be quite unfounded. On inspection Clifford proved to bear no resemblance whatever to Williams, nor did he seem to have any concealed design. He was a good sort, apparently, with a knack of making himself agreeable, and in the weeks that followed he and Kirk became quite friendly. Meanwhile, no word had come from Senor Garavel, and Kirk was beginning to fret. But just as he had reached the limit of his patience, he received a note which transported him with joy.

Senor Andres Garavel, he read, would be in the city on the following Tuesday evening, and would be pleased to have him call.

Even with his recent experiences of Spanish etiquette Kirk hardly realized the extent of the concession that had been made to him. He knew nothing of the tears, the pleadings and the spirited championship of his cause that had overborne the last parental objection. It was lucky for him that Chiquita was a spoiled child and Garavel a very Americanized Spaniard. However, as it was, he went nearly mad with delight and had hard work to refrain from shaving himself twice that Tuesday evening, so overjoyed was he about his lot, yet his excitement was as nothing compared to that of Allan who looked on with admiration tempered by anxious criticism.

"It will be a grand wedding, sir," he exclaimed. "H'Alban will be there for giving you away."

The residence of Senor Garavel is considered one of the show places of Panama. It is of Spanish architecture, built of brick and stucco and embellished with highly ornamental iron balconies. It stands upon a corner overlooking one of the several public squares, guarded from the street by a breast high stone wall crowned with a stout iron fence. Diagonally opposite and running the full length of the block is a tiny shrine with an image of the Madonna smiling downward. At night its bright radiance illumines the darkness round about and lends the spot a certain sanctity.

An Indian woman, clad in barbarous colors, her bare feet laced in sandals, admitted him, and the banker himself met him in the hall. He led the way into a great barren parlor, where, to Kirk's embarrassment, he found quite a company gathered. His host formally presented him to them, one after another. There were Senor Pedro Garavel, a brother of Andres; Senora Garavel, his wife, who was fat and short of wind; the two Misses Garavel, their daughters; then a little wrinkled, brown old lady in stiff black silk who spoke no English. Kirk gathered that she was somebody's aunt or grandmother. Last of all, Gertrudis came shyly forward and put her hand in his, then glided back to a seat behind the old lady. Just as they were seating themselves another member of the family appeared—this time a second cousin from Guatemala. Like the grandmother, he was an ignorant of English as Kirk was of Spanish, but he had a pair of frightfully intense black eyes with which he devoured the American.

THE REASON FEWER PEOPLE TAKE "SALTS"

We find the use of salts and other harsh physics is becoming less every year because more and more people are using Rexall Orderlies which we and they firmly believe to be the best laxative remedy ever made. They taste so much like candy that even the children like them. At the same time they act so easily and naturally that there is no purging, griping or pain. They promptly remove the constipation and, by soothing and strengthening the bowels, make it less liable to occur again. We have the most faith in them. We know what they are made of and the pleasant, beneficial results that always follow their use.

You needn't take our word for it. If Rexall Orderlies don't help you—if they don't entirely relieve all your bowel troubles—come back and tell us and we'll give back your money. In vast pocket tin boxes; 10c, 25c, 50c.

You can buy Rexall Orderlies only at The Rexall Stores, and in this town only of us.

WHEN A MAN'S MARRIED

How to Detect the Alum Baking Powder

"Which are the alum baking powders; how can I avoid them unless they are named?" asks a housekeeper.

Here is one way: take the can of a low-priced powder in your hand and read the ingredient clause upon the back label. The law requires that if the powder contains alum that fact must be there stated. If you find one of the ingredients named alum, or sulphate of aluminum, you have found an alum baking powder.

There is another and a better way. You don't have to know the names of the alum powders. Use Royal Baking Powder only; that assures you a cream of tartar powder, and the purest and most healthful baking powder beyond question.

The grange also voted to have their next regular meeting April 11, in the evening and every two weeks from that date. Do not forget the date and come?

Harmony Grange.

Harmony Grange met on Saturday evening, March 21, with a fair attendance of members and one visitor from Wilson grange.

A proposition advanced by P. Collier of Boyne City, in regard to establishing a co-operative warehouse was thoroughly discussed and finally laid on the table until next meeting, so as to give the members more time to think about it.

The matter of buying a site, and building a grange hall, was talked over and a committee consisting of R. E. Newville, W. C. Burdick and H. L. Willson was appointed to ascertain the prices of various sites that had been suggested.

In the absence of the lecturer the secretary announced the following program for next meeting:

Song, No. 102, Grange.
Comic recitation, J. A. Newville.
Discussion, "How Many Cows Warrent a Man in Buying a Separator or building a Silo," led by O. D. Willson.
Song, L. D. Willson.
Paper, "What Topics Should Our Grange Discuss," Mrs. E. J. Coykendale.
Music, Mrs. Ruth Newville.
"What is Chinese Cabbage and Chinese Pe. Ten?" Martin Laffer.
"What Industrial Training Should Be Given The Average Girl?" Mrs. W. C. Burdick.
Two applications were received and another was balloted on. They will be initiated in the first and second degree at the next meeting.

Moves to Evansville.

J. J. Edwards, who for the past seven years has had charge of the Wilson farm on the north side, left Monday with his family for Evansville, Indiana, where he will take charge of the 143 acre farm owned by Robert Dickinson, a well known summer visitor to Charlevoix. The farm Mr. Edwards will have charge of was taken up over a hundred years ago by an English family, and up to a short time ago was owned by descendants of the original settlers. Mr. Edwards and family carry with them the best wished of their many Charlevoix friends.

ANOTHER PIONEER GONE

Augustus Munson Had lived in Charlevoix County for Fifty Years.

In the death of Augustus Munson, which occurred at the home of his son-in-law, William L. Bird, Sunday night, Charlevoix county loses one of its earliest pioneers and industrious farmers.

Mr. Munson was born in Sweden and at the age of 18 came to the United States. Later he came to Charlevoix county and settled at Ironton, where he has made his home for the past fifty years.

Mr. Munson was 82 years of age at the time of his death, which was caused by a stroke of apoplexy. He leaves to mourn his loss an aged widow, two daughters and an adopted daughter.

Funeral services were held from the house Wednesday morning at 10:30, Rev. C. E. Taggart, officiating. The remains were laid to rest in Brookside cemetery.

Badly Burned.

Mrs. Lonie Priebe, a well known resident of Bay township, was badly burned about the face, neck and hands last Tuesday, when a bucket in which she was cooking potatoes exploded. She had placed a tight cover over the bucket and the steam blew it off just at the moment she was bending over the stove. The hot water and steam burned her face and hands quite badly, and it is feared her eyes and throat are also injured.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Charlevoix Schools Honored by the North Central Association.

Colleges Belonging to Association Cover Fifteen States—Admitted Without Examination.

At the annual meeting of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools, held in Chicago the first week of March, the Charlevoix schools were placed on the accredited list of high schools of the association.

The aim of the North Central Association of Colleges and Secondary Schools is, first, to bring about a better acquaintance, a keener sympathy and a heartier co-operation between the colleges and secondary schools of this territory; secondly, to consider common educational problems and to devise best ways and means of solving them; and thirdly, to promote the physical, intellectual and moral well being of students by urging proper sanitary conditions of school buildings, adequate library and laboratory facilities, and higher standards of scholarship and of remuneration of teachers. The association is a voluntary organization consisting of representatives of both secondary schools and colleges, is devoted solely to the highest welfare of the boys and girls of this territory, and it bespeaks the cordial and sympathetic support of all school men.

The colleges belonging to the association are the most important colleges and universities of Michigan, Ohio, Indiana, Kentucky, Missouri, Illinois, Wisconsin, Minnesota, Iowa, North Dakota, South Dakota, Colorado, Kansas, Oklahoma and Nebraska. Graduates of the high schools of the accredited list are admitted to the colleges of the association without an examination.

The accredited list includes 100 high schools in Michigan.

Birthday Party.

Last Wednesday afternoon William McCartney entertained a number of his little friends at the home of Frank Metcalf on Park avenue. The party was given in honor of his fifth birthday. Ice cream, cake and candy were served at tables prettily decorated with pretty Easter favors and candles.

TAKE YOUR CHOICE

A Well Conducted Newspaper is Very Much Like a Banquet.

One of our exchanges says: "Did you ever stop to think that a well-conducted newspaper is like a banquet? Everything is served up to you with a view of selection. Help yourself to what you want, but do not condemn the entire spread because pickles and onions may be included. If you do not relish them somebody else may find them palatable. Be generous and broad enough to select gracefully such reading matter from a paper as will be agreeable to your mental taste. You, as an individual, are not compelled to swallow everything. We do not think alike on every subject, and it is a good thing, as it makes more variety, and variety is the spice of existence."

84TH BIRTHDAY

Friends and Neighbors Help Charles Peaslee Celebrate Event.

A few of the many friends of Mr. and Mrs. Charles Peaslee met at their home on the north side March 31st, in honor of Mr. Peaslee's eighty-fourth birthday. Mr. Peaslee received some nice and appropriate presents. All present seemed to enjoy themselves.

After all had partaken of the bountiful dinner served, Mr. Peaslee entertained by reading some nice selections of very fine print without the aid of glasses. Mrs. Peaslee also did her share of entertaining by some nice music on the graphophone.

All present joined in wishing Mr. and Mrs. Peaslee many happy returns of the day and with thanks for their abundant hospitality.

P. M. SUMMER SCHEDULE

First Resort Train Out of Chicago Leaves There Friday, June 5.

The early spring schedule of the Pelee Marquette resort trains from Chicago and St. Louis have been practically completed and, according to announcements received today, the first resort train out of Chicago for this city will leave there Friday, June 5. Two trains a week will be operated until June 22, when the regular daily service from Chicago, St. Louis and points south will be started. The through train service will be in operation until September 18, and special trains will be operated from that date until the first week in October to carry the summer residents back to the south.

Special resort trains will be operated between Charlevoix and Petoskey during the Elks' convention and efforts now being made may be successful in getting the regular summer schedule in operation at that time. Charlevoix residents will want to go to Petoskey during Elks' week and the visitors there will want to come to Charlevoix before returning to their homes. There will be trains running at all hours to take care of this traffic if the regular schedule is not put on.

LIVED HERE FOR MANY YEARS

Mary Dickson Bell Knew All the Hardship of Pioneer Life.

Forty Years a Resident of Charlevoix—Funeral Services Held Saturday.

The funeral of Mrs. Mary Bell, pioneer resident of Charlevoix and mother of Mrs. John Burns, was held from the Methodist church Saturday morning at 10 o'clock. The services were conducted by her pastor, Rev. Quinton Walker, assisted by Rev. C. E. Taggart. The remains were laid to rest in the family lot in Brookside cemetery. Mary Dickson Bell was born in Belfast, Ireland, September 20, 1836, and was called to her reward April 1, 1914. She came to America when she was eighteen years of age and lived with her brother for a time in Detroit. She then moved to Evanson, Illinois, where she met and was married to John Bell, April 8, 1859. To this union eight children were given. They have all preceded their mother to the better world but one, Mrs. John Burns, at whose home she died.

In the fall of 1895 she and her family came to Michigan. They lived on a homestead in Antrim county until 1873, when they came to Charlevoix, better known then as Pine River, so that her children could attend school. Mr. Bell went into business here at this time, and continued the same for about 20 years. Mrs. Bell knew all the hardships of pioneer life. Hers was the first frame house in Antrim county. For more than forty years she has been a resident of this city, and during this time she made a host of friends who will greatly miss her. She was a woman gentle of spirit, refined in manner, possessed fine sensibilities and had lofty ideals for herself and for others. She lived an unselfish life, finding her highest joy in administering to others' needs. She has gone from us, yet her life remains a rich legacy to comfort many a heart, that will never cease to mourn and miss her.

Auction Sale.

Page 2 of this issue contains the auction sale of Herbert and Florence Fox, at their farm two miles south of Charlevoix, on the Norwood road. Mr. Fox will sell all his stock, farm implements, etc., and household goods at this sale to the highest bidder. The list of goods is an unusually large one, and many bargains will be obtained by those in attendance. A nice, warm free lunch will be served at noon. W. E. Byers will cry the sale and E. A. Butler will act as clerk. Keep in mind that the sale starts at 10:00 o'clock, Wednesday, March 15.

NICHOLLS RE-ELECTED MAYOR IN HOT THREE-CORNERED FIGHT

Carries City by a Majority of 45—W. H. Miller Defeated in Third Ward by W. F. Graham, After Serving as Supervisor For Past Nine Years—Abolishment of B. P. W. Looses Out.

Election has come and gone—disappointments were many among the various candidates, but all sore spots will be soon wiped out in the after election "get together" process.

Three tickets in the field in Charlevoix brought out the biggest vote cast in years. Voting began as soon as the polls were open in the morning, and the same activity continued until their close in the evening.

Republican candidates were returned the winners in all but one contest, that of city clerk, when the present incumbent, Ernest J. Hiller, republican, was defeated by 13 votes by P. E. Vandermade, progressive.

Harry Nicholls, republican candidate for mayor, carried the city by a majority of 45. In the first ward he was in the lead by 25 votes, in the third by 27, and lost out in the second by 7, giving him a total majority in the three wards of 45.

In the three-cornered fight in the third ward, W. F. Graham defeated W. H. Miller, democratic supervisor for the past nine years from this ward, by a majority of 20.

The proposition to abolish the Board of Public Works, which required a two-thirds vote to carry, lost out by 26 votes. In the three wards something near 26 or 27 blank ballots were cast. The vote plainly showed that it was the opinion of a majority of the people that the board should be abolished, the two-thirds clause being its only cause of defeat.

Below is given the result of the ballots in detail:

HAD A FINE TIME

Salmagundi Social Given by the Gleaners a Great Success.

The salmagundi social given by Quality Arbor, Ancient Order of Gleaners, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Elmer Ingalls Wednesday evening, April 1, proved a great success in every respect.

Miscellaneous progressive games were played and were thoroughly enjoyed by those who took part. Miss Helen Puleipher and Albert Cook were the winners of the first prize, and two couple Josephine Trimble, Arlie Smith, Gladys Puleipher and Byron Meggison were tie for the consolation.

Salmagundi means a mixture—a miscellaneous assortment of different things—the salmagundi social served was an illustration of a miscellaneous assortment of good things to eat, and the same idea was carried out in the entertainment during the evening.

KEEP OFF THE GRASS

Unthinking Pedestrians Wear Path Across Green-swards in Their Travel.

"Keep off the Grass."

This sign of spring will soon make its appearance in a number of places in the city, and will be located so that the who runs may read. Some times the request is preface by the word "please," and in other cases the sign bear that word alone, but all mean the same thing—that those who see them will refrain from tramping under foot the tender rootlets that each may contribute a share towards green lawns and making work for the rattling lawn mowers.

Pedestrians frequently and unthinkingly walk across lawns in their efforts to reach their destinations quickly. Deep paths have been made across some of the curb lawns that have not been barricaded against pedestrians, and in other places the signs will be posted. There should however, be no occasion for either barricades or signs, for everyone should keep in mind the injunction:

"Please Keep Off the Grass."

TAKES POISON IN SCHOOL

Lucy Fineout, Aged Sixteen of Boyne City Commits Suicide.

Thought to Be Result of Childish Love Affair—Died Soon Afterwards.

Lucy Fineout, sixteen years old daughter of A. R. Fineout, of Boyne City, committed suicide Monday morning by taking poison, presumably strychnine. She had left home at 8:15 to attend school, Evangeline School District No. 4, which is about three miles from Boyne City but only a short distance from her home, feeling rather blue but giving no idea of her intentions. At 9:30 she asked permission of her teacher, Miss Cora Willis, to leave the room. When she arose to her feet she staggered and fell. She said she could not stand but seemed in no pain. She was lifted upon a table and assistance sent for but it could not reach her in time. After three convulsions she died at about 11:30, she remaining conscious to the last and before dying told the teacher she had taken poison.

It seems the girl had been keeping company with a young man of her neighborhood for some time, with whom she lately quarrelled. She had become very morose and despondent and yesterday became much more so by seeing her former auditor out driving with another girl. She said nothing of her intentions of committing suicide and the affair was hoked upon as merely a "lover's quarrel."

GOES TO BAY CITY

I. E. Converse Becomes Partner of Prominent Law Firm in That City.

J. E. Converse, for the past ten years a prominent attorney of Boyne City, will leave that city this week for Bay City, where he will become a member of the well-known law firm of Hall, DeVoe & Hall, filling the vacancy left by the death of Devere Hall, Sr., a year or so ago.

At the time Mr. Converse came to Boyne City he formed a partnership with L. F. Knowles. The firm of Knowles & Converse was well known throughout the state for three or four years, when the former left Boyne City for Detroit.

Mr. Converse continued the business alone until a year or so ago, when he and A. G. Urdhart formed a partnership. He was prominent and active in city affairs, president of the Board of Commerce, and one time candidate for mayor. He has many friends, both in this city and Boyne City, who wish him every success in his new field of work.

BOARD MAKES A WISE MOVE

Will Keep Teacher of Agriculture on Pay Roll Year Round.

Boyne City in Beauty the Many Barren Spots About the City.

The school board of Boyne City has decided to keep its teacher of agriculture on the pay roll twelve months of the year. It has decided to do this, that this instructor may use the vacation periods in giving instruction in gardening and in encouraging the pupils of the school to beautify the many barren spots about the city.

This is a wise move and will undoubtedly be followed by other Western Michigan school boards, except in the counties having agricultural agents. In such counties the federal man is already on duty the entire year and is there ready to answer questions and furnish advice.

The use of the high school instructor for this extension work will help out a number of counties who are in want of county agents, but are not at the present time able to raise the $1,200 or $2,000 necessary to keep a man in the field. Eight of the Western Michigan high schools now have special teachers in agriculture and these teachers can devote their summer vacation to demonstration work upon the nearby farms and in the orchards, with profit to the farmers and to the educational system. The teacher will carry his book knowledge to the farmer, and in return get practical knowledge, which, after the vacation is over, he will carry back to his classes.

It is more than likely that in some of the counties where the school boards are short on funds, that the supervisors will provide the money necessary for salary and expenses for agricultural teachers for the vacation periods. It is a positive certainty that in the introduction of intensive methods, more and better supervision is going to be required than it is possible for the agricultural college field men to give under present conditions. The plan adopted by the local board seems to be the most practical way for meeting present needs.

The citizens of that city are lending their assistance in the effort to culture a desire for gardening among the children, and at the same time to make that city one of the most beautiful in the northwestern part of the state.

MRS. NOWLAND DEAD

Passed Away April 1 at Her Home on Ferry Avenue—Funeral Friday.

Mrs. Anna Nowland died at her home on Ferry avenue, Wednesday, April 1, of erysipelas. She was born August 3, 1871, and had lived in this county practically all her life.

She was united in marriage to Hamilton Howland 23 years ago. To this union four children were given. The three that survive are Miss Lela and Miss Ida of this city and Mrs. Rose Dennison of Traverse City. Mr. Nowland died three years ago. An aged father and mother and one brother and two sisters also survive her.

Mrs. Nowland was a member of the Maccabees and attended the Methodist church. She was a loving mother, a good neighbor and a true friend, and will be mourned and missed by many. Funeral services were held from the house at two o'clock Friday afternoon, Rev. Quinton Walker, officiating.

Historical Society.

The Charlevoix Historical Society will meet Friday evening, April 10, with Dr. and Mrs. Frank Wilkinson.

The following is the program: Music. Business. Pleasure. An evening of old fashioned entertainment.

Easter Dinner.

A special Easter dinner will be served at the Hotel Elaton, Sunday, April 12, from 1:00 to 2:30 p. m. at 50c. per plate.—Adv. 141f.

MICHIGAN WOMAN'S STOMACH ILLS ENDED BY A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Mrs. Beamer of Flint Is Delivered From Headaches by Just a Few Doses.

Mrs. Guy A. Beamer of 1307 North street, Flint, Mich., was for a long time a victim of stomach and digestive troubles. One of the serious effects was in bad headaches, which attacked her almost daily. She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy, then she wrote: "I thank you very much for what your medicine has done for me. I never saw anything work such wonders as just the three bottles have. There was never a day in my life that I did not have my head tied with a cloth and I have not had a headache since. I had been doctor-ed by specialists, too, and received very little benefit." Just such stories are told by thousands who have used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It is known all over the United States. It clears the digestive tract of mucus, acid secretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings quick relief to sufferers with stomach ailments, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved them their lives. Because of its wonderful success there are many imitations, so be cautious. Be sure it's Mayr's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing among people they know about or send to Geo. H. Mayr's Mfg. Chemist, 134-150 Whiting st., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you of its wonderful effects. Keeping a Dog.
A dog is a fine thing about the house if you are afraid of burglars and don't care anything about the neighbors. But let a vicious dog, sleeping on the porch, scratch his neck under his metal collar and the night is disturbed by a sound that is a cross between an old fashioned clock running down and an iron rake brushing up a cement walk. The house vibrates as from a heavy train passing. Then the dog arises, turns twice and drops to the floor with a third that the girl moving a hundredweight of sugar about the kitchen. Housebreakers within 100 feet of the noise immediately give up any attempt on the place.—Minneapolis Journal.

A Very Old Cranium.

It has recently been alleged that the college does not adequately fit the young man for business life. It is an old complaint. Back in the middle of the seventeenth century Samuel Pepys, whose humorous diary is mighty good reading, was appointed secretary of the naval board, which was really secretary of the navy. Pepys was a Cambridge man, but he had to learn the multiplication table after he entered the public service. And he proved a right competent civil administrator, after all. Kingston City Star.

Old London Bridge.

BIBLE STUDY ON

"JESUS HIMSELF DREW NEAR."
Luka 24:13-35—April 12.

TODAY we study one of Jesus' most striking manifestations to His disciples after His resurrection. Early that morning He had appeared to the women who came to anoint His body. They had communicated the news to St. Peter and St. John, who hastened to the sepulcher, but found it empty. The disciples were perplexed. Although Jesus had told them that He would be crucified and would rise from the dead on the third day, they had not comprehended the teaching.

That afternoon, as two of the company were walking home, discussing their disappointment, Jesus overtook them. They knew Him not, because of His resurrection change. St. Peter tells us that He was "put to death in flesh, but quickened in spirit." This we understand in the light of St. Paul's explanation of the Church's resurrection: "Sown in weakness, raised in power; sown in dishonor, raised in glory; sown an animal body, raised a spirit body."—1 Corinthians 15:42-44.

The same thought is impressed again by the Apostle's statement: "We shall all be changed, in a moment, in the twinkling of an eye"; for "flesh and blood cannot inherit the Kingdom of God." The change which the Church is to experience is the same which Jesus experienced when He was raised from the dead, a life-giving Spirit—no longer a Man.

Our Lord's title, "Son of Man," still belongs to Him, as does the title, "the Logos." When the Logos was made flesh, the identity was preserved; and likewise when Jesus became a spirit being again. Respecting our Lord's human experiences we read: "A body hast Thou prepared Me"—for the suffering of death. (Hebrews 10:10.) When He had accomplished that purpose, He no longer had need of human nature; but, as He had foretold, He ascended to where He was before—to the spirit nature and, later on, to Heaven itself.

To assume that Jesus is a fleshly being in Heaven, bearing wounds and scars to all eternity, is to imply that the Father never really exalted Him to the glory which He had before the world was (John 17:5), and is impossible. The Scriptures plainly show that the Father highly exalted our Redeemer "far above angels, principalities and powers."

"Jesus Showed Himself."
St. Luke declares that Jesus showed Himself alive after His resurrection (Acts 1:3). In every way He manifested the fact that a great change had taken place with Him. He appeared and showed Himself not only in different bodies, unlike each other, but also in different clothing. When He suddenly disappeared, the clothing disappeared also.

The stranger who overtook the two disciples en route to Emmaus inquired, "Why so sad?" Astonished that He did not know, they explained that the chief priests and rulers had delivered up and crucified Jesus, a prophet mighty before God and the people. Their hope that He was Messiah had been crushed. Then they told the events of that very morning—that some women of their company had found His tomb empty and had seen angels, who said that He was alive.

This gave Jesus opportunity to explain quietly that their experiences were part of the Divine Plan; that it was necessary that Messiah should thus suffer, in order to become King of Glory and bless mankind. He pointed out from Scripture what God had foretold respecting Messiah's experiences. He probably showed that when Isaac was offered up by Abraham, he foreshadowed Jesus' death and resurrection; that the sullen rock represented the crucifixion; and that the passover lamb typified Jesus, "the Lamb of God, which taketh away the sin of the world." No wonder their hearts burned within them!

"They Knew Him—He Vanished."
When the travelers arrived in Emmaus, something in their guest's manner of setting the blessing at supper reminded them of Jesus. Their eyes of understanding began to open. Then, having fulfilled the purpose of His manifestation, Jesus vanished—clothes and all.

Unable to sleep, the disciples returned to Jerusalem, and there learned that Jesus had manifested Himself to Peter. Then they told their experiences; and faith, hope and joy began to grow in all their hearts.

During the forty days following our Lord's resurrection, He only twice appeared in a form similar to that which they had seen, bearing the marks of crucifixion. On both occasions He appeared and vanished while the doors were shut.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running sound of imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.
We will give One hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

HOW TO MAKE SOAP CURE ALL FOR PLANTS.

To keep plants that can be grown indoors in fine condition share a pound of a good white soap very finely into a gallon of boiling water. When dissolved add twenty-four gallons of cold water and use without delay. If a small quantity is wanted dissolve one-sixth of a small cake of soap in a pint of boiling water and add a gallon and a half of cold water.

Apply to rose plants, carnations, violet leaves and the like. Half an hour after applying rinse off the solution with soft, clear water.

For begonia, fuchsias, ferns and all tender and bulbous plants add a third more water to the solution so that it will be about three-fourths as strong as the one mentioned above and again, after half an hour, rinse off with clear, soft water. Be careful always to reach the under as well as the upper side of the leaves.

HALLOWEEN PARTY.

How to Have Jolly Good Fun on Oct. 31.

This jolly Halloween party given last year may offer suggestions to the hostesses of 1913. On the invitations to the party were inscribed the following rhyme done in fantastic lettering:

When you arrive Tuesday night,
Oh, be prepared to tell
The worst adventure, fearful fright,
That ever you told!

The rooms were gorgeously with autumn leaves, golden yellow pumpkin jack-o'-lanterns and fantastic black and white candle shades. An upstairs room which was occupied had been turned into a "chamber of horrors." The walls were hung with sheets, then witches, spiders, bats, owls and cats had been cut from black paper, almost life sized, and pasted on them; the lights were shaded with a green paper that gave a most ghastly glow. In this weird place the guests were assembled to relate their "horror" tales. A black cat and her family of jet black kittens played about, adding interest to the scene.

As the people entered this sparsely placed a ghostly figure held out its hand in greeting. A white kid glove had been stuffed with fine sawdust and laid on ice for hours, a round stick was fastened to it, which the ghost held concealed under the flowing sleeve draperies. This is an old trick, but one that always works well.

When the stories were about finished a strange rattle was heard at the door and two little scarlet clad figures rushed into the room and chased everybody down to the dining room. The table was lovely with a huge pumpkin each drawn by twelve chocolate mice, which cavorted about the table driven by a black cat coachman. The room was filled with grapes and yellow chrysanthemums. At each place there was an individual lantern made from an orange. The bonbon-holders were yellow ice cups attached to pumpkin wheels drawn by black cats. The hostess said she had made these from crepe paper, cutting out the figures, mounting them on cardboard, then touching them up a bit with black and gold paint. These wonderful crepe papers are a great help to hostesses, as the napkins come decorated for nearly every special day in the calendar and they are very decorative.

A simple but "Halloweeny" menu was served, consisting of coffee, cream, a la Newburg in the chafin dishes, cheese, olives, cider, popcorn, salad (Waldorf) in red hollowed out apples, chocolate cake and a huge cake containing the usual mystic symbols, namely, a ring, riddle, coin and "but not"!

On a stand by the fireplace there was a huge bowl filled with chestnuts, raisins and apples for roasting. It was not jolly and informal, as Halloween parties should be.

How to Lessen Tire Trouble.
One-half the enjoyment of touring is immunity from the troubles. The average driver can enjoy this immunity by exercising care in making his preparations. Blowouts, punctures and other tire troubles are holdups that he looks forward to with no degree of enjoyment, whereas a little preparation in the way of accessories for temporary repairs obviates unnecessary delay.

In the first place, he should be sure that his casings and tubes are in good condition and that he has an extra supply of both. Then, with a good air pump, a tire gauge to test the air pressure in his tires and a supply of tire repair devices, he can go on his way confident that he has taken every precaution to sidestep tire troubles. He will find that this preparedness for the worst will be more enjoyable both for him and his guests.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal
BY
REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911 BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt, Jefferson Locke imprisons himself into the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it's a joke, drags Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Jolson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intrigued to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Rannels, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taboga, near Panama. Cortlandt is delayed and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming, Spanish girl.

The girl tells him her name is "Chiquita." He learns later that this means only "little one." Kirk begins his work. Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Wellart) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries in vain in Panama to learn something of Chiquita and meets Alfarez again.

Kirk wins the capital prize, $50,000, in the lottery. He and Rannels make plans for advancement. The Cortlandts, having turned from the older Alfarez, intend to make Senor Garavel, a banker, president of Panama.

Alfarez's son, Kirk's foe, is engaged to Gertrude, Garavel's daughter. She is Kirk's "Chiquita." He meets her again at the opera through Mrs. Cortlandt's aid. Kirk makes plans to Chiquita. Edith Cortlandt, infatuated with Kirk, goes riding with him frequently.

She avows her love for him. Their ride and talk are interrupted by her husband. Kirk asks Garavel for his daughter's hand. The banker wishes her to marry Alfarez to advance his own ambitions. Clifford, a man from the States, asks Rannels about Kirk.

CHAPTER XVIII.

A Challenge and a Confession.
It was very trying to be the target of so many glances. Instead of receiving their conversation the entire assemblage of Garavel waited calmly for their caller to begin, and he realized in a minute that he was expected to make conversation. He cast about wildly for a topic.

His host helped him to get started, and he did fairly well until one of the Misses Garavel began to translate his remarks to the old lady and the ferocious countess from Guatemala. As their replies were not rendered into English, he was left stranded. He knew that his whole salvation lay in properly impressing his auditors, so he began again and thundered through a painful monologue.

The night suddenly turned off sweetly, hot, perspiration began to trickle down his brow, his collar became a tourniquet, and he cast appealing glances at the stout figure behind him. He was sure that the stout old lady in the black harness. The look of mingled pity and understanding she gave him somewhat revived his faltering spirit, and he determined to stick it out until the family were ready to retire and allow him a word with her alone. But like hope, gradually it faded upon him that they had no such intention.

At last his collar had given up the struggle and with a happy down to rest the whole experience was hideous, yet he understood quite well that these people were not making sport of him. All this was only a part of their foreign customs. They were gentlefolk reared to a different code from his—that was all—and since he had elected to come among them he could only suffer and be strong.

What he over talked about during that evening he never quite remembered. When it came time to leave he expected at least to be allowed a farewell word or two with Gertrude, but instead he was bowed out as cordially as he had been bowed in and, finding himself at last in the open, sighed with relief. He felt like a probed prisoner, but he thought of the girl's glance of sympathy and was instantly consoled. He crossed slowly to the plaza, pausing a moment for a good night look at the house, then, as he turned, he caught a glimpse of a figure sinking into the shadows of the side street and smiled indulgently. Evidently Allan had been unable to resist the temptation to follow him. But when he had reached his quarters he was surprised to find the boy there ahead of him.

"How did you beat me home?" he inquired.

"I have been waiting impatiently ever since you went out. To be sure, I have had one little dream."

"Didn't you follow me to the Garavel's?"

"Oh, boss! Never would I do such." Seeing that the negro was honest, Kirk decided that somebody had been spying upon him, but the matter was of so little consequence that he dismissed it from his mind.

Although Rannels had spoken with confidence of the coming shakeup in the railroad organization, it was not without a certain surprise that he awoke one morning to find himself actively in charge of the entire system. He lost no time in sending for Kirk, who took the news of their joint advancement with characteristic equanimity.

"Now, there is nothing clinged yet, understand," the acting superintendent cautioned him. "We're all on probation, but if we make good I think we'll stick."

"I'll do my best to fill your shoes." "And I have the inside track on Blakeley, in spite of Colonel Jolson, so I'm not alarmed. The break came sooner than I expected, and now that we are in control it's the chance of our lifetimes."

Kirk nodded. "You're entitled to all you get, but I've never quite understood how I managed to forge ahead so fast. I've been mighty lucky."

"You don't really call it luck, do you?" Rannels looked at him curiously.

"I'm not conceited enough to think I'm a downright genius."

"Why, the Cortlandts engineered everything. It was they who arranged your promotion to the office in the first place, and they're behind this last affair. They have stood back of you at every step and, incidentally, back of me and the other boys."

"When you say 'they' you of course mean 'she.'"

"Of course. One has to recognize him, though, as the head of the family. And he really did have a part in it too. At least if he had been against us we never would have won."

"I'd like to show the Cortlandts that we appreciate what they've done, but we can't openly thank her without humiliating him. I'd like to give him something."

"Suppose we give him a quiet little supper some night and tell him frankly how grateful we are. He's the sort to appreciate a thing like that, and it would be a delicate way of thanking his wife too."

"Good! I'll speak to the other fellows, and now the acting master of transportation is going to shake with the new acting superintendent and wish him every success."

Rannels grasped the outstretched hand.

"Say, Anthony," he said, "we're young and we have a start. I have what you lack, and you have what I lack. If we stick together, we'll own a railroad some day. Is it a go?"

"You bet!"

With a warm glow in his breast the new master of transportation plunged into his duties. He really was making a success, it seemed, although it was a bit disappointing to learn that he owed so much of it to Edith Cortlandt. But this last advancement, too, was very timely, for it would surely have its effect upon Andres Garavel.

But his new work brought new troubles and worries. He began to sleep shorter hours, he concentrated with every atom of determination in him, he drove himself with an iron hand. He attacked his task from every angle, and with his life constitution and unbounded youthful energy he covered an amazing quantity of work. He covered it so well, moreover, that Rannels complimented him.

This stress of labor served one purpose for which he was very grateful: it separated him from Edith Cortlandt and took his mind from that occurrence in the jungle.

Soon after his promotion he received from Andres Garavel a warmly worded note of congratulation, and some few days later an invitation to dine, which he accepted eagerly.

The dinner proved to be another disappointing ordeal, for again he was allowed no opportunity of speaking with Gertrude and had to content himself with watching his eyes upon her. But, although the family were present in 1910, as on the former occasion, they went to a surprising degree, and he found them truly gracious and delightful.

Later in the evening he found himself alone with Chiquita and the old Spanish lady, and knowing that the latter could not understand a word of his tongue, he addressed himself to the girl with some degree of naturalness. "I was sorry for you the last time, senior," she said, in reply to his half-humorous complaint, "and yet it was funny; you were so frightened."

"It was my first memorial service. I thought I was going to see you alone." "Oh, that is never allowed."

"Never? How am I going to ask you to marry me?"

Miss Garavel hid her flushing face behind her fan. "Indeed! You seem capable of asking that absurd question under any circumstances."

"I wish you would straighten me out on some of your customs."

She gave him an odd look, smiling timidly.

"As for tonight, do you attribute any meaning to my father's request that you dine with us?"

"Of course. It means I wasn't black-balled at the first meeting, I suppose."

She blushed delightfully again. "Since you are so ignorant of our ways you should inquire at your earliest convenience. I would advise you, perhaps, to learn Spanish."

"Will you teach me? I'll come every evening."

She did not answer, for the old lady began to show curiosity, and a conversation in Spanish ensued which Kirk could not follow. He departed with a feeling of exaltation. Beyond doubt his suit was progressing—slowly, perhaps, but still progressing.

His understanding of Spanish customs received a considerable enlargement on the following day, when he met Ramon Alfarez outside the railroad office. Ramon had evidently waited purposely for him, and now began to voice a protest in the greatest excitement.

"You have insult me," he cried furiously, "and now you have the insolence to interfere in my affairs."

He paused dramatically. "Make it your self ready to fight on tomorrow."

"What's the use of putting it off? I couldn't make your weight in that time. I'll do it now, if you say."

"No, no! Understand. We shall fight like gentlemen. I shall keep you with any weapon you prefer."

"By Jove!" Kirk exclaimed in amazement. "This is a challenge. You want to fight a duel! Why, this reads like a book!"

He began to laugh, at which Ramon became white and calm. "Listen," Kirk went on. "I'll tell you what we'll do; we'll fight with fire hose again. I suppose you want satisfaction for that ducking."

"I prefer to shoot you, senior," the other declared quietly. "Those marriages shall never occur until first I walk upon your dead body. As matter of honor I offer you this opportunity before it is too late. All Panama is speaking of those engagements to Senorita Garavel. Come, then, must I insult you further?"

CHAPTER XIX.

"What About Me?"

Kirk replied dryly, looking the Spaniard over with cold blue eyes. "No! I think you've gone about far enough."

"You refuse?" exclaimed Ramon triumphantly.

"Look here!" said Kirk. "I've had enough of this. He advanced threateningly, and the Spaniard nervously gave way. "I don't fight duels. It's against the law. In my country it's a crime to kill a man in cold blood, and we don't do a fellow up and beat him when he's helpless and then offer him the honorable satisfaction of a duel. They're not wearing duels this season."

"His hands clenched involuntarily. "I don't want to hurt you, Alfarez, but I may not be able to help it if you don't keep out of my way."

He left the fiery little Panamanian still scowling and muttering threats and went his way, wondering vaguely how his attentions to Chiquita had become so quickly known. He was informed later in the afternoon.

As he left the office for the day he was handed a note from Mrs. Cortlandt requesting him to call at once.

and, summoning a coach, he was driven directly to his house. Unlike the Garavel home, the house which the Cortlandts had leased was set upon the water front, its rear balcony overlooking the sea where it lapped the foundation of the city wall.

Edith kept him waiting a moment before she descended, dressed for her afternoon ride.

"You got my note?"

"Yes, and I came straight from the office."

"I suppose you know what it is about and are wondering how I heard the news?"

"What news?"

"Your engagement." She laughed with an amusement that did not ring quite true.

"You're the second one to speak about that. I'm not engaged."

"Of course not. Don't think for a moment I believed it. I was calling on some Spanish people this afternoon and heard the report. I admit it was a shock. When I learned the details I knew at once you ought to be told before it developed into something embarrassing. Come into the other room; there is a breeze from the water."

She led him into the parlor, from which the open windows, shielded now by drawn shutters, gave access to the rear porch with its chairs and hammock.

really don't deserve to be helped. Why you have avoided me for weeks."

"The new arrangement has swamped us with work. I have had no time to go out."

"Indeed! You had time to run after the first pretty Spanish face you saw."

"You mean Miss Garvel?"

"Yes. Didn't you realize what you were doing?"

"I realized what I was trying to do. But I could understand better what you are talking about if I knew just what the difficulty is."

"Why, this silly engagement of yours. Don't pretend to be so stupid."

"Hamon Alfaraz heard that some report and very courteously invited me to wait a few minutes while he killed me. It's tremendously flattering to be linked up with Miss Garvel, of course, but I haven't asked her to marry me."

"But you've seen her. You have called at her house."

"Sure! Twice, at the invitation of the old gentleman. All the little Garvels were lined up like mourners."

"And you dined there last night. Is that all you have seen of her?"

"No. I've seen her at Las Savanas. That's why I went hunting so often."

"At this confession, which Kirk delivered with sheepish reluctance, Mrs. Cortlandt drew herself up with an expression of anger."

"Then this has been going on for some time," she cried. "Why, Kirk, you never told me."

"Why should I?"

"She flushed at this unconscious brutality, but after a moment ran on bravely. "But why did you let it go so far? Why did you let them commit you?"

"Am I committed?"

"Her look was half offended, half incredulous. "Are you trying to be disagreeable, or is it possible you don't know the meaning of those invitations to call and to dine with the family, and all that? Why, they expect you to marry her. It is all settled now, according to the Spanish custom. The whole town is talking about it."

"I hope you're not joking," said Kirk. "Joke! I'm knocked clear off my pins. A tremendous wave of excitement surged over him. "So that's what Alfaraz meant. That's what she meant last night when she told me to look up—"

"He broke off suddenly, for Edith's face had gone chalk white."

"What, Kirk, what about me?" she asked in a strained voice.

"There was deathlike silence in the room."

"You can't love her," said the woman. "Why, she's only a child, and she's Spanish."

"They stood motionless, facing each other. At last Kirk said gravely and deliberately:

"Yes, I love her better than anything in the world, and I want to marry her. I could give up my country, my dad—anything for her."

"Pressing her gloved fingers to her temples, she turned her head blindly from side to side, whispering as if to herself."

"What will come of me?"

"Don't!" he cried in a panic and cast a hurried look over his shoulders. "You'll be overheard. Where's Cortlandt?"

"At his club, I suppose. I don't know—I don't care. You've been dishonest with me, Kirk."

"Don't act this way," he ordered roughly. "I'm terribly fond of you, but I never knew."

"You must have known."

"I knew nothing. I chose not to think. What I saw I forgot. I supposed you merely liked me as I liked you."

"You say you didn't know. Then what about that afternoon in the jungle? Oh, you're not blind. You must have seen a thousand times. Every hour we've been alone together. I've told you, and you let me go on believing you cared. I have no pride. I am not ashamed. It's too late for shame now. Why, even my husband knows."

"With an exclamation he seized her by the arm. "You don't mean that!" he cried fiercely. But she wrenched herself away."

"Why do you think I made a man of you? Why did I force you up and over the heads of others? Why are you in line for the best position on the railroad? Did you think you had made good by your own efforts?" She laughed harshly. "I took Hume and Wade and Kline and the others that you liked and forced them up with you, so you'd have an organization that couldn't be pulled down."

"I did more. I broke with Alfaraz because of what his son did to you. I juggled the politics of this country, I threw him over, and took Garvel—"

Garvel! My God, what a monkey! But I won't let you—I won't let that girl spoil my work. I fostered this quarrel between you and the superintendent, and I've used Hume to break trail for you. Why? Ask yourself why? Oh, Kirk, she cried, "you mustn't marry that girl! I'll make you a great man!"

"You seem to forget Cortlandt," he said dully.

"She gave a scornful laugh. "You needn't bring Stephen in. He doesn't count. I doubt if he'd even care."

"I'm not going to listen to you," he cried. "I suppose I've been a fool, but this must end right here."

"You can't marry that girl," she reiterated, hysterically. She was half sobbing again, but not with the weakness of a woman; her grief was more like that of a despairing man.

"For heaven's sake, pull yourself together," said Kirk. "You have aerants. I—I don't know what to say. I want to get out. I want to think it over. I'm dreadfully sorry. That's all I can seem to think about now."

He turned and went blindly to the door, leaving her without a look behind.

When he had gone she drew off her riding gloves, removed her hat and dropped them both upon the nearest chair, then crept wearily up the stairs to her room.

A moment later the latticed wooden blinds at the end of the parlor swung open, and through the front window stepped Stephen Cortlandt. Behind him was a hunchbacked man in the coolest part of the balcony. The pupils of his eyes, ordinarily so dead and expressionless, were distended like those of a man under the influence of a drug or suffering from a violent headache. He listened attentively for an instant, his head on one side, then, hearing footsteps approaching from the rear of the house, he strode into the hall.

A maid appeared with a tray, a glass and a bottle. "I could not find the medicine," she said, "but I brought you some salicylate. It will deaden the pain, sir."

He thanked her and with shaking fingers poured the glass full, then drank it off like so much water.

"You're not going out again in the heat, sir?"

"Yes. Tell Mrs. Cortlandt that I am dining at the University club."

Kirk never passed a more unpleasant night than the one which followed. In the morning he went straight to Hume's with the statement that he could take no part in the little testimonial they had intended to give Cortlandt.

"But it's too late now to back out. I saw him at the University club last evening and fixed the date for Saturday night."

"Did you tell him I was in the affair?"

"Certainly. I said it was your idea. It affected him deeply too. I never saw a chap so moved over a little thing."

Kirk thought quickly. Perhaps Edith had spoken rashly in her excitement and her husband did not know her feelings after all. Perhaps he only suspected. In that case it would never do to withdraw. It would seem like a confession of guilt.

"If he has accepted that ends it. I suppose," he said finally.

"What has happened?" Hume was watching him sharply.

"Nothing. I merely wish I hadn't entered into the arrangement, that's all. I've ordered a watch for him, and it's being engraved. I wanted to give him something to show my own personal gratitude for what he and his wife have done for me. Lord! It took a month's salary. I know it's a pay present, but there's nothing decent in these shops."

"Look here! I've wanted to say something to you for some time, though it's damned hard to speak of such things. Steve Cortlandt has put us where we are. You understand, when I speak of him I include his wife too. Well, I like him, Kirk, and I'd hate to see him made unhappy. If a chap loves a married woman he ought to be man enough to forget it. Rotten way to express myself, of course."

"Kirk looked the speaker squarely in the eyes as he answered: "I haven't the least interest in my married man's affairs, never have had, in fact. I'm in love with Gertrude Garvel, and I'm engaged to marry her."

"The devil!"

"It's a fact. I didn't know until last night that I'd been accepted."

"Then just forget what I said. I was going north on a south bound track—I can heed of orders. I really do congratulate you, old man. Miss Garvel is—well, I won't try to do her justice—I had no idea. Please pardon me."

"Certainly. Now that it's settled I'm not going to let any grass grow under my feet."

"Why, say! Garvel is to be the next president! Joke, you're lucky! Cortlandt told me last night that the old fellow's candidacy was to be announced Saturday night at the big ball. That's how he came to accept our invitation. He said his work would be over by then, and he'd be glad to join us after the dance. Well, well! Your future wife and father-in-law are to be his guests that night. I suppose you know."

"Then they have pitched up a trace with Alfaraz? I'm glad to hear that."

"It's all settled, I believe. This dance is a big special event. The American minister and the various diplomatic gangs will be there, besides the prominent Spanish people. It's precisely the moment to launch the Garvel boom and Cortlandt intends to do it. After it's over our little crowd will have supper and thank him for what he has done for us. Your promotion, due just to time, didn't it? Talk about luck! We ought to hear from Washington before Saturday and know that our jobs are clinched. This uncertainty is terrible for me. You know, I have a wife and kid, and it means a lot. When you give Cortlandt that watch you'll have to present him with a loving cup from the rest of us. I think it's coming to him, don't you?"

"I'd rather you presented it."

"Not much! I can run trains, but I can't engineer social functions. You'll have to be spokesman."

CHAPTER XX.

A Plot and a Sacrifice.

THE night had been as hard for Edith Cortlandt as it had been for Kirk, but during its sleepless hours she had reached a determination. She was not naturally revengeful, but it was characteristic of her that she could not endure failure. Action, not words or tears, was the natural outlet of her feelings. There was just one possible way of winning Kirk back, and if instead it failed him she would be only undoing what she had mistakenly done. As soon after breakfast as she knew definitely that her husband had gone out she telephoned to General Alfaraz, making an appointment to call on him at 11. She knew the empty old Spaniard would be awaiting her with eagerness.

Her interview with him was short, however, and when she emerged from his house she ordered the coachman to drive directly to the Garvel bank.

This time she stayed longer, closeted with the proprietor. What she told him threw him into something like a panic. It seemed that Anibal Alfaraz was by no means so well reconciled to the death of his political hopes as had been supposed. On the contrary, in spite of all that had been done to prevent it, he had been working secretly and had perfected the preliminaries of a coup which he intended to spring at the eleventh hour. Through Hume he had brought about an alliance with the reigning Gallos, and intended to make the bitterest possible fight against Garvel. Such joining of forces meant serious trouble, and until the banker's position was materially strengthened it would be most unwise to announce his candidacy as had been planned. She did not go into minute details. There was no need, for the banker's fears took fire at the mere fact that Alfaraz had revolted. He was dumfounded, appalled.

"Hume is partly to blame. He is just as proud as you or as his father," said Mrs. Cortlandt. "When he heard of your daughter's engagement to our friend Anthony?"

"Ah, now I see it all!" His face darkened. "So this is my reward for heeding your advice in regard to Gertrude. She should have wed Hume, as was intended, then I would have had a lever with which to lift his father from my path. Very well, then, there is no engagement with this Anthony. It may not be too late even yet to capture Hume."

"The city is already talking about Gertrude and Kirk."

"No word has been spoken, no promise given. There is not even an understanding. Do you suppose I would allow my great ambition to be thwarted by the whim of a girl, to be upset by a stranger's smile? Bah! At their age I loved a dozen. I could not survive without them." He snapped his fingers. "Come, we will see my friend Anibal at once."

But Mrs. Cortlandt checked him, saying quietly:

"That is all right as far as it goes, but you forget the other young man."

"Who? How so? Gertrude will not marry his Anthony?"

"Perhaps she loves him."

"Love is a fancy, a something seen through a distant haze, an illusion which vanishes with the sun. In a month, in a year, she will have forgotten; but with me it is different. This is my life's climax; there will be no other."

"But how will you handle Anthony?"

"Garvel looked at her blankly. "He is in my way. He is ended! Is not that all?"

"I am glad you are practical; so many of my Latin-Americans are absurdly romantic."

"And why should I not be practical? I am a business man. I love but two things, Madame—no, three, my daughter, my success and my country. By this course I will serve all three."

"Since you take this view of it, I am sure that with Hume's help we can persuade Don Anibal from his course."

"The General is sensible and doesn't want a fight any more than you do. If your daughter will consent, I am sure you will co-operate with us. Sincerely and respectfully your friend, ANDRES GARVEL."

A sense of betrayal crept over him as he read what the letter signified, beyond the fact that Mr. Garvel had changed his mind, he could not make out, and he resolved to go at once and demand an explanation. But at the bank he was told that the proprietor had gone home, and he drove to the house only to learn that Señor Garvel and his daughter had left for Las Savanas not half an hour before. So back through the city he urged his driver, across the bridge and out along the country road.

Darkness had settled when he returned, raging at the trickery that had been practiced upon him. If they thought to gain their point by sending him on wild goose chases like this they were greatly mistaken. He proposed to leave Chiliquilla now, if he had to burst his way to her through barred doors. He had yielded to their left handed customs out of courtesy. It was time now to show his strength.

What folly he might have committed it is hard to tell, but he was prevented from putting any extravagant plan into operation by a message from the girl herself.

As he dismissed his coachman and turned toward his quarters Stephanie came to him out of the shadows.

"Chiquita is at the house. She wants to see you."

"Of course she does. I knew this wasn't any of her doing. I've been hunting everywhere for her."

"At 9 o'clock she will be in the Plaza. You know the dark place across from the church? If we do not come wait."

Long before the appointed time Kirk was at the place of meeting, but scarcely had the city clocks rung out 9 when he saw two women emerge from the dark side street next the Garvel mansion and come swiftly toward him.

He refrained from rushing out to meet them, but when they were close to his place of concealment he stepped forward, with Chiquita's name upon his lips and his arms outstretched. She drew away.

"No, no, señor," she cried. "I sent for you because there was no other way, that is all. My father would not let you come to the house. You will not think me bold?"

"Of course not."

"I could not let you go until you knew the truth. You do not believe it was my fault?"

"I don't know what to believe, because I don't know what has happened. All I know is that I got a note from your father. But no matter what it is I'll never give you up," he declared stubbornly.

"Ah, I feared you would say those very words, but you must do so, just the same. It will be hard for us both, I know, but—"

"She choked and shook her head as the words refused to come. "Tell me first why I must give you up?"

"Because in spite of all I am to marry Hume," Gertrude said wretchedly. "Who said so?"

"My father. He has forbidden me to think of you and ordered that I marry Hume. Sick or well, living or dead, I must marry him."

"I'm hanged if you do!"

"It is those miserable politics again. If I do not obey, my father cannot be president, do you see? Señor Alfaraz is terribly angry that I refused to marry his son, to whom since I was a little child I have been engaged. Hume also is furious; he threatened to kill himself. So it comes to this. If I will not bind myself to the agreement, Señor Alfaraz will contest the election. I do not know how you say those things, but my father will be defeated. Perhaps he will be humiliated."

"I won't stand for it. They're making you a sacrifice, that's all. What kind of a father is it who would sell his daughter?"

"No, no! You do not understand. He is proud; he cannot accept defeat; he would rather give his life than be humiliated. Furthermore, he wishes me to marry Hume, and so that ends it." Her lips were trembling as she peered up at him to see if he really understood.

"Let them rave, dear. What does it matter who is president? What does anything matter to you and me?"

"He says I am too young to know my own mind, and—perhaps that is true, Señor Antonio; perhaps I shall soon forget you and learn to love Hume as he loves me. I do not know."

In spite of the pathetic quaver in her voice, Kirk cried with jealous bitterness:

"You don't seem to object very strongly; you seem to care about so much for Alfaraz as you do for me. Is that it?"

"Yes, señor," she said bravely.

"You are lying!" declared Stephanie. The girl burst into a perfect torrent of weeping that shamed him. Then, she said: "Kiss me once so that I may never forget."

See I cannot. This is more to my father than his life. It is the same to all our family, and I must do my duty. I could not let you go away thinking this was my doing, so I sent for you. No, one must obey one's people, for they are wise and good. But one should be honest."

Without any invitation, she hung herself coquishly into his arms and lay there, trembling, palpitating like an imprisoned bird.

"Forgive me, dear," he exclaimed, softly. "I knew better all the time. You mustn't think of doing what they ask; I won't allow it." She looked up with eyes gleaming through her tears and said, brokenly:

"Señor, I love you truly. You see, I cannot lie."

Her breath intoxicated him, and he bent his head to kiss her, but Stephanie tore her roughly from his arms. The woman showed the strength of a man, and her culture-like face was working fiercely as she cried:

"No! She is mine! She is mine! She is a good girl."

"Oh, I am wicked," Gertrude said. "I love you, Kirk—yes, I love you very dearly, but my father—he refuses. I must obey—he has the right, and I must do as he wishes."

"Come with me now. We'll be married tonight," he urged, but she only clung to Stephanie more closely, as if to hold herself from falling.

"You are very sweet to me," she said, with piteous tenderness, "and I shall never forget the honor, but you checks, and she thrilled to his pleading as to some wondrous music, yet she was like adamant, and all his lover's desperation could not shake her. Seeing that his urging only made matters worse, he said, more gently:

"You are exalted now with the spirit of self sacrifice, but later you will see that I am right. I am not discouraged. A thousand things may happen. Who knows what tomorrow may bring? Let's wait and see if we can't find a way out. Now that I know you love me I have the courage to face anything, and I am going to win you, Chiquita. I have never lost in all my life, and I don't intend to begin now. I'll see your father in the morning, and I'll be here again tomorrow night."

But at this Gertrude cried out: "No, no! I cannot meet you again in this manner." And Stephanie nodded her agreement.

"Then I'll see you the next night—that is, Saturday. You are coming to the big ball at the Hotel with him and the Cortlandts. I must see you then, so make sure to be there, and meanwhile don't give up."

"Oh, there is no hope."

"There is always hope. I'll think of something."

"We must go," said the Barbudian woman warningly.

"Yes, yes! Is it of no avail to resist," came the girl's choking voice. She stretched out her little hand, and then, looking up at him, said uncertainly, "I—may never speak with you again alone, señor, and I must pray to—cease loving you; but will you—kiss me once, so that I may never forget?"

He breathed a tender exclamation and took her gently to his breast, while the aggress stood by scowling and muttering. Even when she and Stephanie had melted into the shadows she stood motionless under the spell of that caress. Its ecstasy still suffused him. Then he turned and made his way up the street, but he went slowly, unseeing, as if he had beheld a vision.

PUT THE POOREST CORN IN THE SILO

One of the greatest advantages of the silo is its ability to make a very profitable feed out of a crop that would not amount to much if fed in the usual ways, says the Iowa Homestead. For this reason farmers are falling into the habit of putting their poorest crop in the silo. Where a farmer has corn that yields from thirty-five to fifty bushels to the acre and another field that for some reason yields but fifteen to twenty-five bushels, he has found, if he has had a silo on his farm for any length of time, that it is more profitable to put the poorest corn in the silo and break out the rest for the crib.
This does not mean that silage made from the poorer corn is just as good as the silage would have been from the better corn, but it does mean that the better corn does not make silage enough better to pay for using the best yielding corn of the farm for filling the silo.

Even though the grain yield of a corn crop runs only from fifteen to twenty-five bushels to the acre, or even as low as ten to twelve bushels,

Maggie Doon II., a Jersey cow owned by the Tennessee experiment station, bids fair to make a record that will rank among the best for the breed. Last year as a heifer
she produced 6,728 pounds of milk
containing 47.6 pounds of butter.
When she freshened this year she was put on test during the first sixty-nine days of this test. Maggie Doon II. produced nearly 2,500 pounds of milk containing 109 pounds of butter. During one month milk production was 425 pounds of milk testing 6.31 per cent butter fat, equivalent to 32 pounds of 88 per cent butter. During one month
she produced 1,025 pounds of milk
containing 76.3 pounds of butter, an average of practically two and one-half pounds of butter per day.

there is still a great feeding value in the entire crop, putting fodder and grain together. If it is harvested at the time when the feeding value of both fodder and grain is the greatest.
Always, before the days of the silo, the problem was to keep the feeding value in the crop—in other words, to preserve it. When the fall and winter season is dry we have found that our shocked corn made much better feed.
This was because it was preserved better, the weather not diminishing the fodder as much as is usually the case.

Now, with the silo one is able to preserve all the feeding value that is in the crop at the time of harvesting, so with even a light grain yield there is still much value in the corn crop, probably more in a corn crop of light yield than in a crop of heavy yield than the difference in bushels to the acre would seem to indicate, a yield of twenty bushels to the acre, for instance, being worth more than half as much as a yield of forty bushels. This is because the feeding value of the fodder is very nearly the same in either case.
For this reason, and more particularly for stock not on full feed, silo owners are finding it the best practice to put their poorest corn in the silo.

MOVING THE BULL.

One of the best ways to handle an animal or to move him long distances is to place a heavy sack or covering of some kind over his head. When an animal is blinded it is an easier matter to lead him into a wagon or to lead him. It is not always easy to get an animal to walk into a wagon when he has an opportunity to see it, but by blinding him it is as a rule an easy matter to get him into it.—Howard's Dairyman.

SILO INSIDE OR OUTSIDE?

Some of the Advantages of Each Plan.
Place Near Barn Anyway.

Silos are sometimes put inside or outside on account of the following advantages:

First—Some men desire to build a square silo and find that they can do so by the use of the timbers of a joint or band in the barn to support the walls.

Second—A silo inside the barn should freeze less than one outside.

Third—A cheaply made silo may last longer if it is inside and not exposed to the weather.

Fourth—When the silo is placed in the center of the barn there is less distance to move the feed.

At the present time the majority of silos are being built outside the barn for:

First—The inside location is not an economical use of barn room. The man who is working his plant to its full capacity will need that space for storing materials which will not go into the silo.

Second—The average silo usually does not need the protection of an inside location.

Third—Often, the inside silo is un-handy to fill; while a silo on the outside may be reached easily.

Fourth.—The location keeps the odors from the barn. Nearly every outside silo has a door between it and the barn, and if this is closed one of the chief objections to the use of silage is removed.

The outside silo should not be over four feet from the barn and located so that the chute or communicating passageway leads into the feeding alley.
The silo should be so placed in respect to other buildings that there is room to run the endlogs, cutter and for teams to reach the cutter with their loads.

Last Season's Implements.

Farmers often complain that most of the profits from the wheat crop are eaten up by the purchase of new im-be wondered at, the owners being so careless with their implements. Even of the crops last season are still stand-

GOOD SEED IRISH POTATOES

Now is the Time of Year When the Farmer Should Get Them.

The American Potato Grower Pays But Little Attention to His Seed Potatoes—
How to Save Them.

This is the season of the year when the farmer should pay particular attention to seed potatoes, and the use of high-grade seed would increase the returns from the potato crop of the country by many millions of dollars. A conservative estimate of the increase that might be expected from the use of high-grade seed is certainly not less than 10 per cent. Such an increase based on the average production of the past five years would amount to over 34,000,000 bushels, having an approximate value of $21,000,000. Of the many causes which operate to produce a low average potato yield in this country, poor seed is an important one. The American potato grower pays too little attention to his seed potatoes.

The European growers, especially those of Great Britain and Germany, pay very strict attention to the quality and quantity of the seed they use.

By far the simplest and most promising means of developing high-grade seed potatoes is that of the tuber-unit and hill-selection methods. The former consists in selecting from the seed bin before planting time a considerable number of the most perfectly shaped tubers of from 6 to 8 ounces in weight. When planted these tubers are quartered, as dropped, into four or nearly equal parts as possible. This is done by splitting the bud-eye cluster in each direction from seed to stem end of the tuber. The four pieces of each tuber are dropped consecutively in the row, at a distance of from 10 to 12 inches apart in the furrow. All tubers showing discoloration of the flesh or other evidence of disease should be rejected.

At allowing an additional space between each set of four, the four plants from each tuber are definitely isolated from adjoining ones, and the grower can readily observe any variation in vigor and uniformity between the units planted. This method also enables him to detect any mixture that may occur in the variety.

At digging time the product of each unit is separately harvested and a further selection made from the marked units of all those which most nearly approach the size, shape and smoothness desired. The selected tubers should be numbered with both field and unit numbers and separately placed in small sacks. From each of the units retain 10 of the best tubers should be selected for the next season's planting. It is desirable to maintain the study of each selection on the tuber-unit basis the following season, because it permits a more accurate comparison of the behavior of each.

The hill-selection method consists in making the most promising plants during the growing season. At harvesting time save only those which give greatest promise. Keep the progeny of each hill separate, and take the same data as outlined by the tuber unit. Plan on the tuber-unit basis the following season. For sake of uniformity a definite number of tubers—five or more—should be planted from each hill selection. From this point on the methods given in the tuber-unit work should be followed.

The only requirements for the successful practice of the two methods of seed selection are a reasonable degree of painstaking effort on the part of the grower, some 12-inch garden labels, a small pair of binoculars, a sufficient number of unit-oblong sacks, and a safe place in which to store the selected tubers until required by the next season's planting. In addition to this the grower should have a breeding plot in which each season's selection can be developed up to the point of field-planting stock.

The selection of the breeding plot need not necessarily be divorced from the general field plant. In most cases it can be more conveniently handled if it is a part of the regular field. All that is required is to set aside as many rows as may be required to plant the selected tubers. These should be perfectly on one side of the field, so that they can be more readily observed. The planting furrows may be open and a fertilizer distributed with the potatoes by removing the dike, and setting the plow a trifle deeper. If a plow is used in covering, care should be exercised to avoid displacing the seed pieces.

PARENTS' MEETING

Next Session to Be Held in High School Assembly Room Wednesday, April 22.

The next regular meeting of the Parents' Association will be held in the high school assembly room Wednesday evening, April 22. The meeting will be in the form of a farewell reception to Superintendent I. M. DeVoe, who has resigned from the superintendency of the local schools, and will take a special college course next year.

A fine program has been prepared and it is the wish of the committee in charge that all friends, and patrons of the school be present. Light refreshments will be served.

BROKE HER ARM

Mrs. George Eagleton Falls on Cellar Steps and Suffers Serious Injury.

Saturday evening Mrs. George Eagleton fell on the cellar steps and from the result of the fall will be confined to her bed for some time.

She had gone to the basement and upon returning had reached the second step on the cellar stairs when taken with sudden dizziness, falling forward onto the stairs, breaking one arm just above the wrist and badly spraining the other.

Medical assistance was summoned and the fracture reduced. The accident was a painful one and it will be some time before she will be able to be around.

SOME SPENT SMALL AMOUNT

Candidates Filing Affidavits of Expense Account During Recent Election.

Law Being Pretty Well Observed Throughout County—Law a Good One.

The new law requiring candidates for election, whether village, township, municipal, county, state or primary, to file with the county clerk of their county a sworn statement of the expenses incurred pending their efforts for election, has been pretty well observed in this county, says County Clerk Lewis. He has already received about 100 affidavits, with very few of them showing an expense of more than $2.50, while a majority of them claim to have spent less than a dollar.

The clerk is required to keep these statements a year, after which they can be sold for junk, or burned up. He holds them a year merely for reference should there be any who wished to investigate a person's expense account. Nearly every affidavit so far received shows that the biggest item of expense was for slips to use at caucus time, while cigars and very little figure in the statements.

The law is a good one. Years ago the "don'tful" voter depended upon making a little money election day, selling his franchise to the highest bidder the same way pork would be sold, and then he sometimes fooled the man he was pretending to help. This class of voter has lost his job, and the candidates will save a great many dollars by it.

Arbor and Bird Day A Proclamation by the Governor.

One of my dearest memory pictures is father sitting in the cooling shade of a beautiful pine that he and I planted long years ago. The sweet, plaintive music of this tree comes back to me to moments of solitude. Trees are real friends of men, beasts and birds. In recent years we have come to realize this. It is hoped that Americans will acquire enthusiasm in preserving useful and beautiful trees in both city and country, that they will plant every year useful and beautiful trees by the roadside, in school yards, about their homes, in parks and farm fields.

Let us cherish a loyalty and love for our feathered songsters; yea, a tender regard for the birds who can't sing, birds that destroy in the aggregate millions of destructive insects. The economical and aesthetic value of bird life is beyond calculation. The hearts of boys and girls and "grown-ups" become more human, more helpful, as they come to read aright the Creator's message in the lives of trees and birds.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby designate Friday, May 8th, A.D., 1914, as Arbor and Bird Day, and do request that this day be observed by all schools, public and private, and other educational institutions by the planting of trees for beautifying school grounds and parks, and by conducting suitable exercises for promoting the spirit of protection to trees and birds.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State, this first day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen, and of the Commonwealth the seventy-eighth.

Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor.

By the Governor: Frederick C. Martindale, Secretary of State.

MEETING HAD GOOD ATTENDANCE MAGAZINES IN PUBLIC LIBRARY

W. C. T. U. Feed and Entertain at Home of Mrs. Shores.

County Convention to Be Held in This City commencing May 6—Delegates Elected.

The W. C. T. U. met April 10th with Mrs. Shores. Twenty-four members and seven visitors were present. Mrs. Pamele led the devotional exercises, and it being the Friday before Easter, it served very fitting that the song of the Crucifixion of Jesus was the selection chosen.

Miss Agnes Rodgers made a few remarks preparatory to taking up the work as president of the union.

The secretary read the minutes of the last meeting.

The election of treasurer, which was put over from the last meeting, resulted in a unanimous ballot for Mrs. J. R. Cooper to serve the coming year.

Miss Rodger was elected delegate to the state W. C. T. U. convention, which is to be held in Flint early in June. Mrs. Taggart was chosen as alternate.

The county W. C. T. U. convention is to be held in Charlevoix, commencing May 8, and delegates were elected for this as follows: Mrs. P. D. Campbell, Mrs. George Eagleton and Mrs. Geo. Burns. Alternates, Mesdames Seroggie, Sr., Wallace, Sr., Alexander, Ranger and Weikel.

The several committees deemed necessary to make this convention a success were also named.

Mrs. E. L. Calkins is expected to be here April 20, and speak in the Methodist church in the evening. Mrs. Calkins is the state president of the Michigan W. C. T. U. She has been here before, and we feel confident that those who have heard her will not willingly miss this opportunity of hearing her again, and those and those who have not should not miss this chance of hearing her.

The hour was so late before the program that it was deemed best to omit the most of it.

Miss Audrey Correll sang a solo in a very acceptable manner, accompanied by Miss Nettie Carroll on the piano. Mrs. Birdick read an interesting leaflet, "The Study of Physiology and Hygiene the Safe-Guard of the Child." Mrs. Shores served most delicious refreshments. It has been said before that Mrs. Shores has a heart as big as an ox, and we venture to say it again. She certainly did things up brown and deserves a rising vote of thanks.

We should have stated that resolutions favoring National prohibition were unanimously endorsed by the union and those present, and the legislative committee will endeavor to place this resolution before the churches, Sunday schools and young people's societies immediately for their endorsement.

NEW TELEPHONE MANAGER

O. A. Solomon of Boyne City Will Fill Vacancy in Local Exchange.

O. A. Solomon, who for more than four years has been the manager of the Michigan State Telephone office at Boyne City, has been transferred to this city and will act as general manager of the local exchange here.

In commenting on Mr. Solomon's departure from Boyne City, the Daily Journal says:

"Sol" came to Boyne City from Manistee, where he was employed for twelve years as repair man for the Bell Telephone company. He has been in the telephone business for more than seventeen years, working his way up step by step until he is now thoroughly familiar with all lines of the business. His promotion is well deserved, as the outcome of faithful appliance to his duties and the interests of the company."

Mrs. Solomon and children will remain at Boyne City until the latter part of May, or until the close of the school year.

Historical Society.

The postponed meeting of the Charlevoix Historical Society will be held this week Friday evening, April 17th, at the home of Dr. and Mrs. Frank Wilkinson.

Program:
A short business session. Following this an evening of old fashioned entertainment.

DRANK KEROSENE OIL

Two Year Old Boyne City Boy Dies the Next Day from its Effects.

The little two year old son of Mr. and Mrs. Christ Reinlaender of Boyne City, drank a quantity of kerosene oil last Friday and died the following day from the result.

The little fellow secured the oil from the top of the stove, where it had been left in a can after starting a fire, while the mother was out of the house, and drank all it contained. Two other small children, who were home at the time, told a neighboring mother of what had happened, and frantic was given. In a short time the little fellow was playing about the house as if nothing had happened.

The following morning he appeared sick and drowsy but did not complain of pain. About noon he became worse and died shortly afterwards in the arms of his little sister, who was rocking him.

STARTS JUNE 23

Dummy Service Between Charlevoix and Petoskey to Commence on This Date.

W. A. Martin, Petoskey agent for the Pere Marquette railroad, who has been indefatigable in his effort to secure a "dummy" service between Bay View and Charlevoix, has received a communication from W. E. Wolfenden, general passenger agent of the Pere Marquette railroad, which notifies him that the "dummy" service between Bay View and Charlevoix will commence Tuesday, June 23. The motor car to be sent to Petoskey in time to be put in service on the morning of June 23, and the operation for the summer will continue from that time on. This will take care of Kika convention. This arrangement will give dummy service one week earlier than last year. There will be seven trains a day each way between Petoskey and Charlevoix, commencing at 8 a. m. and the last one arriving about 11:50 p. m.—Petoskey Evening News.

Opens Saturday.

Gunner's New Variety Store will be opened to the public Saturday, April 18. From the appearance of things at present, the store will be most complete in every respect, and those who are present on the opening will be given the opportunity to purchase numerous articles at less than cost price. See their advertisement on page 8.

KILLED IN AUTO ACCIDENT

Overturning of Car Crushes Skull of Miss Bessie Gardner.

PARTY THROWN FROM AUTO

Accident Happened Sunday at Outskirts of East Jordan.

Other Members of Party Were Badly Shaken Up—Car Was Owned by Sheriff Ford P.
Robbins of Boyne Falls.

Fast driving was undoubtedly the cause of a shocking automobile accident Sunday at East Jordan, which cost the life of one young lady and the severe shaking up of the other occupants of the car.

The car, a Studebaker, which had been sent to Sheriff Robbins, county agent, for demonstration purposes, was driven by Oscar Sweeney of Petoskey, who left Petoskey Sunday morning, accompanied by Miss Bessie Gardner, a clerk in Fochtman's Department Store. The party passed through this city Sunday morning on their way to East Jordan, where the accident occurred. After taking dinner at the Knessell House, Sweeney and a party consisting of Miss Gardner, Mrs. R. V. Steffes, Mrs. E. Newson and Harry Adams started out for a ride, the object being to show the car to Mrs. Newson, who was considering the purchase of an auto.

They were coming toward the city on the road that runs past the fair grounds, and in making the turn at the outskirts of the village, the car skidded and for some distance ran along side the road, partially in the ditch. In an effort to regain the track, the car upset, turning over twice. Miss Gardner was killed outright and the other occupants of the car more or less bruised and shaken up.

At the coroner's inquest held Monday, it was brought to light that when the car overturned, it threw Miss Gardner out, and the running board of the car in turning over striking her on the top of the head, badly crushing her skull and breaking her neck.

Miss Gardner lived at Booneville, Indiana, to which place her remains were sent Tuesday.

FIFTH ANNUAL CAMP

Program This Year to Be an Exceptionally Strong One.

The committee in charge of the Fifth Annual Camp and Conference for High School boys over 15 years of age announce the fifth annual gathering to be held June 20th to July 6th, at the well-known camp for boys Hayo-Went-Ha on Torch Lake, in Northern Michigan near Grand Traverse Bay.

The purpose of this conference is to bring together a selected bunch of older high school fellows who are leaders in their schools for the purpose of a ten day camp to confer on the problems of leadership and how best to raise the moral standards in their respective communities. Representation will be limited to one delegate for every 100 students enrolled from any one high school, and registrations must be in by May 15th. If limit is reached before this date registrations and fees will be returned. Registrations should be sent in early as camp is limited to 100 boys.

The program this year promises to be an exceptionally strong one. Several men of national reputation in Boys' Work have already been secured and the names of Dimple Upton, Porter, Davis, Field, Aiken, Tinker, Johnson, Van Dis, Barnes, Foster, Tyler, McMahon, Harwood, Watkins are among those already listed as leaders and speakers. A special effort will be made to secure Ex-Governor Chase Osborne to address the conference on the 4th of July. If you are interested in securing programs, application blank, etc., see your high school Principal or Y. M. C. A. Secretary.

JACKSON MAN EATS A SQUARE MEAL AFTER WAITING 15 YEARS

A. W. Hobbs Ends Stomach Suffering Quickly With Mayr's Wonderful Remedy.

A. W. Hobbs of 1801 East Main Street, Jackson Mich., after some fifteen years of suffering from derangement of the stomach and digestive tract, took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. He got the surprise of his life and swift relief. Mr. Hobbs has told his own story in a letter, part of which is given here:

"After taking three doses of your stomach remedy, I am in perfect condition. I have not felt so good for fifteen years."

"I can eat anything now and it does not distress me. I hope those affected as I was will proceed to get your remedy at once."

The first dose of Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy convinces sufferers of its merit. Many have found only one dose sufficient. Mr. Hobbs' experience is typical. Thousands have taken this remedy with remarkable benefit. It is known everywhere.

Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy cures the digestive tract of mucous accretions and removes putrescent matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations. Many are sure it has saved them their lives.

Because of its wonderful success there are many imitations, so be cautious. Be sure it's Mayr's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know of in your town—or send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you of its wonderful effects.

INTERNATIONAL Harvester manure spreaders have a score of good features in their construction. Each one is the result of careful field experiment.

An IHC spreader is low enough for easy loading, yet it has plenty of clearance underneath. The rear axle is well under the load, rear wheels have wide rims and Z-shaped-tugs, insuring good traction under all conditions. Frame, wheels, and all driving parts are of steel. Apron tension is adjusted by a simple device. Winding of the beater is prevented by large diameter, and beater teeth are strong, square and chisel-pointed.

International manure spreaders are built in several styles and sizes, low or high, endless or return apron, for small farms or large. Examination will show sturdiness of construction to every detail. Repairs, if ever needed, may always be had of the local dealer. Examine International spreaders at the dealer's. We will tell you who sells them, and we will send you interesting catalogues.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal

BY

REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt. Jefferson Locke insinuates himself into the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Johnson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intriguing to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Rannels, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taboga, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming Spaniard, Chiquita.

The girl tells him her name is "Chiquita." He learns later that that means only "little one." Kirk begins his work. Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Wellar) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries in vain in Panama to learn something of Chiquita and meets Alfarez again.

Kirk wins the capital prize, $15,000, in the lottery. He and Rannels make plans for advancement. The Cortlandts, having turned from the older Alfarez, intend to make Senator Garavel, a banker, president of Panama.

Alfarez's son, Kirk's foe, is engaged to Gertrudis, Garavel's daughter. She is Kirk's "Chiquita." He meets her again at the opera through Mrs. Cortlandt's aid.

Kirk makes love to Chiquita. Edith Cortlandt, infatuated with Kirk, goes riding with him frequently.

She avows her love for him. Their ride and talk are interrupted by her husband. Kirk asks Garavel for his daughter's hand. The banker wishes her to marry Alfarez to advance his own ambitions.

Clifford, a man from the States, asks Rannels about Kirk.

Kirk receives permission to call on Chiquita. Young Alfarez challenges him to a duel. Kirk laughs at him. Mr. Cortlandt asks Kirk to call on her.

Cortlandt overhears his wife make love to Kirk, who tells her he loves and is engaged to Gertrudis. Prompted by Mrs. Cortlandt, Garavel forbids Kirk to call on his daughter.

CHAPTER XXI.

A Business Proposition.

WITH CORTLANDT'S later view with the rival candidates for the Panama presidency formed but a part of her plan. She next held a long conversation with Colonel Johnson, to the end that on Friday morning Rannels heard a rumor that threw him into the greatest consternation. It was to the effect that instead of his succeeding to the office of superintendent he was to be replaced by his brother-in-law was to supersede him. Although the word was not at all authoritative, it came with sufficient directness to leave him agast. If true it was, of course, equivalent to his discharge, for it meant that he could not even continue in his former position without putting himself in a flight if he did not resign voluntarily. He knew that his new superior would eventually force him to do so, for Blakeley would build up an organization of his own.

Inasmuch as his assistant was concerned in his threatened calamity, Rannels made haste to fly the matter before him.

"Then this would seem to end our fine hopes, eh?" said Kirk.

"Neither," Rannels broke out bitterly. "I've worked hard, Kirk, and I deserve promotion if anybody ever did. This other fellow is a dull-bellied brute. Why, I've forgotten more railroad than he'll ever know. Every man on the system hates him and likes me; and on top of it all I was promised the job. It's tough on the wife and the kid."

He stopped to swallow his emotion and went on.

"I gave this job the best I had in me, for I had the idea that I was doing something patriotic, something for my country. That's the way they used to talk about this canal you know. I've put in four years of hell; I've lost sleep with the world; I've lost my business connections in the States, and I haven't saved up any money. I can't quit, and yet I'll have to, for if I'm tired I'll mean I'll have to go back there and start at the bottom again. Those people don't know anything about these blanked politics. They'll think I made a failure here in government work, and I'll have to live it down. What are you going to do?"

Kirk started. "Oh, I don't know. I was thinking about you. I haven't spent much of that lottery coin. It's in the bank, all that Allan hasn't used, and half of it is yours if you'll take it. You and Mrs. Rannels and the kid and Allan and I—none other party—will like back home and get something else to do. What do you say?"

Rannels' voice shook as he answered: "My Jove! You're the real stuff, Anthony. I'll think it over. Who is this 'other party'?"

"My wife."

"Good Lord! You're not married?"

"No, but I'm going to be. You talk about your troubles. Now, listen to mine. I'll make you weep like a flog."

Briefly he told his friend of the blow that had so suddenly fallen upon him.

"You are up against it, old man," agreed Rannels when he had heard all. "Garavel has set his heart on the presidency, and he'll pay any price to get it. It's the same all over Central America. These people are mad on politics."

"But the game isn't over. I carried the ball forty yards once for a touchdown in the last few seconds of play, and Yale won. I had good interference then, and I need it now. Somebody'll have to run ahead of me."

Rannels smiled. "I guess you can count on me. What is the plan?"

For the next half hour the two talked earnestly, their heads together, their voices low.

"I don't believe it will work, my boy," Rannels said at last. "I know these people better than you, and yet—Lord, if it does come off! Now, don't mention this rumor about Blakeley. I want to see Steve Cortlandt first."

"Cortlandt? By the way, do you happen to remember that he's to be our guest for supper tomorrow night? Kind of a joke now, trying to thank him for what he's done, isn't it?"

"Not at all. I may be our one chance of salvation; he may be the one person who can help us."

"Well," Kirk reflected, "I have a good deal to thank him for, I suppose, outside of this, and I'll go through with my part."

He proceeded at once to put his plan into execution, his first step being to rent a room at the Tivoli, taking particular care to select one on the first floor in the north wing. That evening he and Allan moved. Rannels telephoned during the evening that he had been equal to his part of the task, so there remained nothing to do but wait for the hour of the dance.

It was considerably after dark on Saturday evening that John Weeks, American consul at Colon, received a caller who came to him direct from the Royal Mail steamer just docked.

At first sight the stranger did not impress Mr. Weeks as a man of particular importance. His face was insignificant, and his pale blue eyes showed little force. His figure was slight, and his pale blue eyes showed little force. His figure was slight, and his pale blue eyes showed little force.

He made his name known as Williams, which, of course, meant nothing to the consul, and while drinking one of Weeks' highballs, inquired idly about the country, the climate and the people, as if in no hurry to come to his point. He studied the fat man and when he had satisfied himself, came not openly with these words:

"I'm looking for a chap named Wellar. He landed here some time late in November."

"Friend of yours?"

"Um—m and exactly." Mr. Williams ran a hand meditatively over the rugged scar on his scalp, as if from force of habit.

"Wellar? I never heard of him."

"He may have traveled under another name. Ever heard of a fellow called Locke?"

The consul's moist lips drew together, his red eyes glinted watchfully. "Maybe I have, and maybe I haven't," said he. "Why do you want him?"

"I'm a detective, and I'm after Wellar, alias Locke, alias Anthony. He's wanted for embezzlement and assault and a few other things, and I'm going to take him." The indistinctive Mr. Williams spoke sharply, and his pale blue eyes were suddenly hard and bright.

Weeks stared open mouthed for an instant.

"I knew he was wrong. Embarraser, eh? Well, well?"

"Eighty thousand, that's all, and he's got it on him."

"You're waging there. He was broke when he landed. I ought to know."

"Oh, no! He came down on the Santa Cruz. I've seen the purser. He traveled under the name of Jefferson Locke. There's no mistake, and he couldn't have blown it all. No, it's sewed into his shirt, and I'm here to grab it."

Weeks whistled in amazement. "He is a shrewd one. Eighty thousand—Lord, I wish I'd known that! It's here, all right, working for the railroad and living at Panama. He's made good, too, and got some influential friends. Oh, this is great!"

"Working, hey? Clever still! Do you see that?" Williams inclined his head for a fuller display of the disfiguration over his ear. "He hing that on me, with a bottle I—was dead." He laughed disagreeably. "He'll go back, and he'll go back quick. How do I get to Panama?"

Weeks consulted his watch hastily. "You've missed the last train, but we'll go over together in the morning. I want to have a hand in this arrest for reasons of my own. I don't like him or his influential friends." He began to chuckle ponderously. "No; I don't like his influential friends, in particular."

While this scene was being enacted on the north side of the isthmus, Kirk Anthony over at the Tivoli hotel, was making himself ready for the ball with particular pains. Allan regarded him admiringly from many angles.

"Oh, Master L'Auntony," he exclaimed rapturously, "you are beautiful!"

"Thanks! Again thanks! Now, can you remember to do us I have told you?"

"I would die—"

"Don't say that again. I'm too nervous. Here are your instructions, once more. Keep both doors to this room locked and stand by the one to the veranda. Don't let any one in except Mr. Rannels and the man he'll bring. Don't—leave—this—spot, no matter what happens."

"I shall watch this apartment carefully, never fear."

"Remember, when I knock, so, let me in—instantly—and keep your wits about you."

"If Allen never fails, sir. But what is coming to pass?"

"Never mind what is coming to pass. This is going to be a big night, my boy—a very big night." Kirk stroiled out into the hall and made his way to the lobby.

Already the orchestra was tuning up, the wide porches were filling with well dressed people, while a stream of coaches at the door was delivering the arrivals on the special from Colon. It was a very animated crowd, sprinkled plentifully with Spanish people—something quite unusual, by the way—while the presence of many uniforms gave the affair almost the brilliancy of a military function.

Kirk wandered about through the confusion, adding to his friends, chatting here and there, his eyes fixed anxiously upon the door.

Clifford approached and fell into conversation with him.

"Great doings, eh? Garavel is going to run for president. This is a kind of political coming out party. It looked like a fight between him and General Alfarez, but they've patched it up, and the general is going to withdraw. Garavel is to have Uncle Sam's congratulations and co-operation."

"Excuse me," Anthony saw Rannels searching the room with anxiety. He hurried toward him and inquired, breathlessly:

"Have you got him?"

"Sure. I showed him your room. He'll be on the job. Has she come?"

Kirk shook his head. "Ge! I'm nervous." He wiped his brow with a shaking hand.

"Don't weaken," Rannels encouraged. "I'm beginning to believe you'll pull it off. I told my wife all about it—thought we might need her—and she's perfectly crazy. There they are now! Go to it, old man."

Into the lobby came a mixed group, in which were Andrew Garavel, his daughter, Ramon Alfarez, and the Cortlandts. Kirk's face was white as he went boldly to meet them, but he turned to meet her father's stare.

"May I have a word with you, sir?" Garavel inclined his head silently. As the others moved on he said, "This is hardly a suitable time or place, Mr. Anthony."

"Oh, I'm not going to kick up a fuss. I didn't answer your note because there was nothing to say. You still wish me to cease my attentions?"

"I do. It is her wish and mine."

"Then I shall do so, of course. If Miss Garavel is dancing tonight I would like your permission to place my name on her program."

"No!" exclaimed the banker.

"Purely to avoid comment. Every one knows I have been calling upon her, and that report of our engagement got about considerably. It would set people talking if she snubbed me. That is the only reason I came to this dance. Believe me, I'd rather have stayed away."

"Perhaps you are right. Let us have no unpleasantness and no gossip about the affair by all means. I consent, then." Conveying in a friendly manner, they followed the rest of the party.

Kirk ignored Ramon's scowl as he requested the pleasure of seeing Chiquita's program, then pretended not to notice her start of surprise. After a frightened look at her father she timidly extended the card to him, and he wrote his name upon it.

Working, hey? Clever still! Do you see that?"

BUILD GRAVEL ROAD

Work Commenced Monday Morning on New Road Leading Toward Petoskey.

Active operations on the new stretch of road to be built this year north of the city, on the Petoskey road, was commenced Monday morning at Greensky hill, under charge of Road Commissioner O.
D. Hammond.

The new road will commence just east of the right of way, near the Martin dairy farm, and continue on the old Petoskey road to about 300 feet beyond the brow of Green-sky hill. A number of men and teams are now busy lowering the hill to about a six per cent grade.
Considerable filling will be made on the approach at this end, and when completed, the grade will be a comparatively easy one to go over.

The road to be built will be of gravel, a 15 foot travel track, 24 feet from shoulder to shoulder and 40 feet from outside ditch lines, and when completed, will be one of the finest stretches of road in northern Michigan.

Chance for Hostling Boy to Attend State Fair at Detroit Free of Charge.

The State Fair has decided to send one boy from Charlevoix county to the State Fair at Detroit, September 7-18th, and to give him instructions in stock judging, soil testing, dairying, etc.

State Fair pays all expenses. Send a fine boy from our county.

The selection of the boys will be made by the following committee in each county: County Commissioner of Schools, secretary of Farmers' Institute society and the Master of the Pomona grange.

The committee will meet to select the boy on June 4th, or at the call of the County Commissioner of Schools.

The selection will be made from the two following examinations, taken by any boy in the county between the ages of 12 and 18:

First: The regular eighth grade examination to count 50 per cent.

Second examination to be taken by applicants on afternoon of May 15th with regular eighth grade examination.

Second examination questions will be sent to each commissioner, under seal, about May 1st. The boy in the county between 12-18 having the highest average standing will be selected by the above committee. Any boy in the county between 12-18 who wishes to attend the State Fair and have expenses paid, must take both examinations this year.

HANDLING THE UNRULY BULL

A good way to restrain an unruly bull is described in the Breeder's Gazette:

Have a covering made of good harness leather from a pattern of the animal's head. Fit a piece over the front, having it extend out so as to take a good seam on each side and allow plenty of room about the eyes, then fit pieces to come down on each cheek, four or five inches wide. Have these pieces securely sewed and riveted with the seam upon the outside.

If the animal has horns the hood is easily fastened on. If not make a strong, snug fitting halter with straps to fasten the hood securely under the jaw and around the ears. The whole contrivance needs to be strong and well fitted, as a bull will give it a first class trial.

UTILIZING ASH SUPPLY.

Material From Both Coal and Wood
Has Fertilizing Values.

As the time approaches to clean up ash pits and bins and to distribute ash piles it is well to remind farmers and gardeners of the value of this product.

When conditions are favorable it is most economical to spread the ashes where they are needed through the winter, as then some of the fertilizing properties are lost.

Even road ashes may be put upon the land if the coarser portions are raked or sifted out, and these clinkers will serve as drainage or foundations for walks about the barnyard and poultry yard. Chickens also find something they want in the ashes.

Fine coal ashes may be worked into a clay soil with the very good effect of rendering it more porous as well as supplying some of the chemicals necessary to the growth of plants.

For fertilizing the lawn nothing is better than fine wood ashes, but if distributed during the winter and early spring the result will be almost too heavy a growth of grass, necessitating very frequent mowing.

The application of two scuttles of hardwood ashes to a tree produced the largest and finest Seckel pears ever harvested from a certain orchard in St. Louis county, Mo., the fruit ripening from day to day during six weeks.

All small fruits and orchard trees are benefited by a treatment of ash and borers that work around the base of the trunk of trees are almost entirely prevented from entering the bark.

A moderate amount of ashes and soot worked into the soil around roses greatly increases the richness and brilliance of coloring in the blossoms and makes fine foliage. Care must be taken not to loosen the roots, as roses like rich, firm soil.

The scrapings from the barnyard if there be a cow, the droppings from the chicken house, with ashes, will supply almost all the enriching for a plot of two acres.—Farm Progress.

BED SPRINGS ARE HANDY.

Many Useful Devices Can Be Made From Them.

Among the many homemade hand devices that can be made out of fair stiff wire, such as bed springs, the repair links and the hitching snap,
b. Illustrated herewith, are very useful.

All that is needed to make them is a pair of stout pliers. For the snaps one or two links may be made, depending

SOLE USES FOR OLD BED SPRINGS.

upon the service required. For the snaps the wire may be looped in various ways. The snaps open something like key rings do, by pulling the jaws apart. They may then be attached to whatever is to be held—dogs, calves or even larger animals if the wire is stout. For hitching things up, they are also very handy.—American Agriculturist.

An idle acre is like an idle man—of no more use than a dead one and takes up more room. Kansas Farmer.

BEES.

When the hives are well distributed in a certain space their inmates can be more easily handled. It seems to improve the disposition, especially if there are some trees or shrubs about it. Robbing is not prevalent either and the absence of that always helps to make bees better natured.

A good fall flow of honey is not an unmixed good, for careful trials have shown that there is a superabundance of pollen grains in this honey which does not make it the most desirable for winter stores, and the presence of the pollen has a tendency to bring on dysentery with the bees, especially if they are wintered in the cellar without an occasional cleansing flight, while the outdoor winter protected bees have. This is a mighty good argument in favor of wintering bees outdoors.

INSTALLS VULCANIZER PLANT

Benjamin Brown to Do All Kinds of Repair Work on Automobile and Bicycle Tires.

Benj. Brown is about to install a complete vulcanizing plant, one large enough to take care of all classes of this work. When the plant is installed he will be able to rebuild and retread cases and do all kinds of automobile or bicycle repair work. Heretofore practically all work of this nature has been sent out of the city, but with the new plant Mr. Brown will be able to do all kinds of work of this character. A. J. Brown is now at Indianapolis taking two weeks' instruction in this line of work. The plant will be installed and ready for business about May 1st.

MEMORIAL DAY

Arrangements Should Be Made for Its General Observance in Charlevoix.

Although Memorial Day is nearly two months away. The committee selected every year should be looked after and preliminary arrangements planned to make the observance of the day a general one. Some well known speaker should be secured to deliver the Memorial oration, and a musical program prepared.

Superintendent of Public Instruction Fred L. Keeler asks that the school observe the day appropriately, and says:

"The spirit of patriotism and gratitude to those who answered the call of the nation must be kept alive. How rapidly the host of the grand army is vanishing is shown by the pension rolls. During the year ending June 30, 1913, the number on the pension list was decreased by 36,064 deaths.

"The inheritance left by these men to the youth of today is a love for the flag and an unswerving loyalty. The inculcating of this spirit is a duty of the school of no small importance. Exercises should be held in every school room of the state, Friday, May 20. On May 30 schools should, as far as possible, assist in the exercises of the day. Memorial day needs no proclamation. It is almost nationally observed."

Had a Splendid Crowd.

The auction sale held last Wednesday at the farm of H. J. Fox was one of the largest attended sales held for a long time. Practically everything was sold. Horses and cattle brought exceptionally high prices. A batch of 50 hens brought $1.03 a piece, and another batch were sold at almost as high a figure. Mr. Fox states that his sale brought him $200 more than he had estimated.

POMONA GRANGE AT IRONTON

Exceptionally Well Attended Meeting Held There Last Thursday.

Ten Granges Represented—Next Meeting at Boyne Falls, Thursday, June 11th.

Charlevoix Pomona Grange met in joint session with the Farmers' Institute Society at Ironton Grange Hall on Thursday, April 9th, with an attendance of about 150. The following granges were represented: Boyne River, Harmony, South Arm, Wilson, Peninsula, Rock Elm, Maple Grove, Marion, Barnard, and Ironton.

An invitation from the County Fair Association was read and accepted, inviting the Pomona Grange to hold a grange rally on the fair grounds during the fair. It was also announced that the fair association had raised the premiums in the cattle, swine and sheep departments.

A committee consisting of William Mears, J. A. Newville and Walter Black was appointed to confer with like committees from Emmet and Cheboygan counties in regard to holding a tri-county pomona at Petoskey during the Bay View Assembly.

Professor L. R. Taft of the M.A.C. gave two addresses in the afternoon, one on "What Ails the Farmers' Orchards?" and the other on "Farm and Commercial Fertilizers." Some of the things, he said, ailed the farmers' orchards were that they needed spraying and pruning, and in setting a new orchard a man should put out lower varieties and more of each. J. H. Milford, county commissioner of schools, gave a talk on "Centralization of Rural Schools."

In the evening G. C. Ferris of Detroit gave an illustrated lecture on the Panama Canal, which was much enjoyed by all who heard it. Supt. Gaudard of East Jordan gave a paper on "Agriculture in the High School."

The next meeting will be held at the Town Hall in Boyne Falls on Thursday, June 11th. State Master J. C. Ketcham has promised to be with us at that time.

NO WINTER AT EVERETT

So States Raymond Bennett, Formerly of This City.

Business and Labor Conditions Poor—The Courier a Much Welcomed Weekly Visitor.

Everett, Washington, April 12, 1914.

Editor Courier:—Doubtless you will be rather surprised to hear from me. I am writing primarily to inquire as to the reason for my not receiving my issue of the Courier dated April 2nd. It finally gets to me on the Monday following the date of publication, and to say that I enjoy reading it is expressing it rather mildly. Please send me the copy in question and please don't let another one slip by.

By the way, I wonder what kind of weather you are having back there. Out here I have been waiting all winter for winter to come. We had only one little flurry of snow, such as you get before Thanksgiving time. We have had considerable rain, however, but there is an occasional day in between which is so pleasant as to make one forget the rain. It has been warm enough so that several men I know have worn no hat nor cap during the winter.

Perhaps you would be interested in knowing something of the view we have from Everett. It is situated on the Snohomish River and Port Gardner Bay, which is really a part of the Pacific Ocean. At all times we have a view of a part of the Cascades and on bright days we can see Mount Rainier on the south, Mount Baker on the north and the Olympics on the west.

Business here is to a great extent dependent upon the mills, there being thirty-nine mills in the city and one hundred and seventy-nine in the county. Chiefly owing to the low price of shingles, business has been very slow since October and does not seem to be improving. In fact, conditions throughout the west have been very poor, there being thousands of men without work.

One thing in particular which impresses one is the high price of real estate. Naturally it is nearly all stump land, which is held at $5 to $300 per acre and then on top of that it costs about $100 per acre to get it into any kind of shape.

It seems to be quite the general feeling out here that the opening of the Panama Canal is going to work to the detriment of the coast cities because of the fact that there will be an increased inflow of foreigners, having a tendency to increase the gap between capital and labor, which is already great, there nearly being a serious difference here this spring.

Yours ever,
Raymond Bennett.

Everett, Washington.

8TH GRADE DEBATE

Members of Class Entertain Parents and Guests in High School Assembly Room.

One of the best debates ever held in the high school was that of the eighth grade debating team in the assembly room of the high school Friday evening. The subject for discussion was: Resolved, "That the Exemption Provision in the Panama Canal Bill be Repealed." The affirmative was taken by Bessie Hammett, Theima Grady and Catherine Harsh, and the negative by Lillian MacNeill, Odell Weed and Kenneth Widdfield.

Each member of the team brought out points that showed a careful study of the subject and were roundly applauded. The judges awarded the decision to the negative side, although many in the audience were of the opinion that it should have been a tie.

Light refreshments were served those present by the members of the class.

Maple Grove Y. M. C. A.

On Friday evening of last week the Y. M. C. A. group in the Maple Grove district, assisted by the parents, were hosts at a community banquet. Not a large gathering, but just right to be comfortable. J. M. Gleason of Boyne City was the principal speaker.

DO NOT WAIT UNTIL FALL

Furnaces Should Always Be Cleaned Early in the Season.

Clean Them Up as Soon as the Fires Go Out as a Matter of Protection.

Spring is the time to overhaul your furnace, as soon as the fire goes out for good. Many householders wait until fall and this is a bad practice. It is often difficult to get workmen at that time and the furnace is also likely to rust. The average cellar will cause them to rust during the summer months. Therefore an early as possible care should be taken to protect the furnace and piping.

"First of all the ashes should be removed from the firepot and the grate left entirely clean. A sheet absorb moisture and it left in a heater will injure it. Then remove the smokepipe and, after giving it a coat of rust-preventing paint, set it in a dry place for the summer. The attic is a good place. Shake all soot out and see that the damper is in good order. When the smokepipe is replaced in the fall just before you are ready to light your furnace the joints where it enters the furnace and chimney should be covered with a suitable covering, which prevents loss of heat from radiation where it is not needed. This, of course, prevents rusting. Tin hot air pipes can also be covered to advantage. If a steam or hot water furnace is not brick-set—and most are not these days—a covering of asbestos, which may be applied in the form of plaster, will prevent much needless radiation from the furnace.

CENSUS MUST BE TAKEN LAWFULLY

Department of Public Education Says Telephones Must Not Be Used.

New List Must Be Made Every Year—Make House to House Canvass.

It has come to the attention of the department of public instruction that in several times that the telephone, the preceding year's census roll, school lists, etc., have been the means employed in some districts for taking the school census instead of the regular house to house canvass method prescribed by law. In such instances where irregular methods have been used the district has been required to have the census retaken and in one case a considerable amount of money had to be refunded to the state for the names of children who at the time the census was taken were not residents of the district. The annual apportionment of the primary school interest fund is based in large part on the census lists and these lists are very carefully checked in the offices of the department at Lansing. Thus these irregularities are easily detected. The time for taking the census is at hand and every enumerator and person in charge of taking the census in his district should make himself familiar with the law governing the taking of the census.

The law is very clear on this point. Section 4687 of the School Laws reads as follows: "In all school districts, except in incorporated cities having a population of 3000 or over, within fifteen days next previous to the first day in June of each year, the director or such other reputable and capable person or persons as the district board may appoint, shall take the school census of the district and make a list in writing of the names and ages of all the children who are five years of age and under twenty years of age whose parents or legal guardians reside therein."

In such form as the superintendent of public instruction may prescribe, and said list shall be verified by the oath on affirmation of the person taking such census by affidavit appended thereto or endorsed thereon, setting forth that the person or persons taking such census made a house to house canvass of the entire district or portion thereof canvassed by said enumerator and that it is a correct list of the names of all the children between the ages of five and under twenty years of age residing in the district." Sections 4688 and 4766 of the School Laws indicate the penalty for neglecting or refusing to perform this duty in accordance with the law. "Any school census enumerator who shall perform his duties carelessly or negligently..... shall be liable to a fine of not less than five dollars nor more than fifty dollars, or to imprisonment in the county jail for not more than twenty days or both such fine and imprisonment in the discretion of the court." "Any person duly elected to the office of moderator, director, treasurer or trustee of a school district, who shall neglect or refuse to perform any duty required of him by virtue of his office shall forfeit the sum of ten dollars." In addition to these penalties there is the danger that the district may lose its share of the primary moneys if it should be decided that the time had gone by for a new canvass to be taken. Directors and census enumerators will please read very carefully the statement to which they make affidavit, printed at the head of every census sheet.

AMERICAN FLAG OVER VERA CRUZ

First Engagement in Mexican Controversy Took Place Tuesday.

Four Americans Killed and Twenty Wounded—Two Hundred Mexicans Killed.

Latest despatches state that more than 200 Mexicans were killed at Vera Cruz Tuesday in the fight that followed the landing of U. S. troops sent ashore to seize the custom house and cable office of that port.

Four Americans were killed and twenty wounded in the skirmish, but the American flag now flies over the custom house. Thus opens the first chapter in the trouble between the United States and Mexico that has been brewing for some time.

Later advices state that Charge O'Shaughnessy was assassinated by Mexicans while on his way from Mexico City to Vera Cruz, but are not authentic. From now on it will probably be war to the finish between the two countries.

Play Petoskey Friday.

The opening ball game of the C. H. S. A. A. will be played at Petoskey Friday. The boys have been hard at practice for some time and it is believed they will give a good account of themselves at the opening game.

HAS SECURED 30 DAY OPTION

Effort Being Made to Form Farmers' Co-operative Association.

Old Sugar Factory to be Converted into a Cold Storage Plant—Meeting Saturday.

Efforts are being made to establish a Farmers' Co-operative Association in this city, the object being to have a cold storage plant where farmers can place their products until the time when sales are made.

Old Powers has been for the past few weeks hard at work on the project and has secured a thirty-day option on the Sugar Company property, including eighteen acres of land, practically including the old sugar factory and the land upon which it stands.

It is proposed to organize a $10,000 stock company, divided into ten dollar shares. When the company is organized it will be conducted as a warehouse, storage station and general selling station. The project is one of co-operation in the marketing and shipping of whatever the farmers have to sell, thus allowing them to sell in quantities and at times when the market is most favorable. Under this method all produce can be disposed of in carload lots direct to its place of destination.

The idea is a good one and should have the hearty co-operation of every farmer in this vicinity. A meeting will be held at the court house Saturday afternoon to explain in detail the proposition and all interested are requested to be present.

Opens Tea and Coffee House.

C. M. Hall will open a tea and coffee store in the building formerly occupied by Shea's harness shop. Mr. Hall will carry a complete line of teas, coffees, spices, baking powder etc.; in fact, the complete line of the Grand Union Tea Company will be an sale.

WAITING FOR THE FIRST

Many Local Fishermen Will Spend Day Upon Streams After the Spotted Beauties.

Fishermen are now making ready for their first trout fishing trip. Tackle boxes are being overhauled, boots repaired, and new lines and alluring baits purchased. A number will go to the Jordan, others to the Pigeon. Cemetery creek will be fished on both banks, while McGeagh and Monroe creeks will have their share of visitors. The busy days of last week brought on the fever which will not leave the true lover of the sport until he has had one good fishing trip.

Enlarge Basement.

Workmen are busily engaged in enlarging the basement of the M.E. church. Partitions are being set back, making the room large enough for nearly double its former seating capacity. The improvement is a greatly needed one.

ENTERTAINED FRIENDS

Mrs. Louise Ulrich Celebrates Her Fifty-sixth Birthday Monday Evening.

Mrs. Louise Ulrich entertained about forty of her friends Monday afternoon, from 3:30 to 8:00, the occasion being her 56th birthday.

An elaborate supper was served from 5:00 to 8:00, which in itself will be an event long to be remembered.

During the evening games were played, the prizes being awarded to Meadame Jennie Dickerhof, Mary Crandell, Carrie Heise and J. Nowland. Mrs. Ulrich received many beautiful presents as reminders of the occasion.

Yelland a Candidate.

Judge of Probate Judd Yelland of Eschababa has announced that he will be a candidate for congress on the Republican ticket from this district at the coming August primaries.

Mr. Yelland has the endorsement of the Republican county committees of Delta and Menominee counties, and is quite favorably spoken of by the press of the upper peninsula.

MICHIGAN STOMACH SUFFERERS DISCOVER THE QUICKEST REMEDY

Swift Relief for Ills of Digestive Tract
Given By May's Wonderful Treatment.

Hundreds of Michigan people have found quick deliverance from stomach troubles by the use of May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. This remarkable treatment has established a record of proven results and benefits. It has friends everywhere. Here is what two Michigan people say:

Deafness Cannot Be Cured
by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflammation of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running ear and it is not long before the hearing is lost. If it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. It is not a cure, but a permanent relief, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous lining.
We will give one hundred dollars for anyone who cures deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by local treatment. Send for circulars free.

COUNTY NORMAL.
(Willard Howe)
Mildred Eckinger was a visitor to the normal room Thursday afternoon.
Velma LaCount and Bertie Howe were absent Thursday and Edna Strigley and Bertie Howe were also absent Friday because of illness.
Thursday the class started the preparation of the hot bed and garden. Friday the preparation was finished and some planting was done.
The work of the normal class was finished Monday with a written test on "How has the Study of Psychology Helped Each Member of the Class?"
On account of Captain Weaver's kindness the normal class took a trip on the City of Boyne out in Lake Michigan to the limestone beds, where they planted some fish. The trip was enjoyed very much by everyone.
A debate was given by the eighth grade in the high school assembly hall. The normal class attended and was very much interested in the ability of the pupils to present their arguments, especially of two or three. After the debate refreshments were served and we had a social time.

HOG BRISTLES.
The greatest foe of the pig is hog choler, and the greatest enemy of hog choler is cleanliness.
Never select a heavy, lazy sow for a breeder nor one that has a bad temper.
The best hogs have heavy bones. Watch this if you are about to purchase one.
Many hogs are bothered with worms. Examine the droppings.
To make fall pigs do well they must be provided with warm sleeping quarters.
Provide charcoal for the hogs.

SHEEP MEASLES.

Methods of Preventing the Spread of This Parasitical Disease.
The sheep measles parasite has recently become common in the United States. It attacks the muscles, says the Orange Judd Farmer. In heavy infestations it may cause the animal's death. Fortunately it has been proved to be the intermediate stage of a tapeworm, not of the armed tapeworm of man, with which species it has generally been identified in the past. Sheep become infected as a result of swallowing the eggs scattered over the pasture in the excrement of dogs harboring tapeworms. Dogs in turn acquire the tapeworm after eating the carcasses of infested sheep.
Preventive measures are, first, systematic treatment to keep dogs free from tapeworms, thus removing the source from which sheep become infected; second, the proper disposal of the carcasses of dead sheep and the complete prohibition of raw mutton as an article of food for dogs, thus preventing the possibility of the parasite reaching its canine host. The destruction of carcasses will also reduce the chances of the transmission of the parasite to coyotes, which may also to some extent act as hosts, though these animals are probably much less important as carriers than the dogs, which constantly accompany sheep on the range.

Read the Courier, for the best of news is herein told.

Early Oil Wells.
Early wells in what later developed into the greatest oil region in the country were put down for salt some being sunk to a depth of 800 feet. Nearly all yielded quantities of petroleum, and none produced nearly all oil, but it was not until the late fifties that the commercial value of oil was tested as an illuminant.

ADDS CLOTHING STOCK

J. L. Crane Will Have Exclusive Sale of Famous "Linequist" Line.

J. L. Crane has added a complete line of gents' clothing to his already large line of merchandise. He will carry the famous "Linequist," the "Man from Michigan" clothing, and will have the exclusive sale in Charlevoix county.

The men's clothing section will be located on the main floor, Clinton street entrance, where was formerly located the department devoted to ladies' furnishings. This department has been moved to the second floor, where larger space was available. This room has been fitted up in an up-to-date manner and made a place where the ladies can inspect their wearing apparel to their heart's content without interruption.

Here the best and latest models in spring coats and suits are shown and bright colors are much in evidence. Skirts with the late ruffles and "pinched up" effect are shown in great profusion, giving a fine display of the very latest styles in vogue.

On the first floor, Bridge street entrance, the dry goods department remains as heretofore. This department is full of dress goods, silks, etc., in both foreign and domestic weaves. Taking the store throughout, it presents a very neat and tasty appearance.

TESTING DAIRY COWS.

Value of a Milk Producer Can Be Ascertained in No Other Way.

The dairy farmer who is not testing his cows and who does not know what they have done for him in actual dollars and cents is guessing, and guessing at the best is inaccurate.

The methods of weighing, sampling and testing the milk of the individual dairy herd has been explained there and again, says the Kansas Farmer. As a matter of fact it does require a good deal of time to do this, state tests to the contrary notwithstanding. However, the time expended in arriving at the relative merits of each cow and of the herd as compared with other herds will well repay for the time expended. It is absolutely impossible for any man to guess at the profit of the individual cow. All signs of economical milk production fall in the case of the dairy cow.

If a farmer does not feel disposed to do this testing himself he can afford to organize his neighbors with himself into a cow testing association. Under the testing association plan $1 a year will pay for the testing of each cow and this is money well expended. The testing of dairy cows, viewed from this standpoint, is inexpensive.

The Black Cat at Sea.

About twenty years ago, when I was living in north China, the British squadron, then in far eastern waters, was standing out of the port of Chefoo when a little black cat fell overboard from H. M. S. Wanderer. At once the ship stopped, signaled to its consort "Cat overboard," and the entire squadron came to a standstill. A boat put off from the Wanderer and rescued a puss, who was swimming for dear life after the ship. The officer who told me the story said the sailors would have been furious if the little cat had not been saved, for not only was she a great pet, but they firmly believed disaster would follow if a black cat was allowed to drown.—London Mail.

The Worse the Better.

In the surgical ward of a Berlin hospital a patient was heard to say: "The worse we are the better they like us here. Why, they won't think nothing at all of that cut of yours—they'll laugh at you. But wait till you get a great big lump inside your head like me. Then they'll make something like a fuss over you. You couldn't hardly get more attention if you was a king. Little things like your cut the boy doctor sees to, but when you get in my shape the chief looks after you every time. My, yes!"

Woman's Reason.

Women have more of what is termed good sense than men. They cannot reason wrong, for they do not reason at all. They have fewer pretensions, are less implicated in theories and judge of objects more from their immediate and involuntary impression on the mind, and therefore more truly and naturally.—Hazlitt.

KINDNESS.

Man has one power in particular which is not sufficiently dwelt on. It is the power of making the world happy, or at least of so greatly diminishing the amount of unhappiness in it as to make quite a different world from what it is at present. The power is called kindness.—F. W. Faber.

Card of Thanks.

We wish to thank our many friends and neighbors who so kindly assisted us in our recent bereavement; also for the many beautiful flowers given us.

As he finished he found Mrs. Cortlandt regarding him.

"Will you dance with me?" he inquired.

"Yes, I saved the fourth and the tenth." As he filled in the allotted spaces she said in a low voice: "You are the blindest person! Did Mr. Garvel give you leave to do that?"

"Of course. Thank you." He made his way out of the press that had gathered and toward the open air.

Rumels pondered upon this just outside.

"Well, well, quick! Did you make it?"

"Number nine."

"Good! I was gnawing my finger nails. Whew! I'm glad that is over. Now pull yourself together and don't forget you have the first dance with Mrs. Rumels. There goes the music. I—I'm too rattled to dance."

Anthony found his friend's wife bubbling with excitement and scarcely able to contain herself.

"Oh, I'll never live through it, I know," she cried, as soon as they were out upon the floor. "How can you be so calm?"

"I'm not. I'm as punky as you are."

"And—oh—poor little thing! She seems frightened to death."

"But isn't she beautiful?"

Now and then her eyes strayed to Kirk with a look that made his blood move quicker. It boded well for the success of his plans and filled him with a fierce, hot gladness. But how the moments dragged!

General Alvarez entered the room amid a buzz of comment. Then, as he greeted his rival, Garvel, with a smile and a handshake a round of applause broke forth. The members of the commission sought them both out, and congratulations were exchanged. At last the Garvel boom was launched in earnest.

Mrs. Cortlandt expressed a desire to sit out the fourth dance.

"So your engagement to Miss Garvel is broken?" she began, when she and Kirk had seated themselves in two of the big rockers that lined the porch.

"All smashed to pieces, running gear broken, steering knuckle bent, gasoline tank punctured. I need a tow."

"Mr. Garvel told me not an hour ago that as soon as he explained his wishes she consented to marry him."

"A refusal would have meant the death of the old man's chances, I presume. She acted quite dutifully."

"Yes. If she had refused him I doubt if we could have saved her father. As it is, the general withdraws and leaves the field clear, the two young people are reunited, quite as if you had never appeared, and you—my dear Kirk, now what about you?"

"Oh, I don't count. I never have counted anything, you know. Is it true that Garvel is practically elected?"

"General Alvarez couldn't very well step in after he had publicly stepped out, could he? That would be a little too treacherous. He'd lose his support, and our people could then have an excuse to take a hand."

"I think you worked it cleverly, Mrs. Cortlandt," Kirk said. "Of course I had no chance to win against a person of your diplomatic gifts. I had my nerve to try."

"Yes. You see, it meant more to me than to you or to her. With you two it is but a romance, forgotten in a night."

"Suppose I don't choose to accept what it pleases people to hand me?"

"My dear Kirk," she smiled, "you will have to be this case. There is nothing else to do."

"No, shook his head. "I hoped we could be friends, Mrs. Cortlandt, but it seems we can't be."

"At this she broke out imperiously, her eyes flashing.

"You can't afford to break with me."

"Indeed? Why do you think that?"

"Listen, I've shown you what I can do. In a few months, in a year you can be a great success. You want to become a big man like your father. Well, Rumels will be out of the way soon. Blakely amounts to nothing. You will be the superintendant."

"So! That's not merely a rumor about Blakely? Rumels is fired, eh?"

"Yes."

"If I choose not to give up Chiquita Garvel, then what? It means the end of me here. Is that it?"

"If you choose? Why, you have no choice, whatever in the matter. It is practically closed. You can do nothing, although, if you really intend to make trouble, I shall walk inside when I leave and inform the old gentleman, in which case he will probably send the girl home at once, and take very good care to give you no further opportunity. Rumels is only too anxious to marry her. As to this being the end of you here, well, I really don't see how it could be otherwise."

"And if I don't agree you will tell Mr. Garvel that I'm going to make trouble?" She said nothing, so he went on cautiously, sparing for time.

"Well, inasmuch as this seems to be a plain business proposition, suppose I think it over. When it comes time for our next dance, I'll say yes or no."

"As you please."

"Very well. The music has stopped; we'd better go in."

As they rose she laid her hand upon his arm and he felt it tremble as she exclaimed:

"Believe me, Kirk, this isn't at all easy for me, but—I can't bear to lose."

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE
BIBLE STUDY

THE COST OF DISCIPLESHIP.
Luke 14:25-35—April 19.

Whoever will save his life shall lose it; whoever will lose his life for My sake shall find it.—Matthew 10:39.

It was at the close of the Great Teacher's ministry. Multitudes were following Him, going up to Jerusalem to the Passover, at which Jesus foreknew He would die as the atypical Passover Lamb. Today's lesson gives us some of His teachings.

The terms of discipleship which Jesus set forth differ widely from those proclaimed by some who profess to be His disciples. They sometimes declare that to arise and request the prayers of God's people is a sufficient sign of discipleship. Such as do so are counted converts.

To get them even to take this step requires the holding out of some inducement—greater business prosperity, an entrance into society or a better prospect of political preferment.

If we contrast these with Jesus' cost of discipleship words in this lesson, we shall perceive that the vast number of nominal Christians have been, so to speak, inveigled into professing what they never intended to profess. Many have been entrapped into professing Christianity who never were Christians, according to the Master's conditions of discipleship, who never hearken to His Word, who are not consecrated to His will.

The Cost of Discipleship.

"If any man come to Me, and hate not father, mother, wife, children, brethren, sisters, yea, and his own life also, he cannot be My disciple. And whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple." Surely there is no excuse for misunderstanding such plain conditions! The Master's general teaching was that the whole world is estranged from God and without right to everlasting life. But He came to die, that they might have opportunity to return to Divine favor. He did not say that only His followers would have an opportunity of future life. Those who so declare are adding to God's Word something out of harmony with His teachings.

The word hate is apparently used in contrast with love. To be Christ's disciple, then, means that we must love the Lord and the principles for which He stands that love for others in contention would be hatred. We are to be ready to sacrifice at the Lord's command every earthly hope, aim, object, and to lay down our lives willingly, gladly. Such a manifest devotion of this kind can be trusted with anything.

The fact that Jesus Himself was of this character, and placed the Father's will above all else, is an assurance that all His followers in the Kingdom will have the same spirit. The Kingdom will not be a selfish one, but the very reverse. The kings, princes and judges of that Kingdom will not be only irresistible in power, but unflinching. With them the Divine standard will be first, in the absolute sense.

Definition of Cross-Bearing.

Adding to the severity of the terms, Jesus declared, "Whosoever doth not bear his cross, and come after Me, cannot be My disciple." After we have taken our stand on the Lord's side, we must be proven. Only those who demonstrate their worthiness by their faithfulness will be finally accepted of the Lord. Cross-bearing must be a daily matter. Our crosses are those oppositions of the world, the flesh and the Devil, which cross the Divine will as laid down in the Lord's Word.

The only proper sentiment is that which the Master expressed, saying: "Not My will, but Thine, be done."

As advice not to undertake discipleship without mature deliberation, Jesus gave a parable of a man who began a tower, but could not complete it, and thus made himself disreputable, foolish.

Another illustration was that of going to war without proper preparation. All Christ's followers are to be set out to build character, and to fight a good fight against Satan and sin. Therefore they must expect a hard battle and must wage a good warfare.

"Salt is Good, But—"

Jesus used salt as a symbol representing loyalty to God, which all His followers must have and maintain. If salt lose its value for seasoning purposes, it is useless. So the Christian has a special purpose in the world—to be a preserving power, and to bring out the good qualities of others.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a running sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever. Nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surface.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by Catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

HOMEMADE GATE LATCH.

A Convenient, Economical and Time Saving Device.

In the drawing is shown a handy gate latch made at home from hard wood and oiled so as to prevent the absorption of water by the wood. The following description will aid a handy man to make it. The latch is slides back and forth and locks in f when the gate is closed. It is connected by a pin with b, which extends above the gate, where it forms a handle and is connected to the gate below at c. A spring, d, of stout wood, fastened below to the same point of the gate as b is fastened. A piece of wood, e, hollow on one side of the handle b to move back and forth in.

Nails may be used for fastening the various parts to the gate, but screws are preferable except where there is motion. In such cases short bolts should be used.

The lower end of the spring at c should have a large staple driven over it and a nail through it to prevent both cracking and slipping. It may be a good plan on some gates where the panels are not too far apart to have a second staple in the part e, either in the lower panel, or if the panel is narrow, in the one above.

This gate latch has been found to work very satisfactorily and to last a considerable time where the wood has been oiled well at first and once or twice a year afterward.—Orange Judd Farmer.

NOTES FROM THE HOG LOT.

Fine hair denotes good quality in a pig nearly as much as in a horse. Don't feed the young pigs intended for breeding purposes altogether on corn.

Ashes have good effect on the pigs' digestion. Besides killing intestinal worms.

A hog that can be fattened while young will be the most profitable one to breed.

It is well to have a trough in the hoghouse in which are kept wood ashes, salt and copperas.

A hog needs all his time to make pork and should not be expected to spend any moments fighting flies.

Hogs require attention regardless of condition, age or sex, but the management of the brood sow is the surest test of the breeder's skill.

A Medical Expert.

Once, when walking in a suburban district, Dr. Samsen Gemmett, one of Glasgow's best known medical professors, happened upon a staid-looking policeman who was strenuously endeavoring to support a youth in the throes of an epileptic seizure. "In my blindest moments," remarked the professor when relating the incident in his class, "I suggested that it might be better to permit the poor fellow to struggle on the 'pavement,' but with a disdained gesture the man in blue repelled the interference by intimating that he had recently won a first class certificate at an ambulance class!"—Westminster Gazette.

Most Likely.

Tommy—Papa, a river is fed by small streams, isn't it?

Papa—Yes, my son.

Tommy—Then I s'pose that is what makes its mouth water, isn't it?—Exchange.

OUR VERY BEST

O.V.B. PAINT

Why We Sell It:

Because it's a paint that you will buy again after the first time. The more durable a paint is, the longer it looks well. To paint with O. V. B. "all that's best in a paint," means just the difference between paying for paint troubles and avoiding them. O. V. B.'s pure lead and zinc, pure colors and dryers, pure linseed oil, are uniformly mixed in high power mills. The mixture sets into a SOLID COAT OF METAL on your house. This is why O. V. B. paint outwears ordinary adulterated paint.

We want YOU to KNOW O. V. B. BEFORE you paint. Come in today, if you can. Let our color cards and suggestions help pick out your shade combinations.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

Regular meeting April 11th. Meeting called to order by Worthy Master Heller, 23 members present. One application received for membership and one member reinstated. Secretary Mrs. Fred Heller resigned owing to poor health, and unable to attend regular, brother R. W. Mead was elected to fill vacancy. Two captains were chosen to render program each meeting, and get new members, etc. essays, recitations, debates etc. scoring so many points each—at the end of three months the losers to furnish banquet. Brother Carl Heller and Sister Wright were chosen captains. Lecture hour was taken up with readings and recitations, receipts $3.50. There will be a dance Friday evening, April 17th, in charge of Hugh Russell. Next meeting April 25, 7 p.m. Visitors welcome.

THEATRICAL

The special attraction at the Majestic for this week Wednesday and Thursday is a four reel production by the Ambrosia Film Co. entitled "Satan."

The first part is taken from the famous poem, "Paradise Lost" by Milton. The pictures are very true to the version of Milton, showing the battle between good and evil in heaven; also depicting the fall of Satan and his monarchical power which he assumes here on earth; the fall of Adam and Eve and Cain as his next victim and so on until he has complete control of the earth.

Part two is entitled "Masseiah" taken from the work of Clapton. This part treats on a part of the life of Christ, showing the temptation of Christ and showing the part Satan played in the death of the Savior. The Resurrection and Ascension of Christ are also beautifully depicted.

Part three is taken from later days and shows the more modern ways in which Satan has tried to overcome the Christ truth, using "Alcohol" as the subject.

Part four is laid in the present day scenes, using Lust, Envy, Greed and Murder as the subjects and weapons Satan uses against the good. These pictures are creating a very wide interest. They are lectured throughout and we can assure you will not be sorry you saw them.

Mr. Miles has secured this picture for two days, Wednesday and Thursday nights of this week. Admission, 10c and 15c.

Eggs for Hatching.

Eight varieties of thoroughbred poultry—Barré Plymouth Rocks, White Plymouth Rocks, Anconas, White Wyandottes, Light Brahmas, Golden Wyandottes, S. C. White Leghorns, R. C. First Trip to Beavers.

The Str. City of Boyne made the first trip of the season to Beaver Island Tuesday. Capt. Wenner reports very little ice in the lake between here and the islands, but that in the harbor at St. James it was still full of ice. Thirty-three pouches of mail were taken over, besides a number of passengers.

The opening session of the conference will be a banquet on Friday evening. On Saturday there will be sessions of the conference both forenoon and afternoon, the delegates returning to their homes Saturday evening. Next week's issue will contain a complete conference program.

GONSER'S NEW VARIETY STORE

Opening Day - Saturday, April 18

It has taken considerable hustling on our part to be able to have our Opening Day on April 18, but we had announced we would open on this date and we are bound to do as we advertised. We want the people of Charlevoix and vicinity to visit our store on this date. You will find it different than the average 5 and 10c stores you have been in. The display of goods are all new, and the prices are set allowing us but a small margin of profit. You get the benefit—we believe—in quick sales and small profits.

Saturday Special

Instead of having the usual opening and giving away souvenirs, we are going to do something entirely different. Everyone knows a bargain when they see it. If you can buy a 50c article for 10c, you will appreciate it more than you would a small gift. This is what we are going to do Opening Day. Store open at 8:00 a. m.

For Opening Day only, choice of a 10, 12 or 14 quart Granite Dish Pan for..... 10c

But one to a family. Don't send the children unless accompanied by a written note. We want YOU to visit the store, and this is a special inducement for you to take the time to do so.

Visit our store on Opening Day. There are hundred of articles on display that will interest you. We want you to know what we have in the store, and the only way is for you to visit us and see the goods we have in stock.

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt. Jefferson Locke insinuates himself into the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Tolson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are hurrying to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father calls him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Runnels, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taboga, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

The girl tells him her name is "Chiquita." He learns later that that means only "little one." Kirk begins his work.

Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Wellar) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries in vain in Panama to learn something of Chiquita and meets Alfarez again.

Kirk wins the capital prize, $50,000, in the lottery. He and Runnels make plans for advancement. The Cortlandts, having turned from the older Alfarez, intend to make Senor Garavel, a banker, president of Panama.

Alfarez's son, Kirk's foe, is engaged to Gertruda, Garavel's daughter. She is Kirk's "Chiquita." He meets her again at the opera through Mrs. Cortlandt's aid. Panama Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

Kirk makes love to Chiquita. Edith Cortlandt, infatuated with Kirk, goes riding with him frequently.

She avows her love for him. Their ride and talk are interrupted by her husband. Kirk asks Garavel for his daughter's hand. The banker wishes her to marry Alfarez to advance his own ambitions. Clifford, a man from the States, asks Runnels about Kirk.

Kirk receives permission to call on Chiquita. Young Alfarez challenges him to a duel. Kirk laughs at him. Mrs. Cortlandt asks Kirk to call on her.

Cortlandt overhears his wife make love to Kirk, who tells her he loves and is engaged to Gertruda. Prompted by Mrs. Cortlandt, Garavel forbids Kirk to call on his daughter.

Kirk manages to see Chiquita. She loves him, but will obey her father. Mrs. Cortlandt blocks Kirk's and Runnels' path. Detective Williams seeks Kirk, known to him as Locke or Wellar.

During an intermission between dances at a ball Chiquita and Kirk are married, the girl returning immediately to her father's side.

CHAPTER XXII.—
Checkmate

ANTHONY had no partner for the eighth dance and was very glad of it, for he could not have carried off the necessary small talk. As it was, he felt that his excitement must be patent to those around him now that the time had come.

As the music ceased and the dancers came pouring out into the cool night air Runnels approached with his wife. Together they strolled off through the crowd, disappearing in the direction of the north wing of the hotel.

It seemed ages before the orchestra struck up. Kirk began to fear that something had happened to the musicians. He edged closer to the door and searched out Chiquita with his eyes. There she was seated with her father, Colonel Ward from Gatun and some high officer or other—probably an admiral.

Kirk heard the orchestra leader tap his music stand; then as the first strains of the waltz floated forth he stepped into the ballroom and made toward his sweetheart. All at once he found that his brain was clear, his heart beats measured.

Of course she saw him coming. She had waited all the long evening for this moment. He saw her hand flutter nervously to her throat; then as he paused before her she rose without a word. His arm encircled her waist, her little gold palm dropped into his as lightly as a snowflake, and they glided away together. He found himself whispering her name over and over again passionately.

"Why—why did you do this, senior?" she protested faintly. "It is very hard for me."

"It is the last time I shall ever hold you—this way."

She faltered, her breath caught. "Please! My father is looking. Ramon!"

"Have you agreed to marry him?"

"Yes—no, no! Oh, I have prayed to the Virgin every hour. I cannot, and yet I must. See! I cannot wait, senior; I have stepped upon you. Don't—squeeze—me—no!" she exclaimed. "Let us go out on the porch."

"No, no! We must remain in my father's sight. Will you take me to my seat?"

"No. I want you to listen carefully to what I'm going to say and be calm. He spoke low and earnestly.

"Don't stop dancing now, when I tell you. Chiquita dear, you must marry me tonight, right away! I have arranged everything. No, don't look up at me until I have finished. Try to smile. I've planned it all out and everything is in readiness. I have a room just around the corner, of the veranda; there's a judge waiting for us, and Runnels and his wife."

"You are mad!" she gasped.

"No, no. We'll slip through one of the French windows, and we'll be back again before they miss us. Nobody will know. I tell you they're waiting. If we are missed they'll think—it doesn't matter what they think, you'll be my wife, and Ramon can't marry you then. We'll say nothing about it until your father is elected president."

"Senior, one cannot be married in a moment. I am Catholic—the banis!"

"I've thought of all that, but a civil marriage is binding. We'll have the religious ceremony afterward; meanwhile this will stop Ramon, at least. I promise not to see you again until you send for me—until your father's hopes are realized. You may wait as long as you wish, and nobody will know. They tricked you, Chiquita, dear; I can't explain, but it wasn't all politics; by my means. Oh, girl! Don't you understand? I love you—love you! It's our only chance!" The words were tumbling from his lips incoherently; he was pleading as if for his life, while she clung to him to support herself. Through it all their feet moved rhythmically, their bodies swayed to the cadences of the waltz as they circled the ballroom.

He knew it was her lifelong loyalty, her traditional sense of obedience that made her hesitate.

"Mother of God!" she exclaimed faintly. "Is it that I am dreaming?"

"They are waiting for us; the dance is half over already. I love you—better than all the world. Do you remember two nights ago? You kissed me then, and—!—can't live without you. We'll go away together, you and I, through all the world—just we two."

She gave a hysterical, clanking sob that was half a sigh. Then her eyes flashed upward to his—they were wide and bright and shining—her lips were parted, her body was lithe and full of life. She slipped from his embrace, whispering:

"Yes, yes! Quickly, senior!" And the next instant they were out upon the wide gallery with the dance behind them. "Hurree, hurree, or they will follow!"

Together they fled along the north wing of the hotel. The girl was panting, with one hand held to her bare throat. But she ran like a fawn.

"Here!" He swung her around the corner and rushed sharply at a door.

"Quickly! Quickly!" she moaned. "For the love of—"

With terrific force the door was fairly jerked from its hinges and slammed to behind them. The next moment Allan's big body was leaning against it, as if the wall were about to fall inward upon him. Runnels leaped forward with an exclamation; his wife stood staring, her face as white as snow. With them was the central gray haired judge from Colon, whom Kirk had met at the Wayfarers' club on the night of his arrival.

"You made it!" Runnels cried triumphantly.

"Miss Garavel!" his wife echoed. "Thank heaven you came!"

"Quick, the music will stop! Judge, this is Miss Garavel. You must marry us just as fast as you can."

"I presume you consent?" the judge asked.

"I—I want to be happy," she said simply.

"You understand, Judge, she's of age—so am I. They want to force her to marry a man she doesn't."

The muffled strains of music ceased. There came the faint clapping of hands.

"Madre de Dios!" Miss Garavel cried.

"We are too late!" She beat her little palms together in desperation. There was a breathless interval. Then the music began again, and to its throbbing measures the marriage ceremony was performed. As the last word was pronounced Mrs. Runnels burst into tears and hid her face against her husband's breast. Runnels himself held forth a shaking hand to Kirk, then the bride clung to him upon her shoulder.

"I know you will be happy now, Mrs. Anthony," he said.

With an incoherent cry of delight Kirk folded his wife in his arms, and she kissed him before them all.

"Come, we must get back. The music has stopped again!" Kirk turned to the judge. "Nothing is to be said until Miss Gar—Mrs. Anthony gives the word, you understand? I can't thank you all half enough. Now, Allan, see if the coast is clear, quickly!" He was still in a panic, for there yet remained a chance of discovery and ruin. One more instant of suspense, then the two stepped out. The door closed softly behind them, and they strolled around the corner of the north wing and into the crowd. It had all happened so quickly that even yet they were dazed and disbelieving.

"My wife!" Kirk whispered, while a tremendous rush of emotion swept over him. She trembled in answer like a wind shaken leaf. "You're mine, Chiquita! They can't take you away. His voice broke.

"I am still dreaming. What have I done? Oh—they will know! In my face they will read the truth. But I do not care. Senior, I do not know if some time you will be sorry for this action, but I shall never cease loving you. I prayed hourly to the Blessed Virgin, and she heard. Now, I shall perish until you come."

"When you give me leave—through steel and stone, through fire and water."

"Quick! For the one time call me that!" She hesitated, blushing vividly. "I will hear it in my dreams."

"My wife!" he whispered tenderly.

"Ho! Chiquita! min!" her father cried as they came to him. "There you are then. I have missed you." His eyes smoldered as he gazed suspiciously at Kirk.

"Ah, but I was too warm," she said hastily. "Yonder by the door we have been standing in the night breeze. And where is Ramon?"

"He is looking for you."

"One would think him a jealous husband already," she exclaimed lightly. Then extending her hand coolly to Kirk, "I thank you, senior, for this dance."

Her husband bowed. "I shall not soon forget it." To the father he added in a low voice: "I thank you also for your courtesy. We have been discussing your daughter's marriage during the dance, and it is my greatest hope that she will never regret it."

The banker acknowledged the words ceremoniously. "Love is a thing that comes and goes. Marriage alone can bind it. Some day you will thank me, and then perhaps you will honor our house again, eh?"

"I shall be happy to come whenever you wish." As he walked away the banker said, with relief:

"By Jove! He is proud—almost like a Spaniard."

Kirk moved through the crowd as if in a trance, but he was beginning to realize the truth now. It surged over him in great waves of gladness. He dared not shout his news aloud. What luck was his! The world was made for him. There was no such thing as adversity or failure. Chiquita was his wife! All his hindrances might as well be put for him as he cared.

In the midst of his rhapsody he heard a bellboy speaking his name and smiled at him faintly as he turned away. But the negro followed him persistently, saying something about a letter.

"It is important, sir."

"Very well." He opened the envelope and pretended to read, but in reality the sheet held nothing for him but a startling, mischievous face with puffy eyes. He must have stood staring uselessly at it for several seconds. Then the dancing visions faded and the servant stood out plainly:

Williams, detective, St. Louis, arrived at Colon this evening on the Prince Joachim. You'd better take it on the run.

It was written upon Tivoli paper, but the hand was strange, and it was not signed.

THEATRICAL

While this is, undoubtedly, the age for enormous expenditures of money in great amusement enterprises, still, it must be admitted, the actual outlay for the photoplay presentation of the most wonderful motion picture film achievement ever produced, called "Les Miserables," taken from the story of Victor Hugo's master creation of that name, and which is to be presented in this city for two nights, commencing April 23rd, at the Majestic, exceeds any other in expense of production. When it is understood that the cost for the production of "Les Miserables" was over 500,000 fr., or in American money $100,000, some idea of the magnitude of this photoplay may be gained. It is in nine reels and will hold spellbound an audience for over two hours and fifteen minutes.

The cast of players interpreting the different characters in this great photoplay drama were selected from all the Parisian theatres with the greatest care, not only as to the dramatic ability but their personal fitness to the characters as well.

"Les Miserables" had nine weeks of unprecedented success at the Orchestra Hall, Chicago, and is enjoying similar successes in Boston,
 New York, Philadelphia and other large cities.

There has been considerable discussion in this country regarding the correct pronunciation of the words "Les Miserables." They should be pronounced according to the strict French "Lais Mis-rah-sah-ble," with the accent on the antepenultimate as "rah."

Of course, the pronunciation has nothing to do with the magnitude of the photoplay of "Les Miserables" in its strict sense, but it is a well known fact that American audiences are anxious to be on the correct side of a pronunciation, especially where a foreign word or term is brought into use.

Violated Local Option Law.

Frank Nichols, Wm. Fischer, and following Saturday Dr. Beaver was also arrested on the same charge, and upon examination, was found

LINTON FOR GOVERNOR

Well Known Saginaw Citizen Would Prove Strong Republican Candidate.

From Saginaw as well as from various other parts of the state, the name of Hon. W. S. Linton is being talked of as the logical candidate of the Republican party for Governor.

Mr. Linton, it is believed by many, can unite all factions of the Republican party. He is a man of the strictest integrity, has a national and statewide reputation and is thoroughly conversant with state affairs and has made one of the most successful and able officials in every office he has ever held.

Mr. Linton has always been a Republican and his nomination would do more to unite the party throughout the state than any other candidate so far suggested.

landt found her a few moments later. He dropped into the empty chair beside her, saying:

"Hello! Thought you had this with Anthony?"

"What's the trouble?"

"There is no trouble." She began to rock, while he studied her profile; then, conscious of his look, she inquired, "Aren't you dancing?"

"No, just looking on, as usual. I prefer to watch. You have broken your fun, it seems." He flung his cigarette into the darkness and, reaching out, took the fan from her hand. She saw that his lips were drawn back in a peculiar smile.

"Well! Is that so strange?" she answered sharply. "You seem— She broke off and looked deliberately away from him.

"Row, eh?" he inquired softly.

She could barely hold back her hatred of the man. He had worked powerfully upon her nerves of late, and she was half hysterical.

"Why do you take pleasure in annoying me?" she cried. "What all you these last few weeks? I can't stand it—I won't!"

"Oh! Pardon! One quarrel an evening is enough. I should have known better. Too bad you and he don't hit it off better. He likes me. He's giving me a party after the dance, a sort of gratitude affair. A delicate way to acknowledge a debt, eh?"

"You know very well it is Rannels' doing," she said.

"Oh, there are six of them in it altogether, but Anthony originated the little surprise. It's intended for you, of course."

"I don't see it. Are you going?"

"I accepted. Funny spectacle, eh? Me the guest of—Anthony?"

There was a trace of anxiety in her voice as she answered, and though she spoke carelessly, she did not meet his eyes.

"I'd rather you'd make an excuse. I'll have to go home alone, you know." He raised his brows mockingly. "My dear! I'm to be the honored guest!"

"Suit yourself, of course."

A marine officer approached, mopping his face, and engaged her in conversation, whereupon Cortlandt rose, laughing and strolled away through the crowd that came eddying forth from the ballroom.

Meanwhile Kirk had found Rannels, who was looking for him, eager to express his congratulations and to discuss their exploit in detail.

Now that he had someone to whom Kirk could talk freely, he let himself go, and he was deep in conversation when Stephen Cortlandt strolled up and stopped for an instant to say:

"Quite a lively party, isn't it?"

Kirk noticed how sallow he had grown in the past few months and how he had fallen off in weight. He looked older too. His cheeks had sunk in until they outlined his jaws sharply. He seemed far from well.

A nervous twitching of his fingers betokened the strain he had been under. He was quite as immaculate, polished and collected as usual, however.

"How is our little song coming on?" he asked.

"Fine! Everything is ready," said Rannels. "You won't expect an elaborate layout. It's mostly cold storage, you know, but we'll at least be able to quench our thirst at the Central."

"That's really coming off? I was afraid you'd forgotten it!" Cortlandt cast a curious glance at Kirk, who exclaimed heartily:

"Well, hardly! Then, as their prospective guest moved off, "What a strange remark!"

"Yes," said Rannels, "he's a queer fellow; but, then, you know, he's about as emotional as a pond."

CHAPTER XXIII.

The Crash.

KIRK had no further chance of speaking with his wife, for after the dance she was whisked away, leaving him nothing but the memory of an adoring, blissful glance as she passed. With Rannels and Cortlandt and the rest he was driven to the Hotel Central, where they found a very attractive table set in a private dining room. It was a lively party, and Kirk's secret elation enabled him to play the part of host with unforced geniality. The others joined him in a hearty effort to show their guest the high regard in which they held him, and Kirk did not enjoy himself as he had entirely his own fault.

Toward Kirk, however, he preserved a peculiar attitude, which only the young man's self absorption prevented him from noticing. If he had been less judgmental he must have felt the unnatural aloofness of the other man's bearing. But even had he done so he would doubtless have attributed it to Cortlandt's well recognized frigidity.

At the propitious moment Rannels, who had reluctantly agreed to share the social responsibility, made a little speech, explaining that he and his boys had been sensible from the first of their guest's interest in them and were deeply grateful for it. They now tendered him a token of their regard in a form which he could preserve.

He handed a handsome loving cup to Cortlandt, who thanked him appropriately, then, waited courteously for the party to break up. But Anthony rose, saying:

"I simply have to say a word on my own account, fellows, for I owe Mr. Cortlandt more than any of you."

The object of these remarks shot a swift, questioning glance from his stony eyes and raised a hand as if to check him. But Kirk ran on unheeding:

"I want to thank him before all of you for what he has done for me personally. When I landed in Panama I got into trouble of the worst sort, and Mr. Cortlandt got me out. He was my last bond, he put me up at his hotel, gave me clothes and paid my way until I got started. I was a stranger, mind you, but he's been just like one of my own people, and if I ever succeed in doing anything really worth while it will be due to the start he gave me."

Though the words were commonplace enough, they carried a sincere message, and Cortlandt saw by the faces about him that the others were pleased. His own gaunt features turned more sallow than ever. The memory of what he had heard on the porch of his own house a few afternoons ago, of what he had seen at other times, of his wife's telltale behavior on this very evening, swept over him, fanning anew the sullen emotions he had cherished all these months. How far would this fellow dare to go, he wondered? He dropped his eyes to hide the fury in them.

"I want to give you a little remembrance of my own," Anthony was speaking directly to him. "It isn't much, but it means a good deal to me, and I hope it will have some sort of personal association for you. Mr. Cortlandt," he drew from his pocket a pouch-case and took from it a very handsome thin Swiss watch with the letters "S. C." artfully enameled upon the back.

Cortlandt accepted the gift mechanically; then, as he touched his flesh, a sudden color mounted to his cheeks, only to recede, leaving them bloodless again.

"I really didn't expect this," he began slowly as he rose. "Anthony exaggerates; he is too kind. But since he has chosen to publicly call attention to our relations, I will confess that what he tells you is all true. Through my assistance, partly, at any rate—he has made a man of himself. He has been welcome at my house, at my table; he has come and gone as he pleased, like one of the family, you might say. But those are little things; they count for nothing." His tone gripped his hearers, and Anthony stirred uneasily, thinking this an old way of accepting a gift.

Unclasping his long white fingers, Cortlandt held up the watch to public view.

"In payment for my year friendship he has given me this magnificent thing of gold and jewels, the finest I ever saw. I never counted upon such gratitude. It is too much, and yet a man cannot refuse the gift of his friend and not seem ungrateful, can he? Somewhere in the Orient they have a custom of exchanging gifts. No man may accept a thing of value without making adequate return, and it is always struck me as a wise practice."

He turned full upon Kirk for the first time since he had begun speaking, and his voice rose a tone as he said, "I can't let the obligation rest entirely upon me. We have been friends, Anthony, and I am going to give you something in return, which I have prized highly. It would be counted of great value by some." Once more he paused and drew his lips back in that grimace of mockery. "It is this—I am going to give you my wife. You have had her from the first, and now she's yours."

For one frightful moment there was no sound; even the man's breathing was hushed, and they sat stark, jawed, stunned, half inclined to believe this some hideous, incredible jest. Cortlandt turned away glowingly.

Kirk was the last to recover his powers, but when they did revive they came with a prodigious rush. He plunged upward out of his chair with a cry like a wounded animal, and the others rose with him. The table rocked, something smashed, a chair was hurled backward. The room broke into instant turmoil. Kirk felt limbs upon him, and then went blind with fury, struggling in a passion too strong for coherent speech. He was engulfed in chaos. He felt things break beneath his touch, felt bodies give way before him.

How or when Kirk left the room he never knew. Eventually he found himself plumed to his chair, with Rannels' white face close against his own and other hands upon his arms. His first frenzy quickly gave way to a sickening horror.

"It's a lie! The man's crazy!" he cried hoarsely; then, as his companions drew away from him, he rose to his feet. "Why are you looking at me like that? I tell you it's a d—d lie! I never!"

Rannels turned to the table and with shaking hand put a glass to his lips and gulped its contents. Wade and Kimble exchanged glances, then, avoiding each other's eyes, took their hats from the hooks behind them.

"Wait! Letting him back?" Kirk mumbled. "I'll get him and make him say it's a lie." But still no one answered, no one looked at him. "God! You don't believe it?"

"I'm getting home, fellows. I'm kind of sick," Kimble said. One of the others murmured unintelligibly, and, wetting a napkin, bowed up his hand, which was bleeding. They continued to watch Kirk as if fearful of some insane action; yet they refused to meet his eyes squarely. There was no sympathy in their faces.

The knowledge of what these actions meant came to him slowly. Was it possible that his friends believed this incredible accusation? As he began to collect himself he saw his plight more clearly. His first thought had been that Cortlandt was insane, but the man's actions were not those of a madman. No! He actually believed—and these fellows also. He wanted to shout his innocence at them, to beat it into their heads.

One by one they took their hats and went out, mumbled goodnight to one another, as if intending to go home singly in order to avoid all discussion of this thing that had fallen among them. Rannels alone remained.

"You don't believe it, do you?" Anthony asked in a shrill voice.

"I think I do." There was a miserable silence, and then: "It isn't the thing itself, you know, so much as the rotten-understanding advantage you took. If he'd been a stranger, now—honestly, isn't it true?"

Kirk shook his head listlessly. "I wouldn't lie to you."

Rannels drew a deep breath. "Oh, come, now, the man must have known what he was saying. Men don't do things like that on suspicion."

"He misunderstood our friendship," said Kirk heavily, then roused himself for a last plea. "Look here," he cried. "You know Cortlandt, and you know me. The man was insanely jealous. I know it sounds weak, but it's the truth, and it's all I can say. I'll go mad if you doubt me. And tonight of all!"

He broke off sharply. "My God! I'd forgotten that I'm married! Suppose Cortlandt hears of this! Anthony seized his temples in despair."

Rannels took a sudden illogical decision. He never knew exactly what had influenced him, but his whole past knowledge surged up in him with a force that he could not resist. He laid his hand on Kirk's shoulder. "Take it easy, old man," he said. "I believe you. I've always known that they didn't get along together, though—well, I won't try to understand it. He may not do anything further, and these fellows won't mention what happened here. They can't."

"Women are apt to be jealous, aren't they, Rannels? What do you suppose she'd do?"

"Don't worry about that. I'm thinking about Cortlandt. If he finds out he's mistaken what will he do?"

"He'll have to find out. I'm going to tell him. His wife will tell him. Good God! Do you see what an awful light it puts me in? You don't doubt me, do you really, old man?"

"No, but what a night this has been! It seems a year old. Come along, now. You must get out of here. You must turn in. The waiters are wondering what this row is about. I think we'd better take a walk."

In passing through the deserted lobby of the hotel they saw Clifford idling about. But they were too much absorbed to wonder what had kept him up so late. By the clock across the plaza they saw it was two hours after midnight, as they stepped into the street. Then, finding no coaches in sight, they set out to walk toward Aurora, both badly in need of the open air.

A moment later Clifford followed them, taking pains to keep at a distance.

Now that the full import of Cortlandt's accusation had sunk into his mind, Kirk lapsed into a mood of sullen bitterness. He said little, but his set face worried his companion, who was loath to bid him good night even when they were close to the Tyrrell. After they had parted Rannels was upon the point of going back and offering to spend the night with him, but thought better of it.

Instead of passing through the office Kirk mounted to the porch of the Tyrrell and entered his room from the outside, as he and Clifford had done earlier that evening. He found Allan waiting and greeting with a desire to gossip, but cut him short.

"Get my street clothes. I'm going out," he tore the white tie from his throat as if he were choking him. "I've been hurt, Allan. I can't explain, for you wouldn't understand. But I've been hurt—come along."

The negro's lips drew apart in an expression of apellie ferocity, and he began to chatter threats of vengeance, to which Kirk paid little heed. A few moments later they went but quietly, and together they took the rock road down toward the city, the one silent and desperate, the other whirling like a bomb bearing a scud.

Edith Cortlandt did not retire immediately upon her return from the ball. Her anger at Anthony's behavior kept her wakeful, and the night had turned off so dead and humid that sleep was in any case a doubtful possibility.

She was still sitting in her room at a late hour when she heard the outside door close and Cortlandt's footsteps mounting the stairs. She was glad he had his own room and never entered hers at such an hour, for even to talk with him in her present state of mind and body would have been more than she could bear.

She was unreasonably annoyed therefore, when he came boldly into her chamber without even knocking. "Rather late for good night," she said coolly.

"I've just come from Anthony's sup-

His color made her look round sharply. She saw that his linen, ordinarily stiff and immaculate, was sodden and crumpled, his collar limp, his forehead glistening with drops of moisture.

"What all you, Stephen?" she cried. "Have you been drinking?"

"No. I didn't drink much. I brought you something."

He took the loving cup from its damask bag and set it upon the table. "They gave me this."

"And this too." He tossed the watch with its enameled monogram into her lap.

"Ah! That's very handsome."

"Yes. I thought you'd like it. It's from Anthony." He laughed, then shuddered.

"Why, you seem excited over these souvenirs. You surely expected—"

He broke in—n thing he rarely did while she was speaking:

"Anthony made a speech when he gave it to me—a very nice speech, full of friendship and love and gratitude." He repeated Kirk's words as he remembered them. "What do you think of that?"

Mrs. Cortlandt's eyes widened. This was not the man she knew. At this moment he was actually insistent, almost overbearing, and he was regarding her with that same ironical sneer that had roused her anger earlier in the evening.

He began to chuckle, apparently without reason—his shoulders shook feebly at first, then more violently. His flat chest heaved, and he blurted out as if from physical weakness, "It was alarming, and she rose, staring at him, and he shook in uncontrollable hysteria, but his eyes were bright and watchful."

"Oh, I—I—back it all in—I let him pour the nose around his own neck and tie the knot. Then I hung him!"

His convulsive giggling was terrible, forecasting, as it did, his immediate breakdown.

"Stephen!" she exclaimed, in a shocked tone, convinced that his mind was going. "You are ill. You need a doctor. I will call Jooce!" She laid her hand on his arm. "Won't you go to your room and let me call a doctor?"

"Not yet. Wait! He told them what I had done for him. I acknowledged it all and made them hear it from my lips too. Then—" He paused, and she steeled herself to witness another spectacle of his pitiable loss of self control. But instead he grew icy and corpse-like, with lips drawn back in a grin.

"I played with him the way you have played with me. 'Thank!'"

Her face went suddenly ashen.

"Well, I told him before them all that I intended to give him something in return, and I did—I gave him—"

"God! You didn't tell him that?"

"You didn't say that before these men! Oh, he!" She shrank back, driving the gauzy silk robe closer about her breast. Then she rushed to sudden action. Seizing him by the shoulders she shook him roughly with far more than her natural strength, volcing furious words which neither of them understood.

"Oh, I did it," he declared. "He's yours now. You can have him. He's been your lover!"

"He's yours now. You can have him!"

She hung him away from her so violently that he nearly fell.

"It's a lie! You know it's a lie!"

"It's true. I'm so fond."

She beat her hands together distractedly. "What have you done? What will those men think? Listen! You must stop them quickly. Tell them it's not so!"

He seemed not to hear her. "I'm going away tomorrow," he said, "but I'll never divorce you, no matter what you do, and I won't let you divorce me either. No, no! Take him now if you want him, but you'll never be able to marry him until I'm gone. And I won't die soon—I promise you that. I'm going to live."

"You can't go!"

"There's a hint tomorrow."

"Don't you see you must stay and explain to those men? My God! They'll think you spoke the truth. They'll believe what you said."

"Of course they will," he chattered shrilly. "That's why I did it in that way. No matter what you or he or I can do or say now they'll believe it forever. It came to me like a flash of light, and I saw what it meant all in a minute. Do you understand what it means, eh? Listen! No matter how you behave they'll know. They won't say anything, but they'll know, and you can't stand that, can you?"

"You have no evidence."

"No? What about that night at Aurora? You were mad over the fellow then, but you didn't think I saw. That day I caught you together in the jungle—have you forgotten that? Didn't you think it strange that I should be the one to discover you? Oh, I pretended to be blind, but I followed you everywhere I could, and I kept my eyes open."

"You saw nothing, for there was nothing."

"I waited because I wasn't strong enough to revolt—until tonight. Oh, but tonight I was strong! Something gave me courage."

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to vouch for my sales if they were satisfied.

Masonic Association of Petoskey to Erect a New $40,000 Edifice.

Petoskey is to have a new Masonic temple. This was finally decided at a meeting last week of the Masonic association, an incorporated body, composed of representatives of the six Masonic bodies in that city.

The committee reported the purchase of the Chrysler property on Petoskey street. There is to be nothing done toward actual building until next year, when early in the spring the erection of the new temple will be started. The association is now figuring on the construction of a $40,000 edifice, which will be a great credit to the town.

Victim of Hoodoo.

Mrs. George Root of Boyne City think she is the victim of a hoodoo. Last December she sprained her ankle. She had just recovered from this when she contracted pneumonia, and has been confined to the house until last Friday, when she started out to visit a friend when attacked by two dogs, tripping her feet from beneath her, causing her to suffer from a bad fall. She fell upon the dogs and was thrown several feet in the air, and struck the pavement, cutting her eye quite badly and bruising her arm and shoulder.

WORK OF THE MAIL CARRIERS

Report of Count and Weight for First Half of Present Month.

MANY PACKAGES ARE HANDLED

Charlevoix's Gray Coats Carry Heavy Loads Nearly Every Day.

Weight During Year on Present Basis Will Reach Many Thousand Pounds—Receipts for Past Fifteen Days.

During the first 15 days of April the clerks and carriers in the Charlevoix post office weighed in a total of 755 pounds of parcel post matter, according to the compilation of figures just made public by Postmaster T. George Finnican. This is regarded as a fair record for a city of 2500 inhabitants, although in many cities it has reached a larger amount and during the summer months will almost double this amount here at Charlevoix.

The total receipts for packages sent through the office for the period named was $28.85.

The test was inaugurated to show the exact extent that the parcel post was being used by the patrons of the office. The figures include every phase of the parcel post business as applied to the local office and Postmaster Finnican's figures are as follows:

Number of parcels received from other offices for delivery, 1404; number of parcels mailed at this office for local delivery, 47; total number of parcels for delivery, 1451.

Number of parcels delivered: General delivery and post office boxes, 197; by city carriers, 236; by rural carriers, 469; total, 902.

The number of parcels mailed at the Charlevoix post office during the fifteen days was 300, with receipts of $28.85, as follows:

Local zone, 47, $2.63

First zone, 31, $1.12

Second zone, 31, $1.12

Third zone, 28, $1.00

Fourth zone, 28, $1.00

Fifth zone, 21, $1.00

Sixth zone, 11, $1.34

Seventh zone, 7, $1.31

Eighth zone, 7, $1.31

Total, 300, $28.85

Total number of parcels handled incoming and outgoing, 1751.

This number of packages on the same basis represent a year's parcel post business through the local post office of 7200 pieces handled and receipts of $902.10.

A separate count is now being made by the rural carriers which will cover a period of two months and much other data regarding the parcel post has been called for by the general post office department.

FIRST OF THE SEASON

Forerunner of Shortcakes Made Its Appearance Last Week.

The first strawberry made its appearance in the Charlevoix market last week. Ordinarily this specimen comes a day or two before Easter and peeps out of the box to tease the appetite of the man who either has a full pocketbook or stands in the good graces of his grocer. This year the first strawberry was accompanied by several of his red cheeked fellows and, as they had been reared in southern latitudes, they crunched down in their receptacle to avoid the chill of the northern climate. The forerunner of shortcakes seems to be of an unusually sweet disposition this year, considering the long journey taken to reach Charlevoix and the price demanded after reaching here. The question of price of the first strawberry is always a matter of confidence between the grocer and the purchaser, although it is declared to be low enough, considering the season.

LOST FIRST GAME

Charlevoix H. S. Ball Team Defeated in Opening Game Last Friday.

Charlevoix high school baseball team lost the first game of the season Friday to Petoskey by a score of 12 to 9. The two teams were about evenly matched, with Petoskey a shade to the good in batting. The home team was in the lead up to the seventh inning, when by pulling together Petoskey took the lead.

Reed of Petoskey pitched a fine game, allowing but four hits. He passed four men and hit Poole, placing five men on first base, of whom only two were allowed to score. See of Charlevoix was rather wild, passing eight men and hitting four more. He allowed but six hits. See struck out seven men and Reed eight.

The locals feel far from discouraged at the result of the opener and are busy doing double practice in preparation for the next game.

HAS REMARKABLE TALENT

Miss Mildred Eckinger a Genius in Imitating the Sounds of a Violin.

Miss Mildred Eckinger, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. J. Eckinger of this city, has been receiving considerable publicity through the state papers lately, commenting on her marvelous ability as an imitator of a violin.

Miss Eckinger places her upper teeth firmly upon her lower lip and forces the sound of the violin from her throat. Hundreds of people have heard her and consider her a marvel. She has exhibited her remarkable talent only on social occasions and most flattering opinions are expressed concerning not only her talent but the grace and modesty which characterizes her appearance.

It is said that some time ago she was humming to herself and her father, who heard her, chanced to mention that it sounded like a violin. Since then she has practiced until she can produce an almost perfect imitation of the violin.

SHAKESPEARE CLUB

Election of Officers Held at Final Meeting of Year Monday Evening.

The executive committee of the Shakespeare Club served an "English tea" at the Nicholls home Monday evening. Mrs. A. F. Bridge as hostess. The meeting was the last one of the year and officers were elected for the coming year as follows:

President—Mrs. B. R. Armstrong.
Vice-President—Mrs. George W. Priest.

Secretary—Mrs. J. S. Baker.
Various kinds of amusements were indulged in during the evening, one being the editing of a newspaper, the different departments being handled by someone among the party. From what can be learned, the evening was a most enjoyable one.

STARTS DAILY TRIPS

Steamer City of Boyne Resumes Daily Trip to Boyne City.

The Steamer City of Boyne started on her daily trips between this port and Boyne City Wednesday morning. MANY BOYS IN ATTENDANCE

Y. M. C. A. Older Boys Conference Banquet an Enjoyable Event.

Many Interesting and Well Written Papers Read and Discussed—Doing Good Work.

The first annual county banquet of the Y. M. C. A. Older Boys Conference held at the M. E. church last Friday evening and Saturday brought a large number of boys to the city from East Jordan, Walloon Lake, Boyne City and other points.

After having registered, the delegates had an opportunity to get acquainted, and about 7 o'clock, with a large company of the business and professional men of this city, partook of a most appetizing banquet served by the ladies of the Methodist church.

A. B. Ball, county secretary, acted as toastmaster in the absence of A. L. Coulter and introduced the various speakers and musicians who participated in the program.

The address of welcome was made by Harold Usher of Charlevoix, who stated that he wanted the boys to feel at home, have a good time, but at the same time remember that the occasion was not one of merriment, but of hard work in behalf of the County Y. M. C. A.

Musical numbers were furnished by Ward A. French and the Sarasin brothers of Boyne City and Herbert Taggart and Perry Mason of Charlevoix. "Things Doing from October to May," the subject of a talk by Emory D. Pierce, gave him an opportunity to tell of some of the things accomplished by the Y. M. C. A. groups that have been meeting in various parts of the county. Victor Cross of East Jordan spoke on "A Democratic Athletic Program," telling many things about the association athletic program for the coming season. "The Y. M. C. A. as We See It" was a lively handle by Wilbur Lewis of the Maple Grove group.

Speakers from outside the county were Jas. E. Coad of Traverse City and J. A. VanDine of Kalamazoo.

The first business session was opened Saturday morning by a song service led by Ward French of Boyne City, followed by prayer by Rev. Mr. Duff. Then followed the reading of many nicely written papers by the delegates, followed by a general discussion in which all took part. Guy Duggan concluded the morning session with a talk on clean athletics. At the close of the morning session the delegates assembled on the library steps for the conference photograph.

The afternoon session of the conference opened at the Majestic theatre, where the delegates and the smaller boys of the city enjoyed the motion pictures of the Olympic games, which were last held at Stockholm, Sweden.

Going from the picture show to the church the boys listened to a very helpful talk by Supt. Boys' Secretary J. A. VanDine on "An Athlete Who Made Good." This was followed by Martin Leffer, who made a report of the committee on resolutions.

"We, the boys of Charlevoix county, assembled in our first annual conference, wish to express our appreciation."

"First, to the people of Charlevoix who so kindly opened their homes to us;

"Second, to the ladies of the Methodist church for the splendid banquet served;

"Third, to those who furnished the music for the conference;

"Fourth, to the Methodist church board for the use of the church building;

"Fifth, to C. V. Miles for his kindness in showing the pictures of the Olympic games;

"Sixth, to the County Press for the publicity given the conference."

Hum Starts Daily Runs.

The steamer Hum, newly painted, repaired and made seaworthy in every respect, started her daily trips between Charlevoix and East Jordan Monday morning.

Captain George Jepson, who will have charge of the boat again this season, will do all in his power to make the boat a credit to Charlevoix, East Jordan, and stops along the lake.

MOVES TO NEW QUARTERS

Floyd S. Bettes Moves Stock of Electrical Goods to Crocker Building.

Floyd S. Bettes has moved his stock of electrical fixtures, etc., from the rooms in the I. O. O. F. building back of Frank Wood's barber shop to the Crocker building, formerly occupied by McHugh's 5 and 10 cent store.

The new location will give Mr. Bettes a fine opportunity to display his stock in a befitting manner. The store has been partitioned off, making an office and display room in the front part of the building, back of a fine, well-lighted workshop and in the rear several splendid rooms which will be occupied by Mr. Bettes and family as living quarters.

Charlevoix has long been in need of a store of this kind, where various kinds of electrical devices could be displayed to an advantage. The store when completed will be one of the best in this part of the state and Mr. Bettes' reputation as a first-class workman and his business-like dealings will, in our belief, greatly increase his now well-established business.

The L. O. T. M. M. will hold a baked goods sale Saturday afternoon, May 2nd, at Floyd Bettes' electric store, formerly the 5 and 10 cent store. Adv.1711

PRESENTED A FINE PICTURE

Supt. I. M. DeVoe and Wife Given a Farewell Reception.

Will Enter University of Michigan for Term of Special School Work at Close of Year.

Wednesday evening's Parent's association meeting and farewell reception to Superintendent and Mrs. I. M. DeVoe was well attended by the association members and friends, about a hundred being present.

President A. L. Fitch called the meeting to order and after a few brief remarks, the following program was rendered:

Song, Miss Irene Finnican.

Supt. I. M. DeVoe gave a short talk on the progress of the schools since he had been in charge, and made a number of valuable suggestions.

This was followed by a selection by the Sanodere Orchestra, which was heartily applauded.

The Topic "Success of Our Boys," by Mrs. J. L. Crane was well received and showed that a careful study of the subject had been made. Mrs. P. E. Vandermade followed with a recitation.

R. W. Kane responded for the school board, and in a few words told of the progress made by the schools under the superintendency of Supt. DeVoe.

At the close of the program Supt. and Mrs. DeVoe were presented with a beautiful picture of the Charlevoix Harbor and the pier. The presentation was made by A. L. Fitch, in behalf of the association and friends.

In his remarks he paid a splendid tribute to the work of Supt. DeVoe since he has had charge of the school. He also stated that in no small measure was the success and present standing of our schools due to his efforts and that his work had been appreciated by the citizens of Charlevoix.

Supt. DeVoe came to Charlevoix first in 1903 and later taught four years in the high school. Five years ago he was the choice of the school board for the position as superintendent. Since having charge of the schools he has proved himself a man able to superintend any public school and our citizens deeply regret his decision to sever his relations with our school at the close of the present year.

Mr. and Mrs. DeVoe will move to Ann Arbor, where he will enter the university, taking a special course in school work. They will be greatly missed in the civic, religious and social life of the city, where for the past nine years they have been actively associated with every move looking to the betterment of the community.

MUST FIGHT POTATO SCAB

Disease Has Already Gained Foothold in Eastern States.

NO PREVENTATIVE IS KNOWN

Problem a Very Serious One to the American Farmer.

Powdery Scab Does Not Attack Portion of the Potato Vines Above Ground—Grand Danger of Infection.

Powdery scab of the potato is a European disease which doubtless followed imported potatoes before the quarantine law went into effect. Every possible effort is being made to prevent this disease making inroads on our potato industry and the co-operation of all interested in this crop is much needed in dealing with this new potato malady.

Powdery scab does not attack the portion of the potato vines above the ground. It is primarily a disease of the young tubers, which develops as they mature in the ground. The disease is made apparent by small, slightly raised pimples and a slight discoloration of the surface. When cut open the infected areas appear faintly purplish and extend from approximately the outermost cells of the tuber toward the deeper layers.

The "powdery-scab" fungus, if the conditions are favorable, may eat large cavities into the immature potatoes. Besides consuming parts of the tubers it stunts their further growth and causes them to be deformed.

Last spring the U. S. department of agriculture imported 18 varieties of potatoes from Scotland for seed purposes. All were found to be infected with powdery scab and had to be condemned. Nine varieties were imported from England for similar purposes and were all infected in the same manner. The disease has been found on potatoes from Belgium, Norway and Sweden. On the potato's native haunts, South America, the disease has been found. It was reported in several provinces of Canada in 1913.

From Canada the disease has made some headway across the line into Northern Maine. This is the one place where there is real danger at present from the infection, but active measures are being taken to drive out the disease and to prevent the shipment of diseased potatoes to other sections.

The seriousness of powdery scab may be realized from the following statement by a conservative Canadian scientist:

"The disease should by no means be regarded lightly. Severe attacks occur when potatoes are planted year after year on infected land. Where this is practiced the result will be potatoes hardly superior in quality to those badly affected with the canker. This fact is worthy of notice, especially since, as in the case of canker, no preventive measures have proved of much value."

AMERICAN CONSUMERS OBJECT TO "SCABBY" POTATOES.

Any kind of scab or other injury that mars or deforms the potato tuber is a more serious handicap in the American markets than in those of some European countries, due to the fact that consumers abroad offer fewer objections to scabby potatoes than consumers in the United States. There is even a belief prevalent abroad that scab-biness is an indication of superior quality. In the United States when potatoes are put on the market scabby potatoes must be sorted out and therefore are of no use except for stock feed or the manufacture of starch. In Maine the price of scabby potatoes in the autumn of 1913 was 50 cents per barrel, while clean stock brought $1.50 per barrel. (Continued on page 9.)

Prizes for Alfalfa Fields.

The First National Bank of Boyne City offers $50 in gold to the farmers showing the best fields of alfalfa in September. These fields must be at least one acre in size and be of this year's sowing. The prizes consist of $50, $25 and $15 each. The judging will be done by men from Michigan Agricultural College.

GAVE DOCTORS ENOUGH TO BUY FARM--RESTORED IN ONE DAY

Battle Creek Man Finds New Life in First Dose of Wonderful Remedy.

Wm. N. Goss, 218 Aldrich St., Battle Creek, was troubled with stomach and intestinal ailments for years. Year after year he spent endless time and money with specialists and in expensive treatments that failed.

He took May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy at last and wonderful results followed. When he had taken only one bottle he wrote:

"I got more relief out of one bottle of your wonderful stomach remedy than I did in all my years of treating with specialists."

"If I had all the money I have spent for doctors' bills I could buy a farm. I will certainly recommend May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy."

Mr. Goss's experience is like those of thousands of others who have taken this remarkable remedy with such astonishing results. It is known everywhere because of its merit. The first dose proves May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of mucus accretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations and many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because obits success there are many imitations, so be cautious. Be sure it's May's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing among people they know—or send to George H. May, Mfg. Chemist, 154-156 Whiting street, Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments—and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

For sale by all druggists.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

Local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian tube. When this tube is inflamed, you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give one hundred dollars for any case of deafness caused by catarrh that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

EQUAL SUFFRAGE

There is to be a nation-wide demonstration in favor of equal suffrage on May 2. In Washington, D. C., a chorus of a thousand voices will sing on the East Capitol steps. All of the larger cities in Michigan will observe the day. The Lady Macabees have charge of the celebration in Big Rapids and Jane Adams will be the principal speaker. Detroit is to have an elaborate automobile parade. Grand Rapids suffrage workers are to get out a suffrage edition of the Grand Rapids Press. Clubs and granges are co-operating all over the state in favor of the cause.

One thousand saloons were wiped out of Illinois by the vote of women at the recent elections held there. No wonder the liquor men of the state fought the suffrage bill so desperately. The vote of the women more than doubled the dry counties of the state. No town that was dry voted wet. More than 50 per cent. of the state is now dry.

A former Michigan woman is the

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal

BY

REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt. Jefferson Locke, a detective, is injured in the college man's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alfarez, commandant of police. Allan's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Johnson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intriguing to make Alfarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father calls him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Rannels, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taboga, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

A girl tells him her name is "Chiquita." He learns later that that means only "little one." Kirk begins his work. Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Wellar) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries to win in Panama to learn something of Chiquita and meet Alfarez again.

Kirk wins the capital prize, $10,000, in the lottery. He and Rannels make plans for advancement. The Cortlandts, having turned from the older Alfarez, intend to make Senor Garavel, a banker, president of Panama.

Alfarez's son, Kirk's foe, is engaged to Gertruda, Garavel's daughter. She is Kirk's "Chiquita." He meets her again at the opera through Mrs. Cortlandt's aid. Kirk makes love to Chiquita. Edith Cortlandt, infatuated with Kirk, goes riding with him frequently.

She avows her love for him. Their ride and talk are interrupted by her husband. Kirk asks Garavel for his daughter's hand. The banker wishes her to marry Alfarez to advance his own ambitions. Clifford, a man from the States, asks Rannels about Kirk.

Kirk receives permission to call on Chiquita. Young Alfarez challenges him to a duel. Kirk laughs at him. Mrs. Cortlandt asks Kirk to call on her.

Cortlandt overhears his wife make love to Kirk, who tells her he loves and is engaged to Gertruda. Prompted by Mrs. Cortlandt, Garavel forbids Kirk to call on his daughter.

Kirk manages to see Chiquita. She loves him, but will obey her father. Mrs. Cortlandt blocks Kirk's and Rannels' path. Detective Williams seeks Kirk, knowing to him as Locke or Wellar.

During an intermission between dances at a ball Chiquita and Kirk are married, the girl returning immediately to her father's side.

Kirk greets with Mrs. Cortlandt. At a dinner tendered to Cortlandt by the railroad men Cortlandt openly "gives" his wife to Kirk, creating a great sensation.

Next morning Kirk goes out with Allan. Cortlandt tells his wife what he has done. She denounces any wrongdoing with Kirk.

CHAPTER XXIV.

A Question and the Answer.

IN all their married life Edith Cortlandt had never known her husband to show such stilted force. Flinging to dominate him as usual, she was filled with a strange feeling of helplessness and terror.

"You had no right to accept such evidence," she stormed.

"What? Why try to fool me? I have your own words for it. The other afternoon I came home sick—with my head. I was on the gallery outside when you were pleading with him, and I heard it all. But he was growing tired of you. That, you know, makes it all the more effective." He smiled in an agonized fury.

"You—me?" she cried, with the fury of one leaping forward at a barred door. "You had no right to do such a thing even if I were guilty."

"Kirk. Aren't you my wife?"

The look she gave him was heavy with loathing. "That means nothing with us. I never loved you, and you know it. You never could have signified without me. All you have is due to me—even your reputation in the service. Your success, your birth, even, it is all mine. The debt is all on your side, as you and I and all the world know."

"Who made me a mankin?" he demanded, with womanish fury, a fury that had been striving for utterance these many years. I had ambitions and hopes and ability once—not much perhaps, but enough—before you married me. I was nothing great, but I was getting along. I had confidence, too, but you took it away from me. You—you absorbed me. You had your father's brain, and it was too big for me. It overshadowed mine. In a way you were a vampire, for what I had you drained me of. But tonight, when he got up before those other men and dangled his shame before my eyes, I had enough hatred left in me to strike back. Thank God for that at least! Maybe it's not too late yet for me to be a man. Maybe if I get away from you and try"—his voice died out weekly. In his face there was a miserable half-crown of hope.

"I never knew you felt like that. I never knew you could feel that way," she said in a colorless voice. "But you made a terrible mistake."

"Do you mean to say you don't love him?"

"No. I have loved him for a long time. I can't remember when it began." She spoke very listlessly, looking past him as if at a long familiar picture, which she was tired of contemplating. "I never knew what love was before; I never even dreamed. I'd give my life right now to undo what you have done, just for his sake, for he is innocent. Oh, don't sneer; it's true. He loves the Garavel girl and wants to marry her. I'm going to tell you the whole truth now without sparing myself. It began, I think, at Taboga, that night when he kissed me. It was the only time he ever did such a thing. It was dark, we were alone, I was frightened, and it was purely impulse on his part. But it woke me up, and all at once I knew how much he meant to me. When I discovered that he cared for that girl—well, if you overheard you must know. I frightened Garavel into disowning him, and I set out to break him, just to show him that he needed me. Tonight he scorned me. That's the truth, Stephen. If we believed in oaths I would swear it."

"You are shielding him. You want to make me out wrong." But she knew he knew.

"Those are the facts. Heaven knows they are bad enough, but they are by no means so bad as you thought. And I'm your wife, Stephen. That thing you did was brutal. Those men will talk. I was guilty no doubt in my thoughts, but I'm young, and you have no right to blight my life and my reputation—yes, and yours—by a thing like that. We will have to meet those men. What are you going to do?"

"I don't know," he said. "In all my life I never felt but one moment of power, and that, it seems, was false. For years I have longed to show myself a man, and now what have I done? What have I done? I am an impostor. Why couldn't you be consistent? Why did you go halfway? Why couldn't you be all good or all bad and save me this?"

"All women are half good and half bad."

"I can't blame you for not loving me, I suppose," he mumbled. "No woman of your kind could love a man like me."

"Those men!" she said in a way that made him shiver. "Wait until I—think. I must think."

"Perhaps in the morning we can see a way out."

"That's it," he nodded. "You go to bed and I'll think. I'm trying to think now, but this heat is suffocating me and my head is throbbing."

Despite the breathless oppression of the night, she shivered. "I never can meet them now, and I don't see how you will dare to, knowing that you were wrong."

"Don't!" he pleaded. "The other was bad enough, but this—Tell me what to do!"

"I can't. I don't know myself. All I can see is that those men will never cease to believe, no matter what you tell them."

As she prepared for bed an hour later she heard him still stirring about in his quarters, but afterward she did not detect his cautious footsteps when he stole out of his chamber, closing the door softly behind him.

Kirk was roused from a heavy, senseless slumber the next morning by a vicious rapping at his door. He opened the door and Rannels rushed in.

"Where did you go after I left you last night?"

"I can't here, of course." As the memory of the previous night swept over Kirk he snarled.

"Did you stay here?"

"No. I went out again, and was out nearly all night trying to walk it off. Rannels' face blanched, and he drew back.

"Theo, of course, you know?"

"What?"

"About Cortlandt. He's dead!"

"Dead? When? Where? How did it happen?"

"Nobody knows just how. He was found on the sea wall near Alfarez's house, shot."

"Shot? Good Lord!"

"Did you see Cortlandt again after I left you?" Rannels swallowed hard.

Kirk whirled about and faced him. "Great heavens! No! See here, that idea is ridiculous!"

Rannels sank weakly into a chair and mopped his face. "When you said you'd gone out again it knocked me flat, understand?"

"I can prove where I was, for Allan was with me. I couldn't sleep, so I tried to walk off my excitement. No, no; I couldn't do a thing like that! I thought last night that I could, but I couldn't, really."

"I'm afraid Wade will tell all about the party if we don't stop him."

"Then we'd better hunt him up."

Kirk resumed his dressing, while Rannels consulted his watch.

"No. 5 is due in twenty minutes. We'll probably find him at the office."

Together they hastened to the railroad building, Rannels telling all the knew of the tragedy as they went along. Cortlandt's body, it seemed, had been found about daylight by a Spitzgenly policeman, who had identified it. Becoming pale stricken at the importance of his discovery, he had sounded the alarm, then reported directly to the governor, whose house was close by. The whole city was alive with the news. The police were buzzing like bees. Rumors of suicide, murder, robbery, were about, but no one seemed to know anything definite.

"It was suicide," Kirk averred, with conviction. "The man was insane last night, and that accounts for what he said about me. He's been sick for a long time."

"If those boys will only keep their mouths shut," Rannels said anxiously. "There's no telling what these Spitzgenly might do if they heard about that man."

"Cortlandt was an American."

"But it happened in Panama, and it would be their affair."

Although it was Sunday, the four young fellows who had taken part in the entertainment on the night before had gathered in the office and at the appearance of Rannels greeted him eagerly. Toward Kirk, however, they maintained a disheartening constraint.

The acting superintendent began to censure them tersely.

"It's a bad business," said Rannels, "and it's something I for one don't want to be mixed up in. I've heard rumors already about some sort of a quarrel at our party, so I'm afraid my fellows have been talking."

Wade acknowledged it recklessly. "Yes, I'll answer for my part, and I'm not going to make any promise of secrecy either."

Into the office behind them came Ramon Alfarez and two Panamanian policemen, one evidently a sergeant.

"Eh, there you are!" Alfarez cried as he caught sight of Kirk. "You are present?"

"What for?"

"Gentlemen, you will be so kind as to give the names, yes? The judge will desire to make inquiries regarding those supper to Senor Cortlandt last night."

At that moment the building began to shake and reverberate as No. 5 rolled in from Colon, bearing John Weeks, American consul, and Mr. Williams of St. Louis in one of the forward coaches. As the two hurried out through the turnstiles they found the street blocked by a considerable crowd, evidently interested in something quite apart from the arrival of the morning train. But before they could learn the cause out from the nearby building came Ramon Alfarez, accompanied by several policemen and a group of railroad employees, among whom was Kirk Anthony.

"There he is!" wheezed the consul, clutching at his companion's arm. "Get him now before his friends."

"You are arrest!"

Williams thrust the policemen and the curious onlookers aside and, laying hold of Anthony, cried in triumph: "Well, Mr. Jefferson Locke, I want you."

A little man in blue uniform was at tempting to take the prisoner in charge, but the detective disregarded him. Rannels followed his way forward with a question.

"Oh, I've got a warrant for him."

Williams declared. "What for? Well, for one thing, he embezzled $80,000, and I'm going to take him back."

"Eh? What is this?" Alfarez bustled into the conversation. "Embezzled? He is then a thief?"

"Exactly. If you're the inspector I'll ask you to make this arrest for me. I believe we're on foreign ground."

"I regret you have arrived so late," smirked Alfarez. "The gentleman is already arrested for the murder of Senor Cortlandt. He will first answer to that. I assure you."

It was during the lynch hour that Ramon Alfarez called at the Garavel home, finding the banker and his daughter still loitering over their midnight meal and discussing the topic that had electrified the whole city.

"So fine a man," the father was saying. "He was, indeed, my good friend. It is shocking."

"Yes, and to think he should have been killed in this cowardly manner!" "Killed? Is it believed that he was murdered? Circumstances I supposed he had shot himself. That was the gossip an hour ago."

"Upon leaving the Tivoli last night Senor Cortlandt, died with six of his friends at the Central. There was drinking. The waiters have been questioned; also one of the men who was present has recounted to me what occurred. It seems that for a long time

WILLIAMS' WORLD FAMOUS COLORED SINGERS

FAVORITES OF TWO CONTINENTS 130 PERFORMANCES IN LONDON, ENG.

All those who fail to secure tickets for the Williams' Colored Singers will miss one of the finest musical attractions that has visited the city in many seasons. The Williams Singers come highly recommended from coast to coast as talented, cultured interpreters of the highest grade of concert music. The company is not to be compared with the so-called jubilee singers who occasionally tour the country. They are educated musicians whose services are largely sought to fill channel and concert engagements.

All the singers possess rich and strong voices; in fact, ever one is a

TWO WEEKS OF STATE FAIR

Lengthening of Time Will Allow Officials to Put on More Attractions.

In order to be as nearly independent of the weather man as possible and put on a more varied and instructive exhibition, the Michigan State Fair has decided to lengthen its 1914 exhibition to two weeks.
The dates set are September 7-18.

This will enable the fair to stage a great many more out-of-door attractions, say the officials, as the chances are there will be at least ten days of fair weather under the new arrangements.

The parades of prize-winning live stock and the judging of the horses and cattle in the show rings, which were practically missed by visitors last year because of bad weather, will be made big features this year.

The added week this year will also permit of a much longer and more varied speed program. General Manager Dickinson is planning even a more sensational horse racing and auto speed program than last year.

"We are convinced that with $125, 000 for premiums and purses and the big open-air free attractions we are planning on, this year's State Fair will eclipse any of its predecessors by a good margin," said General Manager Dickinson in discussing the outlook for 1914. "I am firmly convinced that the additional $100 we are offering cattle associations for shipping and maintenance expenses will cause not only all present Michigan cattle organizations to exhibit but will encourage the organization of new ones."

Miscellaneous Shower.

ments were served and the presents given to the bride-to-be were beautiful as well as numerous.

COUNTY NORMALS

Michigan Rural Schools are Being Provided with Trained Teachers.

The state of Michigan has in operation 46 county normal schools.
These schools are conducted to train teachers for the rural schools. Each normal has two teachers and maintains a critic room where the students do practice teaching under the supervision of an expert teacher. Since these schools were established they have furnished over 5000 teachers to the rural schools. Students who have completed the fifth grade in a good high school can complete the county normal course in one year. Graduates of county normal schools receive credit at the University of Michigan and at the state normal schools. Graduates of county normal schools who are also graduates of approved high schools may obtain a life certificate by attending a state normal school one year and one summer. High school graduates who have not had the county normal work obtain the life certificate at a state normal in two years.

The demand for trained rural teachers is increasing. School officers are aware of the need of employing efficient teachers. They realize the country must have as good teachers as the city and they are willing to pay enough to secure them.

One Hundred a Day.

One hundred war pensioners die every day, the house committee report in submitting the annual pension appropriation bill, aggregating $100,000,000. The amount is $11,000, 000 smaller than last year, due to the death toll. The number of pensioners provided for is 830,000, as compared with 860,000 last year and 900,446 in 1902, the highest on record.

GOOD ROADS MEETING

Preliminary Steps to Be Taken to Organize County Good Roads Club.

A meeting will be held at the Court house both afternoon and evening on May 13, for the purpose of taking the first steps toward the organization of a county good roads club.

F. C. Rogers, state highway commissioner, Frank Hamilton, John R. Sanlo and others from Traverse City have promised to be present as will also representatives from Boyne City, East Jordan and Boyne Falls, and the highway commissioners from the various townships in Charlevoix county.

State Highway Commissioner
Rogers named the date he could be present and will use his influence toward the formation of the club.
Good roads means good farms and good farmers, a better community to live in and being on the map as a progressive community. Everyone interested in the good roads movement are requested to be present and "BOOST."

LARGE INCOME TAX

President of Sears, Roebuck & Company Pays Highest Tax in Chicago.

To Julius Rosenwald, president of Sears, Roebuck & Co., the Chicago mail order company, belongs the distinction of receiving the largest income of any man in that city during the past year, his income for ten months being $1,100,000, or about $1,320,000 per year. Opponents of mail order houses will see in this enormous income a good argument against the parcel post, which these houses use so far as possible, but the city and rural carriers say the business has not increased more than thirty per cent, while it has brought into use a corresponding increase in the business transacted by local merchants. One reason for the prosperity of these people is the fact that all their business is done on a cash basis and the cash comes before the goods are shipped.
The local merchant often carries his customer twelve months and also often loses the account entirely.

GRAVING STREETS

to be in as good condition as it is

Senor Cortlan has been jealous of his wife. Cortlan openly accused his enemy before all the others. It was most dramatic. It was terrible. There was a scene of violence. The other man made threats.

Garvel breathed an incredulous exclamation.

"Ah, but wait! It was Senor Cortlan's best friend, too, the man for whom he had accomplished many favors, whom he accused," he noted with mingled anger and satisfaction the pallor that was creeping into the girl's cheeks. "You would never guess. It was—1 hesitate, and yet you are bound to learn, my dear friends—it was this Anthony."

"It is a lie!" said the girl quietly. "He loved no one but me."

"Gertrudis!" The banker was shocked beyond measure at what he considered his daughter's jealousy. "Those are not nice words."

"I do not believe it."

Ramon had not counted upon such a spirit, and his anger getting the better of him, he sneered: "I should not have spoken. I did not know you still care."

"She does not care," Garvel declared loudly.

"Ah, but I do. I love him very dearly."

The two men were upon their feet in an instant, staring at her, the elder in amazement, the younger with rage and resentment blazing from his countenance.

"Silence!" thundered the banker. "Yonder stands your affianced husband."

"It is a mistake," she persisted gently.

"No, no, no! There is no mistake," chattered Ramon. "Those other men have told all, and your Anthony is now in the career under guard. It was I who saw to his arrest. Nor is that all. He is not at all the man he pretended to be, even his name is false. This morning there arrived an American officer of police to arrest him on other charges. He is a thief, it seems, having stolen $50,000 gold from his employers. Oh, there is no mistake. Within the hour I have been talking with this detective, and he has the papers of proof, is not that enough?"

"It is, indeed," gasped the father.

"But it is not true," maintained the girl sharply, and her eyes were as steady as altar flames. "Take me to him, please. I must go at once to the court."

But he only answered her with a stare of amazement. "Go?" he murmured, after an instant. "Have I lost my senses?"

"Yes, I must go, for he is my husband. We were wed last night."

"Mother of God!" the banker ejaculated hoarsely, and sank into the seat from which he had arisen. Ramon was staring from one to the other, his head turning jerkily.

"Oh, yes! The judge from Colon married us during the dance. I would have liked a church wedding, but that will come later. The Senor Banuelos and his wife were there also, and they will tell you. It made me very happy."

Her face was transfigured by a look that left the two men no choice but to believe.

"A civil marriage?" stammered Ramon.

"A civil marriage, indeed!" said Garvel in a choking voice. "So that is where you were when I believed you to be dancing! But I will not have it, understood! You are betrothed. You have given your word to Ramon."

"Ah, but I never loved him. You compelled me to consent because you said you could not be president unless I married him. And that was not so. Ramon deceived you. Now it is all right. You will be president, and I can be happy."

Ramon's suspicion kindled on the instant. He turned upon the banker. "See I begin to see! That was a trick, then, to betray my father?"

"But wait!" Gertrudis exclaimed sharply. "Did you not trick us also? Did you not use the general, your father, to make me give up the man I love? Which of us, then, is the betrayer?"

And Garvel spoke threateningly, menacingly, to his daughter.

"It was no marriage, and it will not stand. I will have it annulled. The man was a criminal, a fugitive, even when he forced you to marry."

"No, no! You cannot do that. It was I who asked him to marry me. The girl lied tremulously, panic-stricken at the threat. "Before God, I am his wife," she maintained. "And if this marriage has a dow then I will stand beside the prison gates and marry him as he comes forth."

"He will not come forth," Ramon declared harshly.

"Oh, yes! And now will you take me to him?"

"No!" her father bellowed. "You are my daughter, you are under my roof, and here you shall stay until you give up this madness and this man. I forbid you to go near him. Come! Do you promise?" She looked her dark head. "I must learn more of this affair at once. You will find your senses, miss, or if you do not you will spend your life in meditation and prayer—that much I promise you."

"I do not wish to enter a convent," she said, with white lips. "I wish to be happy. When Keek is free I shall go to him. Now, if you please, I—think I shall go away." She turned and went out of the big high-ceilinged room, and not until she had reached the hall did her feet waver or her head droop.

CHAPTER XXV.
A Last Appeal.

THAT was not a pleasant interview for Anthony. His surroundings were not such as to lead him to believe, and Garvel's grief at his daughter's disgrace was really distressing. Moreover, the unexpected threat to annul the marriage filled him with alarm. His only consolation came from the fact that Gertrudis had made known the truth without the slightest hesitation. That showed that she was loyal at any rate. Kirk tried to assure his father that he would have no trouble in proving his innocence, but Garvel seemed very little concerned with that phase of the affair and continued to bewail the dishonor that had fallen on his name.

Kirk's pride arose at this, and he exclaimed with some heat:

"My dear Mr. Garvel, if you are so blamed sure that I did all these things why did you come to see me?"

"It was to learn if she spoke the truth."

"Oh, we're married, right enough. And you'll have some difficulty in breaking it up before I get out."

"You expect, then, to prove your innocence easily?"

"I do."

"But I hear there are other serious charges?"

"It is quite the same with them."

"But suppose you should not clear yourself of this—murder. Would you wish to drag down my daughter's name?"

"Of course not."

"I understand you have not spoken of this marriage. Perhaps you might consent to remain silent. If by any chance you should be convicted of guilt what satisfaction could you derive from injuring me and mine?"

"None at all, sir."

"I am rich," Garvel went on meaningly. "If you are acquitted I might perhaps arrange amply for your future—upon conditions."

"In other words, if I am to be hanged or shot or whatever it is they do to people down here you'll expect me to keep my mouth shut on general principles, and if I'm acquitted you'll pay me well to disappear. Is that it? Well, there is some family pride to that," he laughed lightly.

"My political future may depend upon it."

"If I can help you in that way I'll gladly keep silent as long as you wish, but I don't think I care to make any further terms."

"Make sure of this," suggested the father. "your marriage will be annulled, no matter what you prove or fail to prove. Already Chiquita is repentant, and I shall not rest until she is free. You have done me a great injury, and I shall not forget it."

On the following morning the leading American attorney of the city called at the jail, announcing that he had been retained as counsel, but refusing to tell who had employed him. Supposing, of course, that he had been sent by friends who wished no publicity in the matter, Kirk did not press him for information. Together they outlined their defense as best they could. With characteristic optimism Kirk insisted upon treating the charge against him as of little consequence, and that was not until he had undergone his preliminary hearing that he fully realized the gravity of his situation.

To his unspeakable indignation, the officer who had discovered Cortland's body swore that he had seen the deceased pass him shortly before the time of his death, evidently taking a walk along the water's edge for—from the heat, and that immediately afterward, perhaps a minute or so, the prisoner had also passed, going in the same direction. There was a street light close by, he said, and there could be no possible mistake as to Anthony's identity. A few moments later there had been a pistol shot, muffled, but unmistakable, and the policeman had hastened in the direction from which it came. The prisoner had appeared suddenly out of the darkness and hurried past. In the poorest manner possible, the witness declared, he had questioned him regarding the shot, but Mr. Anthony had neither stopped nor answered. On the contrary, he had broken into a run. The officer had considered this strange behavior, but, being at all times most respectful toward prisoners, he had made no effort to detain him. Passing on, he had found the body of the dead man. A revolver beside it.

This amazing testimony was presented to Kirk by his attorney, but his indignation was as nothing to that which swept over him when a servant in the Alfaraz household swore to having actually witnessed the murder.

This fellow declared that he had been troubled greatly with a toothache. Toward morning of the night in question, too restless for sleep, he had come out upon the sea wall. Even now his face was swollen, and he made a determined effort to show the court the particular tooth which had made him an unwilling beholder of the tragedy. Overcome by exhaustion, he had fallen asleep after a time, and he was awakened by the sounds of a quarrel. On opening his eyes he saw two Americans, one of whom was Senor Cortland, and the other Kirk Anthony. Being utterly ignorant of their language, he had no means of knowing what was said, nor did he consider the altercation serious until the large man shot the Senor Cortland. Then, being terror-stricken at what he had beheld, he had run away, entirely forgetting his toothache, which was quite gone.

That was all he knew of the matter. He recognized Anthony as the man who had done the shooting. He was troubled greatly with toothaches.

Wade was called next and told the story of that damning incident at the supper party, being corroborated by the others. Then there were several witnesses who swore to inconsequential things.

For once in his careless life the young man realized that he was face to face with something bigger and stronger than his own dereliction, and it daunted him. He began to see that he had underestimated these foreigners, for it seemed an easy matter to convict an innocent man in these Central American courts. Suddenly he decided to call for Darwin K. Anthony the one man who was strong enough to save him.

When it came time for him to speak, he told a straight story about his own actions on that night, and he was corroborated by Allan, but he knew that these words had little weight against that other testimony. Of course, he was commended for truth.

Anson, the lawyer, gave him a ray of encouragement as he left.

"Don't go too much on this hearing," he said. "I think we'll pull you out all right."

"You think! I dare say Ramon Alfaraz can get a dozen men to perjure themselves as easily as he got those two."

"Exactly. But I have a little coup that I intend to spring at the right moment."

"For heaven's sake, tell me what it is!"

"I'm sorry, but I can't just yet. In the first place, one must handle these people exactly right or they explode."

"But give me an idea at least. I'm really interested in the outcome of this case, you know."

Anson smiled. "Of course you are, and I'll tell you as soon as I can, but not now."

"These Spidgooties would enjoy standing me up against a wall with my head in a bag. They'll make it a holiday and ring all the bells in town."

"I can't assure you that it isn't serious," Anson acknowledged gravely. "for it is. Any time an American goes to court in this country it is serious. But that doesn't mean that we'll lose."

"You may be a good lawyer," said Kirk ruefully. "but you're a damned poor comforter. I—I wish my dad was here. He'd fix it. He wouldn't let you convict me. He's great, my dad is. He can swear like the devil. I like him better than any man I've ever met, Anson."

He wrote a lengthy cablegram, which the lawyer, with a peculiar smile, agreed to dispatch at once. He spent a sleepless night. In the morning a message came signed by Copley—Kirk's heart leaped at the familiar name—saying that Darwin K. Anthony had left Albany for the west on Sunday night and could not be located for a few days.

"He was never gone when I needed money," the son mused. "He'll be worried when he hears about this, and he has enough to worry him as it is. I'm mighty sorry, but I simply must have him."

Anson brought in the day's papers, which abounded, as usual, in reports of the death of a murderer, and printed their customary sensational stories, even to a rebash of all that had occurred at the sting supper. This in particular made Kirk writhe, knowing as he did that it would reach the eyes of his newly made wife. He also wondered vaguely how Edith Cortland was bearing up under all this notoriety. The lawyer brought the further news that Allan was in captivity as an accessory to the crime and that therefore Kirk need expect but few visitors. Somebody, probably Ramon Alfaraz, had induced the officials to treat their prisoner with special severity.

During the days which followed, Kirk suffered more than he chose to confess even to his attorney. In the first place, it was hard to be denied all knowledge of what was going on. Anson would tell him little, except that he was working every day and then, too, the long hours of solitude gnawed at his self-control. Ramon managed to see him once or twice. Reporting that so far as he could learn, Chiquita had disappeared. He took a message from Kirk to her, but brought back word that he could not deliver it.

It was on Sunday, a week after his arrest, that Edith Cortland came to Kirk. He was surprised to see the ravages that this short time had made in her, for she was pale and drawn and weary looking, as if from sleeplessness. Strange to say, these marks of suffering did not detract from her appearance, but rather enhanced her poise and distinction.

"I'm awfully glad to see you, Mrs. Cortland," he said as she extended her hand. "But do you think it was wise for you to come?"

She shrugged. "People can say as much about them as they already said. My name is on every tongue, and a little more gossip can make matters no worse. I had to come. I just couldn't stay away. I wonder if you can realize what I have been through."

"It must have been terrible," he said gently.

"Yes, I have said. It seems to me that I have paid for everything I ever did. These newspaper stories nearly killed me, but it wasn't that so much as the thought that you were suffering for my acts."

"I'm very sorry. You never thought for a moment that I did what they claim?"

"No, no! It has all been a mistake from the first. I was sure of that."

"You heard what those two men testified?"

"Bah! That is Ramon Alfaraz. But he can do nothing. You will forgive me for what I said that night at the hotel, won't you? I didn't really mean to injure you, Kirk, but I was half hysterical. I had suffered so these last few months that I was ready to do anything. I never dreamed there was a way out of my misery, a way as close at hand. But somehow, even before General Alfaraz's voice on the phone told me what had happened, I knew you had a great deal to put up with," he said, "but for both our sakes I wish it had come in some other way."

"Oh, I don't care!" she cried recklessly. "The one thing I can grasp in all this turmoil, the one thing that rings in my ears every moment, is that I am free, free! That is all that matters to me. You showed your loyalty to Stephen more than once, and, though your scruples angered me, I honor you for them now."

"Your husband's death was made no difference with us, Mrs. Cortland," he said gravely.

"We have talked openly before, and there is no need to do otherwise now. You mean by that that you don't care for me, but I know better. I believe there is a love so strong that it must find an answer. Although you may not care for me now as you care for—some one else—I know that I can make you forget her and put me in her place. I can help you, oh, so much!"

"Wait!" he said harshly. "You force me to break my word. I don't want to tell you this, but—I am married."

"You—never told me that! It was some mad college prank, I suppose."

"No, no! I married Gertrudis Garvel that night at the Tivoli."

"Oh, that can't be. That was the night of the dance. Why didn't you tell me? Why isn't she here? Why does she leave you alone? No, no! You hardly know each other. Why, she's not old enough to know her own mind!"

"That I know my mind, and I have her."

Her white hands strained at each other as she steeled her shaking voice. "Love," she cried. "You don't know what love means, nor does she. She can't know, for she'd be here. She'd have this prison torn block from block."

"You don't know what you're saying. You're hysterical, Mrs. Cortland. I love Gertrudis so deeply that there's no room in me for anything else and never will be. Heaven only knows what they have made her believe about me, but I don't care. I'll meet this little plot of Alfaraz, and when she learns the truth she will come back again."

"This little plot!" Edith cried in distraction. "And I suppose you wish me to give you back to her? But I won't help her. I'm not that sort. I'm a selfish woman. I've always been selfish because I've never had anybody to work for. But I have it in me to be generous."

"I'm sorry," he said. "You have suffered. I know. Don't trouble any more about me—please."

"Oh, I'd rather face the gallows as you face it than what is before me, and I'm not sure I could help you, after all. You are in Latin America now, remember, and your enemies are strong."

"I am Darwin K. Anthony's son," he protested. "He won't allow it."

"Bah! He is an American, and these are Spanish people. You have seen how they like us, and you have seen how Alfaraz can do. He's rich, and he'll perjure more witnesses; he'll manipulate the court with his money. Yes, and I'd rather be succeeded than see you go, no? What am I saying? Let me go and let me get away from here!" She broke down and went sobbing out into the corridor.

On the same afternoon Mr. Clifford, accompanied by Anson the lawyer, took the 3:20 train for Colon. As soon as he arrived he called up Colonel Johnson to request that the commissioner's motorcar should, without fail, await him at 10 o'clock sharp on the next morning with an open track ahead of it. Strangely enough, the colonel agreed very readily.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE STUDY ON THE PRODIGAL SON. Luke 15: 11-32—May 3.

"I will arise and go to my father, and will say unto him, Father, I have sinned against heaven and in thy sight."—Verse 18.

The setting of the parable of the Prodigal Son demonstrates the Master's object in giving it. He was seeking to show the Pharisees that their position respecting publicans and sinners was wrong. He pointed out that this wrong attitude was likely to cost them their own share in the Kingdom.

In the parable the father evidently represents God; and the sons represent the two general classes into which the Jewish nation had divided itself. The elder son class were those who sat in Moses' seat, professed loyalty to God, and outwardly endeavored to keep His Law. The younger son class were those who had misused their privileges as beneficiaries of the Divine promises and wasted their opportunities in self-gratification.

This class of publicans and sinners felt their degradation, and longed to return to the Father's House. Spiritually hungry and thirsty, they besought to go back. It was just such characters that Jesus especially endeavored to have confidence in the Father's willingness to receive those who came to Him penitently. The parable tells that some of this class returned to God, and because of their penitence were granted special manifestations of Divine favor.

Application of the Parable.

How grandly this parable illustrates the lengths, breadths, heights and depths of the Love of God! The best robe, shoes, etc., well represent God's provision through Christ for covering the imperfections of all who return to Him. The feast and the merry-making well illustrate God's blessed promises, applicable to those who accept into God's family through the begetting of the Holy Spirit. This is the Marriage Feast of another parable—Matthew 22:1-14; Isaiah 25:6-8.

The elder brother was indeed hidden to the feast; but he was angry and refused to come, jealous that the father should receive the young spendthrift. The elder brother class did not show the right spirit for those for whom the Kingdom privileges were intended, all of whom must be meek, gentle, loving—copies of God's dear Son in their gracious good will toward all desires of coming to the Father.

The Principle Applies Broadly.

While this parable illustrated the two classes of Jews, the principle set forth applies generally. In the world there are noble characters, well-born and apparently the very ones to be chosen of God to be joint-heirs with His Son in the Kingdom. Nevertheless, the Scriptures make clear that not many such will be of the Kingdom class. (1 Corinthians 13:2-3) This better class, represented by the elder brother, seem to feel that in contrast with the lower strata they are perfect in themselves; and that God would surely desire them.

But all are sinners, whether they know it or not; and all should be honest enough to confess the fact. God requires this very honesty; this confession of our need, before Christ's merit can be imputed to us, covering our blemishes. God evidently wishes to have a class honest enough to acknowledge their own imperfections and unworthiness of His favors. Those who so profess He will bless with a knowledge of themselves and of His righteousness; whereas others, self-satisfied and unwilling to accept His grace in Christ or to confess their need of a covering for their blemishes, are not humble enough to be of the Kingdom class.

Not Many Rich, Noble or Wise.

Thus it comes that the majority of those who accept God's favor and become His children are from the younger brother class—not many rich, noble, learned or wise, but chiefly the poor of this world, rich in faith. They realize their wretched condition and their need of forgiveness and help; while frequently others who have lived more open lives do not recognize their need.

Perhaps no other parable has been so helpful to the poor and needy, the sinful and weak, who desire to return to the family of God. In this parable they see their own picture, and are encouraged. The Heavenly Father's character has been so misrepresented to them by the creeds of the Dark Ages that they fear Him and expect no kind reception from Him. As the proper thought of God's character reaches the poor and the depraved, they receive a suggestion of hope which assists many of them to a full return and surrender to the God of all grace.

The prodigal's declaration, "I will go to my father," represents what should be the attitude of all repentant ones—reliance upon the Heavenly Father's provision in Christ for forgiveness and their reception to His love and care, for their return to the fold and to harmony with God.

Bring us your auto tires that need repairing—Benj. Brown. Adv.171

It is said that recently a preacher after his sermon requested everyone in the congregation who were paying their debts to stand up. Instantly every man, woman and child with one exception arose to their feet. He seated the crowd and then said: "Let every man who is not paying his debts stand up." The exception noted—a careworn, hungry-looking individual clothed in his last summer's suit—slowly assumed a perpendicular position and leaned upon the back of a bench in front of him. "How is it, my friend," asked the minister, "that you are the only man in this large congregation that is not able to meet his obligations?" "I publish a newspaper," he meekly replied, "and my brethren here who have just stood up are all subscribers and—" "Let us pray," exclaimed the minister.

In the country as a whole hundreds of thousands of bushels of potatoes are left in the fields because they are too scabby to market. There are frequent instances in the New York market, according to potato dealers, where carload consignments are rejected because of the presence of numerous scabby potatoes. When the soil becomes infested with scab its value as potato land materially depreciates. This is especially true in sections where potatoes constitute the chief crop.

In addition to the fact that potatoes affected with powdery scab are less acceptable to the American than to the European consumer there is also the probability that American varieties of potatoes may prove more susceptible than the European. Introduced parasites are often more destructive in a new environment than in an old one. The varied climatic and soil conditions of several of our states offer a wider range for the new potato malady. The brief experience with this disease in Eastern Canada gives no hint of what its behavior might be in the southern trucking districts, the central west or the irrigated sections of the United States. Related potato diseases have proven more destructive in the western than in eastern potato territory.

Particular importance also attaches to the fact that Maine is the one state now seriously menaced. Maine is the chief source of seed potatoes for the Central Atlantic and southern states and adjoins that portion of Canada where the powdery scab is now most serious. If Maine potatoes should become generally affected only the most extraordinary efforts can check the spread of powdery scab to nearly every other state.

As yet no method of controlling this disease when it once gets in the soil has been found. The best advice that can be given a farmer whose fields have produced a crop infected with powdery scab is this: Don't grow potatoes for several years on a piece of land that has produced a crop infected with this disease.

It is not yet known how many years the fungus may live in the soil, but its nature suggests that it can probably live for several years.

A May breakfast will be served by the F. N. Club of the Congregation at church Saturday morning, May 2nd, from 8:30 to 9 o'clock in church dining room. Everybody come.

Mr. Ford Vogel Jr. and Miss Grace Shepard, both of East Jordan, were united in marriage by Rev. Quinton Walker Tuesday, April 21st.

The fish tug Sea Gull of this port left Thursday for Petoskey with a light load of fish and was the first boat to enter that port this year.

Mrs. F. J. Wimberley of Birmingham, arrived Friday, expecting to spend the summer in our city. Mrs. Wimberley is located at the Parsons cottage on the south terrace.

Word has been received by the parents of Hugo Hampton and Clare Conter that they had been named to fill responsible position by the members of their fraternity house. Hugo was elected as house manager of the Phi Delta Phi, and Clare as steward to the fraternity to which he belongs.

Marriage license issued recently are: Julia Stigens, age 23, and Marie Lohmer, age 18, both of Boyne City. Fred Vogel Jr., age 19, and Grace Shepard, age 19, both of East Jordan. John Dhaeseleer, age 27, and Josephine Ricksegers, age 27, both of St. James. Sam Peters, age 30, to Maud Helmer, age 24, both of St. James. Benjamin Belknap, age 21, and Margerite Spura, age 20, both of Horton Bay. Louis Lemieux, age 52, and Rose Knickerbocker, age 42, both of East Jordan. Billy Ray Grossart, age 24, and Grace Angeline Clark, age 21, both of East Jordan. Daniel Potter, age 24, of Charlevoix, and Ethel Shearer, age 18, of Hayes township.

It is said that recently a preacher after his sermon requested everyone in the congregation who were paying their debts to stand up. Instantly every man, woman and child with one exception arose to their feet. He seated the crowd and then said: "Let every man who is not paying his debts stand up." The exception noted—a careworn, hungry-looking individual clothed in his last summer's suit—slowly assumed a perpendicular position and leaned upon the back of a bench in front of him. "How is it, my friend," asked the minister, "that you are the only man in this large congregation that is not able to meet his obligations?" "I publish a newspaper," he meekly replied, "and my brethren here who have just stood up are all subscribers and—" "Let us pray," exclaimed the minister.

ALL ABOARD FOR PANAMA

If Flag Goes Up Across Rio Grande
It Will Never Come Down.

MEXICAN SITUATION TO-DAY

Up to the United States to Clean Up the Gang Now in Power.

"We Mean Not War," Says Wilson—"All Aboard for Panama," Say the Boys in Blue.

Let us not deceive ourselves, nor be deceived. It is war. The cant of the hour makes many protestations: That we have no quarrel with the Mexican people, that we want no foot of Mexican territory, that we seek only good neighborhood, that peace and order are our sole objective points. But all the same, if the flag goes up across the Rio Grande it will never come down.

It is true that for our proceeding we have something more than pretext. The mistake the president made in not recognizing the de facto government along with the other nations and letting it go at that may in the end prove wiser than he knew; that is placing all the responsibility on us; clear the way for the march of "manifest destiny" about which in the good old Democratic days we heard so much.

Surely the consequences have been deadly enough. The world which has censured our delay can now array itself against our onset. We are pulling its chestnuts out of the fire at the same time that we toast our own. The swelling act of this imperial theme—for that it is—may carry the Monroe doctrine in lengths never dreamed of by Monroe; it may be, as the far-seeing Senator Borah suggests, the beginning of the advance on the isthmus; yet, as Senator Lodge in his splendid substitute described, we have good warrant; and, expansion, as little as revolution, goes backward when headed south and west, the canal the first stop. "We mean not war," says Wilson. "All aboard for Panama," say the boys.

Man proposes; God disposes. The peace-maker's house of cards falls with a crash. Mr. Bryan's hope of next year's Nobel prize goes glimmering. Andrew Carnegie's picture is turned to the wall. It is war.

To be sure, from a sentimental point of view it is a giant leaping on a child. Yet that though a vivid is not an exact simile. Nations are not ever quiet as children. The weakest must know their place.

Sometimes nations never grow to manhood and sometimes they degenerate into senility. In the Spanish war we fought a horde of children a thousand years old. But Spain was not a child. The Mexicans are even as old as the Spaniards and less fit either to fight or govern.

It is the selfish ambition of leaders opposing one another, each gathering about him the support of that part of the people under his immediate influence, which constitutes what is called revolution in Mexico. They have kept the country in hot water perpetually, except during the twenty-five years of the Diaz reign. Diaz established a despotic government and maintained it by force, shooting every upstart who attempted to make trouble and arming the masses with the declaration "It is better and more humane to kill one selfish leader than to make war on hundreds of innocent people excited by him to acts of violence."

Diaz and his legalized methods of force passed and the government of the country is in the hands of Huerta, who, while trusted with command of the army, betrayed his chief, overthrew the constitutional authorities by treachery and assassination and has since maintained in Mexico City the merest makeshift, powerless to protect life and property, and hopeless of restoring order and peace.

It is against such a race and such conditions that we go to fight. Huerta is the merest incident. He is perhaps no worse than the rest. They are all a set of cut-throat politicians and brigand chieftains. There will never come a time when any one of them can bring order out of chaos. Now that events have forced intervention it must be thorough. No more Teller resolutions of buncombe renunciation nor La Follette tomfooleries about "leaving Mexico to the Mexicans" after we have "subjected the country."

The best thing that could happen to "the Mexicans" would be for the United States to take over Chihuahua, Sonora and Lower California, leaving the city the region between Vera Cruz and Acapulco, but under our supervision, as Cuba is.

We may commiserate Mexico. We may say "the pity of it" and feel a little contrite for having the duty imposed upon us. But it is nevertheless a duty and we must face it with resolution. After a few more of our boys are shot down and our blood is up we shall forget everything except that the battle is on and who gets it in the way will have to look out for his own blood.

Yea, verily, we are in for it. Tramp, tramp, tramp, the boys are marching! They may not be just shooting the battle cry of freedom! War never ends where it started. Militarism in the saddle knows not where to stop and southward the star of the empire takes its way. The white of the uplift crowd may please, or fool, the pharisee, but it is war, and war, as Forrest observed, means fighting, and fighting means killing, and when it is over there comes the forfeit, the indemnity, and it is not worth our while nor will it pay us to lie about our peaceful intentions and pious purposes, thinking to placate or bamboozle the rest of Latin America. Sound the hold anthem: On to the isthmus!—Editorial by Henry Waterson in the Lomaville Courier-Journal.

WERE MARRIED TUESDAY NOON

Miss Sarah Ruth Emrey and Mr. Wm. G.
Donahue Joined in Holy Wedlock.

Ceremony Took Place at Home of the Bride—Reception in Afternoon from 3 to 5.

The home of R. A. Emrey was the scene of a quiet wedding Tuesday noon, when his eldest daughter, Sarah Ruth, was joined in holy wedlock to Mr. William G. Donahue, son of John C. Donahue of Hancock, Michigan. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Quinton Walker of the Methodist Episcopal church.

The ceremony took place in the reception room, which was prettily decorated with amilax and carnations, the color scheme being pink and white. The bride was attractively attired in an old rose wool crepe traveling suit and the groom in conventional black. Both were unattended. Only the immediate members of the family were present.

At three o'clock a reception was given, which was attended by over seventy-five friends and relatives. Musical selections were rendered by Mr. Otto Powers of Traverse City, Miss Norma Swan of Grand Rapids, and the Misses Gix and Bird of Petoskey. Many useful presents were presented to the happy young couple as mementoes of the high regard in which they are held.

For the past six years the bride has been the efficient and obliging assistant in the office of her father, who holds the responsible position of county register of deeds, and she numbers her friends by the score. The groom, while not a resident of Charlevoix, has made many friends on his visits here.

The out-of-town guests were Sidney Donahue of Hancock, brother of the groom; Mr. and Mrs. Otto Gix and daughter, Ida, of Petoskey; Miss Norma Swan of Grand Rapids and Mr. John Thackeray of Kalamazoo. Mr. and Mrs. Donahue leave Charlevoix Thursday for Hancock, where the groom is engaged in business with his father. They will be at home to their friends after May 20th at 117 Quincy street.

MAY AND JUNE Y. M. C. A. PROGRAM

Athletic Contests Being Pulled Off
Throughout the County.

Contests at Bay No. 2 and Afton, Wilson Township, Take Place This Week.

The County Y. M. C. A. program for May and June consists very largely of athletic contests for the rural, grammar and high school of the county. Thus far four of the township play festivals have been held, to which fourteen rural schools have participated.

Tuesday and Wednesday could not be considered ideal days for athletics of any nature, but nevertheless the teachers, children and adults were on hand at Clarion and Boyne Falls and, defying the weather, went on with the program as planned.

The people in Hayes and Eveline townships were fortunate in the weather that was furnished for Thursday and Friday and consequently the contests were better and more enjoyable for all concerned.

In the Melrose township contests the Clarion school won first place and the honor standard, and the Walloon Lake school won second place and the relay race. In the contest for Boyne Valley township, district four won second place and the honor standard, while the school at Boyne Falls won first place and the relay.

The Hayes township contest was held at the Burgess school, with four schools participating. About 125 school children and 30 adults were present for the day. The Maple Grove school was an easy winner in the relay, but in other things the Bay Shore and Murray schools were strong contenders. The former won second place and the honor standard and the latter won first place.

Five schools participated in the contests for Eveline township held at Ironton Saturday. This was about the most successful contest thus far and everything seemed to move off without a hitch. The first place and honor standard pennants were won by the Three Bells school. The Advance school won the relay pennant and the Ironton school won second place. A little better than 140 school children and some forty adults were in attendance for this contest.

The Ironton school won the ball game by a score of 17 to 5.

In the four contests held this week at least 800 individuals have either participated in or witnessed the events. Basket lunches were in evidence at the Burgess school and at Boyne Falls, while at Clarion and Ironton potluck dinners were served.

The contests for this week are to be held at Bay No. 2 on Tuesday, Afton in Wilson township Wednesday and at Marro Center Friday.

OLD SOLDIERS MEET

Youngest of Eleven Present 69 Years and Older 84 Years.

On Monday evening the old soldiers and their families made a descent on Capt. Harrison Berdan and wife, perpetrating upon them what is called a "Pot Luck" and all enjoyed a most delightful evening.

A canvass of the old soldiers revealed the fact that the two youngest were 69 years of age and the oldest 84, an average of 74½ years. A younger acting eleven can hardly be found in our city, as was fully demonstrated at the table, where the supplies disappeared in a manner proverbial with all youngsters.

The consensus of opinion seemed to be that Huerta should be made to kiss the flag, and several expressed a willingness to offer special inducements to impel him to do so.

May the years yet be many and pleasure ample to Captain Harrison Berdan and wife.

LOCALS LOSE TO BOYNE CITY

Fell Down After Being in Lead Up to the Seventh Inning.

Last Three Innings Were Heart-breakers—Play Returns Game Saturday.

After carrying a safe lead for six innings last Saturday Charlevoix high fell before the heavy clouting of the Boyne City aggregation in the last three innings of play, losing out 10 to 4. See was in the box for the local lads and pitched good ball till it was thought necessary to relieve him. Durance took his place and was easy for Boyne City. The playlog of the Charlevoix team was ragged at times, although occasionally the boys took a brace and played airtight ball.

During the first four innings Charlevoix crossed the rubber for four tallies, registered by as many safe hits and stolen bases. Boyne City made repeated efforts to reach home safely but were either caught at the plate or found wanting in the pinches when hits were necessary for runs. In the fifth the locals let up a trifle and the visitors made the most of their opportunity and scored three runs.

The big show occurred in the last three innings, when See was relieved by Capt. Durance. Boyne City had been waiting for a right hander and made good their threats. Fourteen hits were garnered off Capt. Ned and half as many runs. The backing during these innings was very poor and some of the runs could have been cut off if the locals had played a better brand of ball.

The locals journey to Boyne City Saturday and are hoping to be able to turn the trick.

OUT FOR SHERIFF

Tony Joselyn, Popular Young Man of Boyne City, to Enter the Race.

Tony H. Joselyn, a popular young man of Boyne City, announces himself as a candidate for the office of sheriff on the Republican ticket at the coming primaries. Mr. Joselyn states he had not thought seriously of entering the race until recently, but upon being urged by his friends has decided to make the run. He says he is in the race to stay and believes he has a splendid chance to win.

CHARLEVOIX REPRESENTED

John Beattie One of the Few Surviving Members of Mexican War Veterans.

Nearly one thousand of the boys who responded to the call of President Polk when war was declared against Mexico in 1846 are still living, according to the record of the bureau of pensions. All Mexican war veterans now draw pensions and in all likelihood it will not be long before those who were wounded in the fighting at Vera Cruz, or the relatives of those who were killed, will be on the pension rolls. The record shows the following residents of Michigan still living who served in the first war with Mexico:

John Beattie, Charlevoix; Cyrenus Barker, Rapid City; Cornelius Cadwell, Fowlerville; Albert H. Church, Detroit; John A. Cox, New Troy; Louis Clyde, Milan; Zachariah Kemp, Freeland; John D. Osborne, Union City; Gilbert H. Putnam, Manchester; James S. Crinder, Fennville.

BURNED TO THE GROUND

Ellsworth Produce Company's Plant Totally Destroyed by Fire Sunday Morning.

When Russell Dean was returning from a fishing trip Sunday morning he noticed a flash of flame. Upon investigation he found the Ellsworth Produce Company's plant on fire. As Ellsworth has no fire protection, the building was soon burned to the ground.

It was erected five years ago by Ralph Davis, who with Homer Chatterton and Miner Wall of Mt. Pleasant, comprised the company. The building was valued at $7,000 and the stock at $1,000.

NEED NO LICENSE

Local Fishermen Do Not Come Under New Law—Applies to Non-Residents.

Charlevoix county fishermen have been keeping County Clerk Lewis busy answering queries regarding the new game law making it necessary for men from out of the state to have a license in order to fish in Michigan. The law does not apply to the Isaac Walton's of this state. Michigan men can fish anywhere in the state without paying a fee.

Below are a few pointers that it would be well to keep in mind: Unlawful to have in possession fish under seven inches long. Unlawful to catch more than 35 in any one day.

Unlawful to have in possession more than 50 at any one time. Unlawful to sell any salmon, grayling, speckled, California or rainbow, Loch Leven or steelhead, trout.

Unlawful to take any of these fish out of the state. Unlawful to take from inland waters, except with hook and line, any more than 50 sturgeon in any one day or to have more than 100 in possession at any one time.

Unlawful to take more than ten small-mouthed or big-mouthed black bass in any one day or to have more than ten in possession at any one time, and they shall not be less than ten inches in length. No male person over 18 years of age who is a non-resident of this state shall take or catch in the inland lakes and streams with hook and line or any other device any fish of any kind without having in his possession an angler's license, for which he shall have paid the sum of $3. This law only applies to people living outside the state.

Frogs are protected in the state from November 1 to June 1.

R. L. LEWIS FOR PROSECUTOR

Hustling Young Attorney Announces He is in the Race to Win.

Although Defeated in 1912 Primary, He Made a Splendid Run—Has Made Good.

Attorney R. L. Lewis of this city, who was defeated by Dwight H. Fitch of East Jordan for the republican nomination for prosecuting attorney in the republican primary of 1912, will be a candidate for the place again this year, subject to the primary election of next August.

Attorney Lewis stated to a representative of the Courier that "Although I have not made a public announcement as yet, I will be in the race this year to win and, from the assurances of support I have already received from Charlevoix county, I am encouraged to believe that I will win the nomination."

Mr. Lewis is one of the best known young attorneys in this county. He is a graduate of the local high school and has lived in this city practically all his life. He is one of the young men of our community who have made good at their chosen professions and it is the opinion of those who are intimately acquainted with him that the voters of Charlevoix county could not make a better choice than of Mr. Lewis for this responsible office.

THROWN FROM WAGON

George Clark Badly Bruised Near Bridge Approach
Friday Morning.

Geo. Clark, an employee of the city, had a narrow escape from serious injury Friday morning, when the team he was driving ran away on the hill north of the swing bridge on Bridge street.

He was coming down the hill from the north side with a lot of dirt and when hitching up his team in the morning hooked on to a wagon he had not used the previous day. When the team tried to hold back the load on the grade the tongue slipped through the neck-yoke, letting the wagon run into the horses' heels. They immediately began to run and when at the north end of the bridge struck the curb, throwing Clark on the pavement. He struck on his left side, badly bruising his face and arm.

HOW WEATHER IS FORECASTED

Few People Know Source of Daily Bulletin Issued by Bureau.

PREDICTIONS NOT GUESS WORK

But are Based on Reports Received from Many Localities in United States.

Low Pressures Usually Mean Strong Wind and Rain; High Pressure, Cool Clear Weather.

One of our correspondents writes: "Will you please tell me in simple language how the weather forecasts are made?"

To this the shortest and simplest answer is: By telegraph. The weather forecaster does not look out of the window and guess. He is not weatherwise like the old salt who accepts the approach of a storm without knowing how. To the signs by which the ordinary citizen decides whether to take his umbrella with him or leave it at home he pays no attention. Give him his telegraph wires and he can make his predictions as accurately in a windowless cellar as on the top of New York's highest skyscraper.

The private individual sees the clouds settle on a nearby mountain or the rain sweep over a field a mile from his house and knows that the storm will be on him in a few minutes. With the aid of the telegraph the weatherman sees the same storm when it is a thousand miles away and not only this storm but every other one in the country. He knows to what direction and at what speed each is moving and can thus calculate with reasonable accuracy the approximate time when it will reach any place in its route.

Twice a day—at 8 in the morning and 8 in the evening—reports are telegraphed to Washington from about 200 observers stationed in as many different localities in the U.S. and Canada. In these reports the observers do not volunteer their personal opinions about what is going to happen. They confine themselves to a plain statement of the actual conditions at that particular moment, the pressure, or weight, of the atmosphere, the temperature, the direction and velocity of the wind, the amount of rain since the last report, and so forth. From this information the weather map of the United States is made up, showing the conditions that prevail in every part of the country. Since there are two maps for each day it is obvious that by comparing them the forecaster can keep track of the course and progress of both storms and periods of clear weather. From that, the next step is to predict what sort of weather will prevail for a day or two—in any given locality.

This map is the basis for all scientific weather forecasting. A glance at it will show that it is divided into "high pressure areas" and "low pressure areas." These are technical terms used to describe the regions in which the weight or pressure of the atmosphere is great (high) or small (low). At sea level the barometer, which is used to measure this weight, will register 30 inches under normal conditions of the atmosphere. When it registers more than this, say 30.5 or 31, the pressure is "high;" when 29.5 or less, "low." In this way the height of a column of mercury in a barometer indicates the weight of the air just as, in a thermometer, it indicates the temperature.

MICHIGAN WOMAN'S STOMACH ILLS ENDED BY A WONDERFUL REMEDY

Mrs. Beamer of Flint is Delivered from Headaches by Just a Few Doses.

Mrs. Gny A. Beamer of 1307 North street, Flint, Mich., was for a long time a victim of stomach and digestive troubles. One of the serious effects was in bad headaches, which attacked her almost daily.

She took Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. Then she wrote: "I thank you very much for what your medicine has done for me. I never saw anything work such wonders as just the three bottles have. There was never a day in my life that I did not have my head tied up with a cloth and I have not had a headache since. I had been doctoring by specialists, too, and received very little benefit."

Just such stories are told by thousands who have used Mayr's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. It is known all over the United States. It clears the digestive tract of mucus, acid secretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings swift relief to sufferers with stomach ailments, liver and bowel troubles. Many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations; many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of its wonderful success there are many imitations, so be cautious. Be sure it's Mayr's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing among people they know about—send to Geo. H. Mayr, Mfg. Chemist, 134-136 Whiting St., Chicago, Ill., for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

There is more corn in this section of the county than all other diseases put together and until the last few years it was supposed to be infallible. For a great many years doctors pronounced it incurable and prescribed local remedies and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment pronounced it incurable. Science has proven what to be a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. WHEN FOWLS "GO LIGHT."

Various Causes May Bring About This Harmful Poultry Condition.

"Going light" is a term applied to fowls which persistently lose weight, become emaciated, weak and unproductive. Fowls "go light" from different causes. Sometimes it is the result of being severely infested with lice and mites, at other times it is due to intestinal worms, and at still other times to chronic forms of infection, with aspergillosis, coccidiosis, tuberculosis or cholera. When, therefore, the fowls are not thriving an investigation should be made to determine the cause. It should first be ascertained whether the birds have been receiving a sufficient quantity of food and nutritious food. Then the birds and the houses should be carefully examined for lice and mites. Then examine the houses, take out the roosts and examine carefully, especially on the under sides and at the ends; also the woodwork on which the roosts were supported. If no defect is found in the roosts and the birds and houses are free from lice and mites, kill one of the lightest birds and carefully open the intestines for their entire length to learn if the birds are harboring a sufficient number of intestinal worms to account for their condition. A few worms would not have such a pernicious effect, but if there are many they would certainly be partly, and probably would be entirely, responsible for the emaciation. If the fowl is found to have few, if any, parasite worms, the cause of the trouble is probably a chronic infection.

If this condition is found to be due to insufficient food or food of bad quality, a proper ration must be provided. If it is due to lice and mites or to intestinal worms these parasites must be combated. If it results from chronic infection an effort should be made to overcome this by thorough cleaning and disinfection of the houses, by feeding sour milk or buttermilk with the ration and by giving an occasional purgative, such as epsom salts or castor oil. In any event the food must be abundant, the fowls must have plenty of exercise and the houses must be kept in a dry and sanitary condition.—Bulletin, United States Department of Agriculture.

HOW FAR IS PETOSKEY?

Not So Far That the Statements of Its Residents Cannot Be Verified.

Rather an interesting case has been developed in Petoskey. Being so near by, it is well worth publishing here. The statement is sincere, the proof convincing.

S. L. Wixson, 500 Watchtower avenue, Petoskey, Michigan, says: "A few months ago I had an extremely lame back and severe pains across my loins. I could hardly get around. I couldn't stoop or lift or rest well and mornings I was stiff and lame. My kidneys were sluggish and the kidney secretions were unnatural. I got a box of Doan's Kidney Pills and they cured me. I don't have any backache or pains in my kidneys now."

Price 50c at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the same that Mr. Wixson had. Foster-Nibb Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

INTERNATIONAL Harvester manure spreaders have a score of good features in their construction. Each one is the result of careful field experiment. As I H spreaders are low enough for easy loading, yet it has plenty of clearance underneath. The rear axle is well under the load, rear wheels have wide rims and Z-shaped lugs, insuring good traction under all conditions. Frame, wheels, and all driving parts are of steel. Apron tension is adjusted by a simple device. Winding of the beater is prevented by large diameter, and beater teeth are strong, square and chisel-pointed.

International manure spreaders are built in several styles and sizes, low or high, endless or return apron, for small farms or large. Examination will show sturdiness of construction in every detail. Repairs, if ever needed, may always be had of the local dealer. Examine International spreaders at the dealer's. We will tell you who sells them, and we will send you interesting catalogues.

THE NE'ER-DO-WELL

A Romance of the Panama Canal

BY
REX BEACH

COPYRIGHT, 1910, 1911, BY HARPER & BROTHERS

SYNOPSIS.

Kirk Anthony, son of a rich man, with college friends, gets into a fracas in a New York resort. A detective is hurt. Jefferson Locke insinuates himself into the college men's party.

Locke, aided by Kirk's friend Higgins, who thinks it a joke, drugs Kirk and puts him aboard a ship bound for Colon. Kirk is on the passenger list as Locke.

"Broke" and without baggage, aboard the ship Kirk makes the acquaintance of Mr. and Mrs. Stephen Cortlandt.

Cortlandt is in the American diplomatic service and is going to Panama on a mission. In Colon Kirk, as the son of a big railroad man, is taken up by Weeks, American consul.

Kirk's father repudiates him, and Weeks casts him out as an impostor. Kirk meets Allan, a Jamaican negro canal worker out of a job. The two are arrested by Colon police for helping to put out a fire.

Kirk and Allan are treated brutally in a Colon jail by young Alvarez, commandant of police. Allen's release is obtained by the British consul, but Weeks refuses to aid Kirk. Mrs. Cortlandt gets a phone call.

Mrs. Cortlandt obtains Kirk's release by using influence with Colonel Jolson, head of the canal. The Cortlandts are intending to make Alvarez's father president of Panama.

Kirk's father casts him off finally, and Mrs. Cortlandt obtains for him a position on the Panama railroad under Runnels, master of transportation.

The Cortlandts and Kirk plan a picnic on the island of Taboga, near Panama. Cortlandt is detained and his wife and Kirk are marooned on the island.

Kirk kisses Mrs. Cortlandt and is then ashamed to think he has violated Cortlandt's trust in him. Cortlandt, alarmed by his wife's absence, rescues her and Kirk from the island. In the country near Panama Kirk meets a charming Spanish girl.

The girl tells him her name is "Chiquita." He learns later that that means only "little one." Kirk begins his work. Mrs. Cortlandt has learned who Jefferson Locke is.

Locke (real name Wellar) is a swindler and has disappeared. His description fits Kirk. The latter tries in vain in Panama to learn something of Chiquita and meet Alvarez again.

Kirk wins the capital prize, $5,000, in the lottery. He and Runnels make plans for advancement. The Cortlandts, having turned from the older Alvarez, intend to make Senor Garavel, a banker, president of Panama.

Alvarez's son, Kirk's foe, is engaged to Gertrudis, Garavel's daughter. She is Kirk's "Chiquita." He meets her again at the opera through Mrs. Cortlandt's aid.

Kirk makes love to Chiquita. Edith Cortlandt, infatuated with Kirk, goes riding with him frequently.

She avows her love for him. Their ride and talk are interrupted by her husband. Kirk asks Garavel for his daughter's hand. The banker wishes her to marry Alvarez to advance his own ambitions. Clifford, a man from the States, asks Runnels about Kirk.

Kirk receives permission to call on Chiquita. Young Alvarez challenges him to a duel. Kirk laughs at him. Mrs. Cortlandt asks Kirk to call on her.

Cortlandt overhears his wife make love to Kirk, who tells her he loves and is engaged to Gertrudis. Prompted by Mrs. Cortlandt, Garavel forbids Kirk to call on his daughter.

Kirk manages to see Chiquita. She loves him, but will obey her father. Mrs. Cortlandt blocks Kirk's and Runnels' path. Detective Williams seeks Kirk, known to him as Locke or Wellar.

During an intermission between dances at a ball Chiquita and Kirk are married, the girl returning immediately to her father's side.

Kirk sneaks with Mrs. Cortlandt. At a dinner tendered to Cortlandt by the railroad men Cortlandt openly "kisses" his wife to Kirk, creating a great sensation.

Next morning Kirk goes out with Allan. Cortlandt tells his wife what he has done. She denies any wrongdoing with Kirk.

Cortlandt is found shot, and Kirk is arrested. Gertrudis tells her father she is Kirk's wife, and the banker visits Kirk in jail.

Alvarez concocts false testimony against Kirk. The latter writes to his father for help. Mrs. Cortlandt visits him and breaks down. The elder Anthony, responding to Kirk's appeal, visits her.

Kirk is cleared by the production by Mrs. Cortlandt of a letter written by Cortlandt just before his death. He shot himself. The two Anthonys visit the Garavels.

CHAPTER XXVI.

Darwin K. Anthony.

ABOUT noon on Monday, Edith Cortlandt received a caller. The name she read on the card her maid handed her gave her a start of surprise and set her wits whirling in speculation.

She was greeted by a gigantic old man with a rumbling voice. He was pacing back and forth with the restlessness of a polar bear.

"How do you do, Mrs. Cortlandt?" he began at sight of her, his big blood-drenched face.

"I'm sorry to disturb you under the circumstances. I knew your husband slightly, and I've heard about you. I extend my sympathy."

She bowed. "When did you arrive?"

"Just now. I came across in one of those blanked fly wagons—fifty miles an hour. I know everything, madam. What I didn't know before I landed I learned on the way across the isthmus. So don't let's waste time. Deuce of a position for you to be in—I understand, and all that—and I'm sorry for you. Now, let's get down to business, for I must get back to New York."

It was impossible not to feel Darwin K. Anthony's force. It spoke in his every tone and action. It looked out from his harsh lined features and showed in his energetic movements. He was a great granite block of a man, powerful in physique, in mind and in determination.

"In what way may I be of service to you?" she inquired coldly.

"I want my boy," he said simply, and she began to see that underneath his cold and domineering exterior his heart was torn by a great distress.

"You know all the circumstances of course?"

"I do. That's why I came straight to you. I know you're the keystone of the whole affair, so I didn't waste time with these other people. Kirk's a blanked kid and always has been. He isn't worth the powder to blow to—excuse me—I mean he's just a ne'er-do-well. But I suppose I'll have to do my duty by him. I just had to kick him out. Sorry I didn't do it sooner."

"If you have cut him off why do you care what becomes of him?"

Darwin K. Anthony's eyes dimmed, but his voice rose fiercely. "He's my boy, and I've a right to treat him any blanked way I please, but nobody else is going to abuse him! These Spaniards can't do it! I'll teach them to lay hands on my boy! I don't care what he's done. They've got to give him up. And he's going back with me. He's going home. I—I want him."

"Why have you come to me?" she queried.

"Because you must know the truth if anybody does, and I want your help. His voice softened suddenly, and he regarded her with a gentle kindness that was surprising. "I've heard all about you and Kirk. In fact, I've known what was going on all the time, for I've had a man on his track night and day. You may know him—Clifford? Well, he followed Kirk that night after the supper to your husband, but Anson, didn't dare call him to the stand at the hearing for fear this Alvarez would perjure more of his black and tans."

"So Clifford is your man?"

"Yes. I took him off my system and sent him down here as soon as I got Kirk's blotto, impudent letter. The old man began to sputter with indignation. "What do you think he wrote me, Mrs. Cortlandt? He had the impudence to turn down a good job I offered him because his wife might not like our climate. Thank God, he had sense enough not to do that!"

"Then you don't know?"

"Know what?"

"That he is married."

"Id—nath!" roared Anthony furiously.

She nodded. "A Miss Garavel. They were married a—week ago." She broke down miserably and hid her face in her hands. He strode to her with a light of understanding in his eyes. Laying a great hand upon her drooping head, he exclaimed with wonderful softness:

"My dear Mrs. Cortlandt, I'm very sorry for you, indeed I am. Now—now, try to face it squarely. All good women are brave, and you're a good woman. We both love him, and I know we can save him if we pull together."

"Yes, yes!" She raised her drawn, white face eagerly to his. "I will only take a word, but I have been like a blind woman. I couldn't bear to give him up, and when I learned the truth I thought I could let him suffer. But I couldn't! He is the first and only man!"

"I know." He patted her in a way that said more than words.

"I couldn't have stood out much longer."

"Then you have proof?" His face was wild with eagerness.

"This. Take it quickly. I only found it last night. It had been mislaid in the confusion. I meant to give it up. I really did." With clumsy fingers she drew from the front of her dress an unsealed letter and handed it to him.

"Stephen was not a bad man, you see, and he had no intention of wronging an innocent person."

Darwin K. Anthony's father matched hers as he read the sheet; then he exclaimed weakly: "Thank God! Some thing told me to come straight to you. Something always tells me where to find the heart of things."

Kirk was considerably surprised that afternoon when a sergeant and two policemen came to his cell, signifying that he was to accompany them. He could not make out where they were taking him, and, despite their apologetic

MOTHERS' DAY.
Sunday, May 10, Day Set Aside for Its Observance by Governor Ferris.

The mother is the queen of the home and the home is the anteroom to Heaven. Industry, thrift, honesty, self-sacrifice, sobriety, virtue, sympathy and love are fostered in the home. The home is the bulwark of our glorious nation. Every influence that stimulates the founding of home adds to the nobility of manhood and womanhood.

"Breaking home ties" is one of the most pathetic, yet one of the most beautiful pictures in the world of art. The boy or girl bidding good-bye to father and mother receives a holy benediction that can never escape memory. Out of the shadows and out of the sunshine comes mother's love, in the voice, mother's love.

On Mothers' Day I urge every boy, every girl, every man, every woman in Michigan to pay a tribute of love and devotion to the living mother. Just read her last letter once more; then write her a joyous letter telling her of your loyalty and a bid in love. On the grave of the sleeping mother scatter flowers mingled with your tears.

Yes, the greatness and glory of a nation is in the hands and hearts of the mothers.

THEREFORE, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, ask that the people of Michigan set apart the second Sunday in May (the 10th) as Mothers' Day. As far as possible, let parents in their homes and both young and old in public meetings discuss the theme of mother with that enthusiasm and sincerity which should characterize all loyal Americans.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State this twenty-seventh day of April, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen and of the Commonwealth the seventy-eighth.

Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor.

By the Governor:

Frederick C. Martindale,
Secretary of State.

Y. M. C. A. Summer Camp.

The second annual Y. M. C. A. camp will be held this year at Beaver Island and will open June 22nd and close July 2nd. Ashbury Odellrecht, swimming instructor and athletic director at Bay View, will have charge of the land and water sports, and Van Vaulcavan, who cooks the food with the hungry smell, will fill the cavities which outdoor life makes in a normal boy. But a limited number of boys can be accommodated, so if you want to go you had better write A. B. Ball of Boyne City at once.

How Weather Is Forecasted

their speed and their route and then predicts the time of their arrival at any specified point. If they traveled, like a ship, steered by compass, on exact course to the east, and if they moved invariably at the same speed, then weather forecasting would be a simple sum in arithmetic, like calculating the time when a railroad train running 50 miles an hour will arrive at a station 500 miles away. But storms are not railroad trains. They travel in an easterly direction, but they do not travel due east. Their speed is liable to change and they are affected by the presence of other storms, by mountain ranges, large bodies of water and many other things which make weather prophecizing the complicated science that it is. The skeleton of the science, however, is the progress of those "highs" and "lows" eastward across the country.

This progress is caused by the shape of the earth and the well known fact that hot air rises. The tropical sun in the regions along the equator heats great masses of air, which rise and drift toward the north and south poles. As the earth revolves from west to east these masses are carried along with it at the same speed. But, as is also well known, the equator revolves much faster than the poles, which are practically stationary, in much the same way as the rim of a wheel revolves faster than the hub. Therefore these masses of air, revolving at the same rate at the equator, begin, as they approach the poles, to move much faster than the earth beneath them. There is thus a constant movement of the atmosphere from west to east, a movement which becomes more marked the nearer one gets to the poles.

This, of course, does not mean that the wind always blows from the west. The great current flows in that direction, but surface conditions cause innumerable eddies which are the winds we feel. Into a low pressure area, for instance, the air rushes from every direction. Thus, if the center of the disturbance is to the west of us we will have an easterly wind as the air rushes toward this center. When the storm has reached and passed us on its easterly way we will have westerly winds. For this reason it is common to say that west winds mean clear weather.

The air that flows into the low pressure area obviously must go somewhere. Since it is coming in from every point of the compass the only available place is up. As it rises it cools and contracts. In the process the moisture it contains is condensed and we have rain. That is, we are likely to. It cannot be stated too emphatically that there are many things to be considered which may make exceptions to the most fundamental rules.

In regard to temperature, everyone has noticed that rain in winter means warm weather; in summer cool weather. This arises from the fact that heat travels more easily through clear skies than through clouds and moisture. In the daytime heat reaches the earth from the sun; at night it leaves the earth to be absorbed in the atmosphere. In summer, therefore, when the days are longer than the nights, the earth is being heated for a greater part of the 24 hours than it is being cooled. In consequence the clearer the weather and the easier it is for heat to travel the hotter it grows. In winter the reverse is true. The cooling time is longer than the heating and the clearer it is the colder it grows.

phere is the key to the weather, affecting the three vital questions of rain, temperature and wind. Many things may create an area of low pressure and many things may influence its career when once it has been created. But there are certain general rules based on the principles already outlined. The weather maps tell the forecaster the conditions of the last few days, the telegraph tells him of conditions at the moment, and with this information he is able to predict the conditions for the immediate future from a standpoint very different to that of the amateur observer, however experienced, who can form an opinion only from the signs visible to his unaided eye. It may, in fact, be said that no accurate forecasts for more than a few hours in advance are possible unless the prophet is able to study a series of observations covering a wide range of country a few hours after they have been taken. For its weekly forecasts, indeed, the United States Weather Bureau has reports not only from this country but from abroad and at sea as well.

Banquets of States and Nations.

No event in the history of our city will ever give more pleasure and profit than the banquet at the M. E. church May 22 promises. The people from each state will have their own table. Able representatives of each state and nation will tell of its glory. Mrs. Shores has charge of the menu. Dr. W. F. Kendrick, D. D., will be the toastmaster. No time or expense will be spared to make this the social event of the year.

The new banquet hall will seat 300. No seats sold after May 15th. Get your tickets at once.

MUST OBSERVE SPEED LIMIT

Traffic Ordinance and State Speed Laws to be Enforced in Charlevoix.

Steps were taken by the common council Monday evening to enforce the traffic ordinance and law governing the speed of automobiles and motor cycles.

Drivers of automobiles and motor cycles in Charlevoix are probably no worse than those of other towns, but in several instances recently the speed limit has been broken and several accidents narrowly averted. City Attorney Shanahan was instructed to notify all drivers and owners of cars that the traffic ordinance in the future must be observed or prosecution will follow.

Bicycle riders who persist in riding on the sidewalks will also be brought under this order and in the future are warned to keep to the streets.

The Eveline Rural School Athletic League held their Play Festival at Ironton, Friday May 1st. During the day the pupils took part in the usual features. The Three Bell District No. 2 received the pennants for first place and for honor standard. Advance won the Relay banner and Ironton second place. The base ball game between the Ironton and Advance school teams was a victory 17 to 5 in favor of Ironton. A potluck dinner was enjoyed by about 250 persons.

SWAT THE FLY

Helme Says Fly Has a White Leghorn Beat When it Comes to Laying.

Consider the house fly and his mate, says James W. Helme, State Dairy and Food Commissioner. They toil not, neither do they spin, but when it comes to bringing forth posterity they have got Teddy Roosevelt's hobby beat a mile. About this time Mr. and Mrs. House Fly leave their winter quarters and hie themselves to the nearest manure pile, where Mrs. House Fly makes her nest and lays 120 eggs at one sitting. As a layer Mrs. Fly has got the White Leghorn beat to a frazzle. In twelve hours these eggs hatch into maggots and unless picked up by the old hen and converted into eggs they crawl down in the manure and eat this luscious substance for a week. Then after laying dormant for another week they come full fledged flies dressed out in an Easter suit minus the hat and split skirt and proceed to give the race-suicide theory another blow in the solar plexus.

Every fly killed in May means a 1,000,000 less in September. Now is the time to swat the fly and swat him hard.

The Agent Of Owl Creek Junction

He Made a Success of a Difficult Job

By F. A. MITCHEL

"There's no use, Jim," said Laura Bingham, "we can't get married until we've got the $40 a month, and that's all you get from the railroad and all you're likely to get even if you are promoted. You know yourself that conductors on your road get only $20. We'll have to give it up."

Jim Perkins saw the force of his fiancée's argument. He resolved to apply for a position that would take him away from her.

The terminal of the road was on the Missouri river, and at that time a number of railroads were pushing out into the great American desert. Jim wrote an application for the position of station agent on the frontier. He had no expectation of any notice being taken of his application and intended to leave the service of the road anyway and go west. What was his surprise to receive by return mail an appointment as station agent at Owl Creek Junction, a point out on the plains not far from the Rocky mountains. Jim had another surprise. The salary as station agent at Owl Creek Junction was laid down as $50 a month, which was a good deal more than he had been getting.

JIM HAD SNATCHED HIS OWN WEAPON

With a sad heart he started for his new field of labor. On the way he was asked about Owl Creek Junction and learned that it was looked upon as one of the most promising points on the road. True, at the time the population in the vicinity were a lawless lot, such as usually precedes the better class who begin the real development of new countries. But the branching of a great thoroughfare was sure to bring time to make Owl Creek Junction a city.

"This welcome encouragement came to me in the breast of James Perkins. He had $50 that he had saved when he expected to marry Laura Bingham, and he resolved to invest it as soon as he arrived in a town lot. He did not expect to get a lot for so small an amount in the center of the place, but would be satisfied with one on the outskirts.

Hopeful youth—that leads one on through dreams to realities, ending either in success or failure. After all are not such visions better than pessimism, which undertakes nothing and accomplishes nothing?

The nearer Jim got to Owl Creek Junction the more he learned about it. One bucket of cold water after another was dashed over him till he received the bucket itself, which struck him with such force as to stun him. The conductor in charge of the last section of the road gave him a true picture of Owl Creek Junction and made it plain to him why he had been appointed agent there.

The nearest house to the junction was a mile. The country round about was infested with jayhawkers and horse thieves. No agent at the railway station had thus far been able to collect money for tickets from 60 per cent of the persons who traveled on the road. They either demanded tickets without pay at the point of the revolver or used the same implement to pass the conductor without paying a fare. But the agent method was to call for a ticket at the station, get their hands on it and walk away, forgetting to leave the cash for it. There had been five agents within six months. Now the last one appointed was eagerly waiting for his successor.

Jim received this terrible back-story shortly before the train drew up at Owl Creek Junction, and his heart sank down into his boots. When the train stopped at his new home he looked upon as desolate a sight as he had ever seen in his life. There were no station, a water tank, a fuel-house and nothing else except an open stretch of country—labeled principally by the prairie dog, the sole vegetable product being the cactus.

As Jim stepped off the train a man came out of the station expectantly. A bandage covered his forehead and his left eye. His arm was in a sling. "The new agent?" he asked of Jim.

"Yes," replied Jim faintly. "Well, come in here and I'll turn over the property. This train goes back in half an hour, and I propose to go on her."

"Been hurt?" inquired the new agent. "Slightly. I was fool enough to try to collect the price of a ticket from a roadster. I advise you not to try it, but if you're bent on doing so you'll find a couple of 42 caliber revolvers in the drawer under the ticket window. The company sent them out for the use of agents who were bent on making collections."

Jim received the contents of the ticket office and recollected for them time to see his predecessor step on the train happily and pulled away to civilization. The puffing of the locomotive gradually died away in the distance, to be replaced by an absolute silence. Jim would have liked to hear the hoot of even an owl, but there were no trees for an owl to roost in, and he wondered how the creek got its name. He looked for a place in it deep enough to drown himself in, but it did not afford even that.

It was 5 o'clock in the afternoon of the day after Jim Perkins arrived at Owl Creek Junction. Jim was sitting at a desk with his hat pulled down over his eyes. He was at the lowest or, rather, the highest point of despair. A train was due in ten minutes from one of the branches of the railroad, going eastward. A man with a red face, a stubble beard and one eye stepped up to the ticket window and said:

"Young fellow, gimme a ticket to Antelope, and be quick about it." Jim arose from his chair and stepped to the window. He had laid a cocked revolver beside it where it could not be seen. He took down a ticket from a rack, stamped it and, holding it in his hand, said:

"Three dollars and forty cents, please." A glare came in the ticket purchaser's eye, and he put his hand to his hip. There was a report, but not from his revolver. Jim had snatched his own weapon, brought it to bear on the purchaser and fired.

When the train reached the station, the conductor stepped down on to the platform and went into the station. A man's body was lying on its face below the ticket window.

"What's up?" he asked. "I've been sent out here," replied Jim, "to sell tickets for money. This man wanted to go to Antelope without paying his fare. He can go free as baggage, I reckon. You'd better turn him out to the train."

The conductor looked wonderingly at Jim for a few moments, then said: "By cracker! You're a cool one. You think you can keep this up?"

"I'll keep it up till I get killed, and I'd rather get killed than remain a railroad employee, especially at Owl Creek Junction."

The conductor succeeded in getting a brief account of the affair from the only living participant, then, not wishing to get behind time, called the man in charge of the baggage car and with his assistance carried the body on board the train. Then there was a whistle and the big snake crawled away over the plains.

Jim Perkins did not have to kill any more men at Owl Creek Junction station. The news that the railroad company had sent out an agent who means business, circulated, and after that would be passengers paid their fare. Jim since he had begun the work would not give it up till he had proved that he was master of the situation. Then wrote to the president of the road that the population under the influence of the railroad was beginning to change and he thought that any agent could collect for tickets there. He would like a station in a more settled locality.

A reply came notifying Jim that another man would relieve him and he was to report at the general offices of the company. When he reached the terminal and showed his order to a man at a desk he was sent up to the office of the president.

"Jim," said that officer, "I believe you are the man who collected fares at Owl Creek Junction."

"I am, sir," replied Jim. "You sort, I haven't another place, especially fitted for your peculiar abilities. What kind of a position would you like?"

"Any you happen to have vacant. I've been railroad all my life. I don't know anything else."

The president tapped a bell. An office boy entered and was directed to call the superintendent. When that gentleman entered the president said to him: "Mr. Bowers, this is James Perkins, recently station agent at Owl Creek Junction. Make him a train dispatcher and as soon as he learns the duties of that position give him the next job in the scale. A man who could make Owl Creek Junction a paying station must be good for almost anything. At any rate, try him."

Before entering upon the duties of his new office Jim went to see his sweetheart and told her of the change that had come over his fortunes. Jim's salary was quite sufficient to warrant their marriage, and their engagement was renewed. Jim passed through a number of grades and finally became president of the road, besides making a fortune. Throughout all of his administration he was known as one devoted to the welfare of the thousands of employees of the road under his management.

As it is to prove that the spot was really peopled by kind spirits, a gentle voice seemed to whisper the news to her and she turned to find him smiling at her. She rose and met him with her hands outstretched, her face transfigured.

After a time she leaned backward in his arms and said gravely: "You feel when one says many, many prayers the good saints always answer. The padre told me that I should never cease until you came, but I grew very tired, señor."

"And you never doubted me?"

"Oh, no."

"I'm free, you know."

"Of course! What else were my prayers for? Had my father allowed I would have gone to your prison, but he forbade it, as I had no choice. But every hour I prayed that he might give me leave, and I think his heart was yielding."

"I'm sure of that," he told her, "for I have just come from him."

It was some time later when the sun was dipping that voices sounded outside the wall of verdure, and Kirk heard Andres Garvel saying:

"Of a certainty I shall try that experiment, señor, for the ticks in this country are a pest to cattle. A little to the right and you will find the path, So!"

An instant later the two white haired men appeared.

"Hello! There you are, eh?" Darwin K. Anthony exclaimed gruffly.

"Where's that girl?" He paused and let his hostile eyes rest upon Gertrude.

She saw a great, forbidding giant of a man scowling down at her with eyes like Kirk's, and she came forward timidly, holding out her hands. She was smiling up at him faintly.

"You are Keek's father, yes? You are the Señor Antonio?"

Mr. Anthony uttered a curious, choking exclamation and gathered her gently in his arms. When he looked up his eyes were wet and his deep lined face was working.

"I couldn't wait any longer," he apologized humbly to his son. "I had to come and see her."

"And then I hope you will like me," she said in her grave, quiet way.

"Your father has told me everything," Garvel laid a hand upon his new son's shoulder, "and we have become good friends already. I fear I owe you a great apology, my boy. But if I consent that you take my little girl away to your country will that be reparation?"

"Then you will let her go with us?" Kirk cried happily.

"If she doesn't go I'll stay," Anthony sealer rumbled. "I don't see how you ever did it, you're such a damned fool. Now let's go back to the house, it's sundown."

"We'll be along directly," his son assented.

"There are chills in the evening air," Mr. Garvel protested.

"I'm sorry, but we were waiting for the father. They were almost in sight when you frightened them away."

Gertrude nodded. "It is quite true, Señor Antonio. We heard them all about, everywhere." She placed her little hand in Kirk's, then checked her father's remonstrance, saying:

"Oh, it is quite proper for us to walk home together now, you know."

"Come on, Garvel," exclaimed Darwin K. Anthony. "You understand how it is." Together they went out through the fragrant path a little way. Then old man Anthony paused and called back to his son wistfully. "But I say, Kirk, don't stay too long; we're lonesome."

THE END.

Farm and Garden

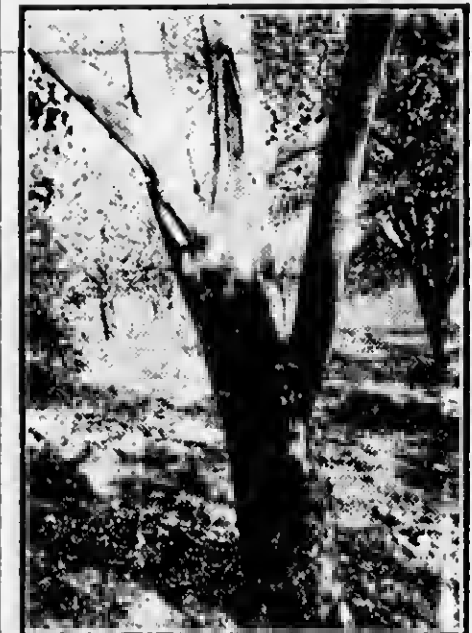

PREPARATION FOR WINTER.

Work Which Can Be Done Now to Insure Next Crop.

Although in climates where zero temperatures are expected, late fall or early winter pruning of fruit trees is not advised, as unkind winds that do not readily heal, still, after the fruit harvest, even in the best cared for orchards, considerable cutting out of branches that cracked or broke under their weight of peaches, apples and pears is necessary.

Branches that have been cracked or broken off about half way would, in most cases, be best sawed off as close to the main trunk as possible without injury to the bark of the latter. If desirable to save the basal part of a broken branch, make the cut just above a strong upward growing branchlet.

Clip off all twigs that are hanging loosely by their bark, also take out all blighted wood that had not previously been removed, cutting this well below the diseased portion, not omitting to dip the pruning shears or knife into a weak solution of carbolic acid and water or into a vessel of alcohol, after making each cut.

The best mixture for coating the cut surfaces is a preparation made by boiling one ounce of litharge in one pint of oil for two hours and then stirring in sifted wood ashes until the point is of the proper consistency. This is applied with a brush after the edges of the bark have been pruned smooth, and just enough should be used to coat the cut.

All the mummied and undeveloped fruits and excrescences should also be taken off and decayed fruits and broken branches cleaned up and burned, as well as many of the fallen leaves, as possible, to destroy the germs of disease and the hibernating carcasses of insects that may be among them.

Newly set trees may need some cutting back of top, but should not be cut back of the main trunk, and the young trunks ought to be carefully examined from the base to top for indications of lower work, which can be easily checked by lifting the young trunk just under the bark with a penknife or pointed wire. Where it is convenient to do so a couple of deep furrows may be plowed between each two rows in both the old and new orchards.—Farm Progress.

STUDY YOUR SOIL.

Over 400 types of soils are listed in the United States. To farm properly on these various types demands clear thinking and good judgment, for "it pays best to grow our staple crops only on soils to which they are adapted or on soils similar to or nearly identical to those on which they have been developed."

Early Pasture For Hogs.

If a patch of rye seeded last fall is available for spring hog pasture, the cost of producing pork can be considerably reduced. If grown rye can be had, then sow at the earliest possible moment a mixture of oats, field peas and rape.

Sow two or three lots of this and change from one to the other. The oats will provide earliest grazing, the field peas next and the rape, if not overpastured, will carry the animals well along through the summer.

Hogs do especially well on green forage of this kind. It keeps them in good health, results in rapid gains and is the cheapest kind of feed. Ordinarily farmers depend altogether too much upon grain, the most expensive kind of ration. Why not utilize these green crops and reduce the cost of raising pigs?

MILKING SHORTHORNS LIKED IN ENGLAND

It is claimed by high authority that from 80 to 90 per cent of the milk used in England comes from dual types of cattle, writes Thomas Shaw in the National Stockman. The great preponderance comes from the Short-horns. In fact very much more than from all the other breeds combined. There are some Shorthorn herds in England that are maintained only for beef. But the proportion of these to that of the Shorthorns that are milked is very small indeed.

It would also be correct to say that nearly as large a proportion of the beef consumed comes from Shorthorns, pure and in the graded form, and yet in the face of these facts some of the While dairymen as a rule pin their faith to cattle of dairy breeding, many farmers like the milking strain of Shorthorns. A Kansas farmer says of this breed: "Three Shorthorn cows of mine are all good milkers, giving about five to six gallons per day when fresh and milking up with their milk very well. Sometimes they are giving about a gallon and a half a day within two weeks of the time they come fresh again. They do not keep fat on the best of feed when giving milk. Their milk is good and rich, and I consider they pay well for their feed and milking." The bull shown is of the milking Shorthorn strain.

wise teachers at our colleges have said that dual qualities could not be maintained.

An annual was issued in 1912 by the English Dairy Shorthorn association giving the milk records of 243 cows for that year. The cows were in milk on the average 290½ days. The lactation periods in many instances were not completed, and quite a number of the animals were heifers. The average production in milk was 7,518.88 pounds. The males, the progeny of these, when grown into beef invariably do well. The steers grown on skim milk and alfalfa during the milk period are positive favorites with the butchers. They attain to a large development, especially during the second year of growth, and it is claimed that the beef produced by these animals is better marbled than when the calves are reared upon the dam. In the latter instances the maturity is frequently premature, and the external fat is excessive.

Pig Management.

A dry sleeping accommodation is an absolute necessity. Good ventilation is almost as important. Slates, tiles, boards and corrugated iron are too cold for pigs to make the greatest progress. There is nothing which gives the necessary ventilation and warmth in all seasons as a good foot thick of wheat straw. Exercise, especially between weaning and fattening, is also of very great importance. Coal or ashes and water should be within the reach of pigs of all ages to assist in counteracting the natural acidity of the stomach. A handful of common sulphur given once a week will be helpful. Great regularity in feeding, with absolute cleanliness, is no very small detail.

Snuffles in Sheep.

This is the time of year when this disease becomes prevalent. It is similar to a bad cold in persons. Keep the sheep in dry quarters that are well ventilated, but free from drafts.

One of the best remedies is to hold the animal and make it inhale the fumes from a jar which has been poured over red hot coals.

Fresh plum tar can also be put in the mouth and on the nose. Prevention is better than cure. Keep the sheep dry and protected from storms.

BROOKLYN TABERNACLE

BIBLE-STUDY ON THE UNJUST STEWARD.

Luke 16:1-13—May 10.
"He that is faithful in a very little is faithful also in much; and he that is unfaithful in a very little is unfaithful in much."—Verse 10.

BECAUSE the Pharisees were the leading opponents of the Law, Jesus pointed many of His parables against them, while He comparatively ignored the religious Jews—the Sadducees, who made no profession of faith. Today's lesson was spoken as a rebuke to the spirit of the Pharisees, who bound heavy burdens upon others, but shirked them themselves, while pretending hearty obedience to the Law.

In older times, more than now, it was the custom for rich men to appoint stewards. Such a steward had absolute control of his master's goods. The one mentioned in our Lord's parable was extravagant, wasteful, unsatisfactory. His master concluded to dispense with his services, and asked him to render up his accounts.

On his books were certain debtors who apparently could not meet their obligations. The steward concluded to scale off these debts, so that the debtors could pay before he turned over his office to his successor. One owing a hundred bushels of oil was told to scale it down to fifty; another owing a hundred measures of wheat, to scale it down twenty per cent, etc. Such a use of his authority made him friends among these favored; and his lord complimented the wisdom displayed.

Hypocrisy of the Pharisees.

Jesus condemned the Pharisees for taking an opposite course. He declared that they put in Moses' seat as interpreters of the Law; and that, had they followed this steward's course, they would have made friends of publicans and sinners, by encouraging them to do their best to comply with the Law. Instead, they bound heavy burdens upon the people, discouraged them and a Pharisee told their sympathy.

All this was hypocrisy; for they knew their own inability to comply with the law, which is the full measure of a perfect man's ability. Their proper attitude would have been to confess their own shortcomings, to strive to do their best, to cry to God for mercy and to teach the people to do similarly. Thus they would have been better prepared for the Gospel. As it was, they were blundering boys themselves and others from becoming Jesus' disciples.

Applying the Parable.

When God's people give themselves to Him, they give also their earthly rights and interests, and become merely stewards of their time, talent, influence, wealth, etc. These stewards have God's approval in the use of all earthly things to the forwarding of their spiritual interests. As they use earthly opportunities for advancing Heavenly interests, this will be reckoned to them for wise stewardship. Being found faithful in the use of earthly things in God's service, they can be safely entrusted with a share in Messiah's glorious Kingdom. Their unselfishness, their willingness to sacrifice, will be the basis of divine approval.

Wherever selfishly appropriates the things of which he is steward will not be trusted with the future great things.

Whoever sacrifices will thus demonstrate his faithfulness, his loyalty, to God; and to such the greater things will be entrusted. Would God entrust the riches of the future life to any who now prove themselves unfaithful, selfish, envious, using present blessings for self-gratification? Surely not!

Serving Two Masters.

There are two great opposing powers: one evil, the other good. God is the Good Master; Satan, the evil master. God, His Spirit and His teachings, are represented by the word Love; Satan and his course by selfishness, covetousness, unkindness. Through Adam's fall the whole world has lost the Spirit of God, and has been under Satan's domination for centuries.

The Spirit of self-interest, covetousness, has gotten hold upon our mind, so that only with great difficulty can its power be broken.

But here comes in the Gospel proposition. God desires some faithful souls in the Kingdom of Jesus in dispensing His blessings. He offers this great prize of the Kingdom to those who demonstrate that they have the right spirit. Whoever accepts the Gospel will turn his back upon sin, selfishness, and all works of the flesh and the devil related thereto, and sets his face toward God. Then he must demonstrate not only that he prefers right to wrong on equal terms, but that he is willing to suffer the loss of all things that he may be on the right side, in God's side.

Then comes the trial, the testing. He seeks to serve God and to gain the divine reward. But his mind in this flesh is a tendency to appreciate the rewards of manhood, selfishness. This brings about the great battle. One or the other must conquer. But God has promised grace sufficient in every time of need, although it requires us to do all that we are able.

YOUR AUCTION SALE

It means a good deal to you. More money is lost by improper selling methods than in any other line of business. An Auctioneer must know the selling value of stock and implements before he can successfully conduct a sale. My success with sales for the last 10 years is due to my knowledge of values and being able to hold the attention of bidders. If you intend having a sale this season, let me talk it over with you, and advise you what to do. Ask those who have employed me to cry their sales if they were satisfied.

Harmony Grange.

Harmony grange held one of their interesting meetings the evening of May 2. There were twenty-three members present, also visitors from four other granges.

The site committee reported that they had purchased five acres of Mr. N. Morgan of Boyne City, for a site for the proposed grange hall. The members will meet on May 7th, to clean up the grounds.

Dr. W. H. Marshall and D. E. McClure were present and the latter gave a very interesting address on "sanitation, education, and civic improvement."

It was announced that the grange would hold a fair and social evening at the Pleasant Valley school house on Saturday evening, May 9. Everyone is invited to come and have a good time.

The following program was announced for the next meeting after which the ladies served one of those good "grange suppers."

Song No. 58—Grange. Roll call, "Name one important thing your mother did for you."

Recitation—Miss Enid Lofd. Quartette, "Silver Threads Among the Gold"—Mr. and Mrs. Willson and Mr. and Mrs. H. L. Willson.

Paper, "What is Uncle Sam Doing for His Women Folks?"—Mrs. W. C. Burdick. Music by Mr. and Mrs. Irving Newville.

Our next meeting is on May 16. Visiting Grangers always welcome. There will be initiation in the third and fourth degrees.

FERRIS NOT A CANDIDATE

Says He Will Contribute $1000 to Any Man Who Will Make the Run.

"I will not be a candidate for governor again unless necessity compels me to make the run," declared Gov. Ferris in a recent interview.

Just what constitutes a "necessity" in the governor's views is not known unless it means that in case a man cannot be found who he thinks will pull as large a vote as the governor he will make the run.

Further than that the governor said: "I will contribute $1000 to any man who I think can make the run and make a good showing. I am tired of this political game."

In making this last statement the governor took a rap at some people in the state who have not been appointed to offices and who blame the administration for not getting jobs.

THE SHROPSHIRE SHEEP

Characteristics That Indicate Quality in This Popular Breed.

The Shropshire breed of sheep, having its home on the downs of England is very symmetrical and stylish in form. The head should show refinement in every feature with moderate length, says the American Cultivator.

A characteristic attribute is for it to be closely covered with wool, the wool between the ears being dense running to the bridge of the nose joining the which covers the cheek and the lower part of the head. The ears should be far apart, pointed and moderate in thickness and preferably covered to the tip with fine curly wool. There should not be the least evidence of horns, as the places where these sometimes appear should be covered with wool. The neck should be nicely attached and full of sufficient length to carry the head with peculiar style. The body to possess this characteristic smoothness and symmetry must be somewhat circular and round ribbed. The back should be straight, str.

I have found that Shropshires are the most profitable sheep among the mutton breeds, says a New York sheep grower. I have handled and fed all the mutton breeds in the first place. Shropshires do not eat as much as other breeds, and they bear more wool. I sheared 150 breeding ewes last year, all sucking their lambs, and they averaged eleven pounds of wool apiece and one and a half lambs apiece. They make good mothers to their lambs, good milkers and are long lived. We run about 150 in a bunch. They are the only mutton breed that you can run in big bunches. You are never troubled in Shropshires with having goats in the neck.

and kilt so that the handling of this part shows it to be smoothly and evenly covered. The loin must be wide and hips not prominent and the quarters lengthy and deep. The width from the loin and hips should be carried out to the tail head, and the fullness characteristic of this part should be maintained on the outside of the thigh and on the inside as well.

The fleece should be strong and fine in fiber, with all the density possible. From the bridge of the nose to the fetlock as well as along the belly a dense covering of wool is desirable. In opening the fleece the fibers, which are generally about three inches long, should part readily, show clear white in strong contrast to the pink skin. About the ears or top of the head there should be no patches of black fiber, nor should these appear distributed anywhere in the fleece. The characteristic markings for the face and legs are rich dark brown in color. The best type of this breed shows an unusual combination of quality and quantity of both wool and mutton.

LIBRARY MONEY

Penal Fines are to be Used for School Libraries in the State of Michigan.

The library apportionment this year will be made in accordance with sections 4781 and 4782 as amended by the 1913 session of the legislature. The apportionment will be made by the department July 15th, the date for making the primary apportionment. A statement will be sent to every county clerk and treasurer and to the township clerk of the districts that will share in this apportionment. Each county treasurer shall, before the first day of August, make the apportionment of the penal fine money at that time in his hands among the several townships, districts or township districts in his county. This money when received by the township treasurer shall be applied to the support of the libraries in his township according to the statement sent him by the Department of Public Instruction. Every township clerk should report to each director on or before August 15th the amount of primary and library money belonging to the district. Directors should see to it that they have this statement that they may give account in their yearly report of all money belonging to the funds drawn by their district or still in the township treasury. Dog tax is not a part of the library fund. It belongs to the general fund.

FOUR UNIONS REPRESENTED

County W. C. T. U. Hold Profitable and Interesting Meeting.

Mrs. Burdick Named as President for the Coming Year—Adopt Resolutions.

A most interesting and profitable meeting of the County W. C. T. U. was held in the M. E. church in this city May 6th and 7th. There were four unions represented, the new union at Ironston being especially full of zeal and enthusiasm and cordially welcomed by East Jordan, Boyne City and Charlevoix. Due to the illness of their leader, Norwood union was not represented.

All sessions of the convention were made aggressive and practical by the presence of Mrs. Howard, the district superintendent, and by the fine executive skill of the county president, Mrs. Burdick, inspiring individual leadership in each delegate present.

The session opened Wednesday and the program as published last week was rendered. Committees as follows were appointed:

Auditing—Messdames Demarest, J. R. Cooper and Ikens. Courtships—Messdames Edwards and Cowan.

Credentialed—Messdames Campbell, Burns and Munson.

Resolutions—Messdames Duffey, Grigsby and Sanderson.

Campaign for subscriptions:

To the Michigan Union—Mrs. Howard.

Union Signal—Mrs. Heston.

Women's Journal, Mrs. A. L. Michigan Suffragist, Mrs. A. L.

Conter, County Chairman E. S. A.

Wednesday evening's session was well attended. Many numbers on the program brought hearty echoes.

The debate given by members of the class of 1917 of the C. H. S. on the subject "Resolved," That the Hobson Resolution Providing for an Amendment to the United States Constitution Prohibiting the Manufacture and Sale of Alcoholic Liquor as a Beverage Should Be Adopted" was much enjoyed. Mr. Craig, Hallie Bon and Mrs. R. B. Armstrong acted as judges. The affirmative was taken by King Saunders, Allen Arnold, John Walker and Vera Mears, with a rebuttal by John Walker. The negative was taken by Robert O'Neill, Robin Merriam, Rena Cram and Elsie Newson, with a rebuttal by Robin Merriam. The judges decided in favor of the negative.

Thursday forenoon the program was followed by the adoption of resolutions and the election of officers, as follows:

"Resolved," That we, the W. C. T. U. of Charlevoix county, put ourselves on record as opposed to every sort of amusement on the Sabbath Day, also to the opening of cigar stores and drug stores for the purpose of selling ice cream, soda or other unnecessary articles, and we pledge our hearty support to every effort made to enforce this. Further, that we call upon the officers to enforce the law in this respect. Resolved, that a copy of this resolution be printed in every paper in the county.

The following officers were elected for the ensuing year:

President—Gertrude J. Burdick, Charlevoix.

Vice-President-at-Large—Mrs. Hickey, pastor of Baptist church, Boyne City.

Corresponding Secretary—Sara M. Wilkinson, Charlevoix.

Recording Secretary—May E. Stewart, East Jordan.

Treasurer—Huldah A. Demarest, Boyne City.

LOCALS LOSE SECOND GAME

Boyne City High Wins on Home Grounds Saturday Afternoon.

"Bonehead" Plying Resulted in Losing Game by Score of 9 to 6—Story of the Game.

Errors and the inability to bunch hits, along with a general lack of baseball sense at critical times—commonly known in the baseball world as "bonehead" playing—cost the second game of the season to Boyne City high last Saturday on the State League field. The final count was 9-6.

Charlevoix had two wonderful chances to sew up the game in the fifth and sixth innings. In the fifth inning Sec, Durand and King got on through a fielder's choice, and a nice little single by Captain Ned Scroggie, who previously had used the stick effectively, was the ooz on the docket. King was caught napping off first and the side was retired. Another poor inning, the sixth, caused by an error, threw the game Boyne City's way. Two men had fallen before the steam of Sec, when with one on, Middleton knocked a slow one to the box. See fielded in good style, but the ball failed to stick in Scroggie's glove and the fun was on. Boyne made four runs on one hit before the locals could get the third out.

Kuhn was easy for the locals as far as hitting was concerned, but he seemed to be able to keep the hits well scattered. Charlevoix connected for eight hits during the game, while Sec held Boyne City to four. Boyne's clotting occurred at the crucial time and runs resulted.

See pitched beautiful ball, fanning nine men. His support was poor in the pinches. Several times with men on it looked easy for runs, but Sec's control and curves proved to have too much stuff on them for safe hits.

BAD FIRE AT EAST JORDAN

Dry Kilns of Cooperage Company's Plant Burns—Loss Will Reach $9,000.

About 2:15 last Wednesday morning the dry kilns at the East Jordan Cooperage Co.'s factory at East Jordan was discovered on fire and beyond control of the night watch.

The kiln was nearly filled with headings and these dry and hot made a fierce fire, the flames leaping higher than the tall smoke-shed. The local fire department responded to the call and as the city mains do not extend to the factory, the plant's fire equipment was used. The fire was undoubtedly caused by hot box on one of the rapidly revolving fans. The loss is estimated at $9,000, partly covered by insurance. In the kiln which was burned was the heading stock from over 100,000 feet of logs.

FRANKLIN HAD A BAD RECORD

Was a Member of a Gang of Detroit Thieves and Out on Parole.

Stole Money from Man Who was Making an Effort to Get Him to Live Straight.

George Franklin, who was arrested at Alba March 20 and placed in the county jail, was taken to Detroit Tuesday, where he is wanted for breaking parole and other serious charges.

Franklin was a member of the gang of thieves who robbed a Woodward avenue store some time ago of over a thousand dollars' worth of goods. After the robbery he and other members of the gang started for Florida, but were picked up at Chattanooga, Tennessee, and brought back to Detroit.

Franklin was taken in charge by Coroner's Clerk Delaurier of Detroit while on parole. He was taken to his home and boarded and clothed for six weeks until he could find him work. Franklin worked two days after finding a job and then skipped out, taking a purse containing about $100 from the Delaurier home. After stealing this money Franklin came to East Jordan to visit relatives. He was there but a short time when he again skipped out, taking with him several hundred dollars of his relatives' money and valuable papers. He was picked up at Alba the next day and since has been in the county jail.

He would probably have again been placed on parole by Judge Mayne had it not been for the fact that Under Sheriff Novak noticed an article in the Detroit Evening News regarding the Detroit robbery. Franklin was confronted with the Detroit incident and admitted that he was the man referred to. From what can be learned, he has a bad criminal record and he will undoubtedly receive a stiff sentence in the Detroit courts.

ENVELOPES MUST BE CHANGED

Return Request Addresses Must Be Stated More Clearly After June 1st.

Postmasters throughout the country have received from the post office department a notification that on June 1 a regulation requiring more definite addresses on return request envelopes printed by the government will become effective. It means that many firms will have to stock up with new envelopes.

The present practice requires only the name of the individual or firm on the outside of the envelope. Under the new regulation the name of the street and the number or name of the building and the room number, if the building is in the city directory, and the exact location at the intersection of streets, stating on which corner the building is situated, will be required.

Poor addressing has caused embarrassing delays in the department recently and the number of dead letters has been increasing. In some cases an important part of the address is missing and very indefinite information is given. Return request envelopes will not be printed by the government after the new regulation becomes effective unless its requirements are complied with.

Seeds sent through the mails with, according to advice from the department, hereafter be carried as fourth-class or parcel post matter, with the parcel post rates of postage—one cent for each two ounces, regardless of the distance.

Notice.

We are ready to do all kinds of cleaning, dyeing and pressing. It is real economy to have your clothing cleaned occasionally. It will add to the life of your garment enough to more than pay for the expense. Beside, your clothes will always be in a sanitary condition. 103 Mason street. Phone 104. O. G. Memorial Day Proclamation

Nations that do not remember the dead do not remember the living. We scatter flowers over the graves of the "Boys in Blue" because of our love for them, because of our love for the noblest nation in the world, because of our love for the remaining members of the Grand Army of the Republic. The added stars in our flag, the birth of a world-wide patriotism, the solidarity of the United States, the commercial, social and political progress of our country has been made possible through the valor and self-sacrifice of the boys who fought for the Union.

We who live to-day learn our lessons of inspiration, of patriotism and service from these heroes. May this day recall sacred memories, may this day afford us one more opportunity for greeting the "old boys" with a smile, with a hearty handshake, with a "God bless you."

For the boys who died in the Spanish American War and for the boys who survived we bring like tokens of love and consecration.

Therefore, I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of the State of Michigan, do hereby issue this my Proclamation and heartily urge the observance of Saturday, May 30, 1914, as Memorial Day.

Given under my hand and the Great Seal of the State this eighth day of May, in the year of our Lord one thousand nine hundred and fourteen and of the Commonwealth the seventy-eighth.

Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor.

By the Governor: Frederick C. Martindale, Secretary of State.

NOVAK FOR SHERIFF

Hastling Young Under-sheriff Announces Himself as Candidate at Coming Primary.

"You can state through the columns of your paper that I will be a candidate for the nomination for sheriff at the primaries August next," was the statement of Charles Novak to the Courier reporter last week.

Charles Novak has been Under-sheriff for the past four years and has made one of the most efficient officers the county has ever had. It is a standing comment that when he goes after an offender he gets him sooner or later, and as sheriff of the county, he would, if elected, make a better record than he has as under-sheriff.

Mr. Novak has been a resident of Charlevoix for the past twelve years. During this entire time he has been engaged in the manufacture of cigars. Politically, he has always been a republican, and has never asked the voters of this county to support him for any office.

If elected to the office of sheriff he will insist upon the enforcement of the laws of the state and use the people's money as carefully as if it was his own. He is going into the race to win and will make an effort to meet personally every voter in the county.

CLEAN UP DAY IN MICHIGAN

Friday, May 15th, the Day Set Aside by Governor Ferris.

People Throughout Entire State Urged to Place Communities in Better Sanitary Condition.

Most of the American people can make things and do things on a gigantic scale; few people have enthusiasm for taking care of things. Eliminate waste and the problem of the high cost of living is solved; eliminate waste and the longevity of the people is lengthened.

The annual loss of property and life by fire in Michigan is appalling. This loss arises very largely from carelessness—a kind of carelessness that is criminal.

All winter long, in our villages and cities and sometimes on the farm, rubbish accumulates in out-buildings, in alleys and by the roadside, in storerooms and attics, furnishing firetraps for the dry season. Furthermore, the accumulation of rubbish, especially of vegetable origin, is a breeding center for disease-producing bacteria. Cleanliness is absolutely essential to health. Cleanliness is a kind of patriotism that needs all possible encouragement.

I, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor of Michigan, do hereby designate Friday, the 15th day of May, 1914, as "Clean Up Day." I heartily recommend all officials—mayors, health officers, fire marshals, etc.—to use all possible diligence in awakening all of the people under their jurisdiction to a realization of the importance of putting their premises in order against the day of needless fires and epidemics. Officials should not only urge the importance of the work, but enforce impartially the laws of the state to this end. I, furthermore, urge that the schools of Michigan, both public and private, recognize this day through fire drill exercises and discussions of the best methods of preserving property and life. All civic organizations should share in this work of conserving life and property. The press with its mighty engineery for good, with, without urging, do all in its power to make this day a beacon light for all the other days of the year.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand and caused to be affixed the Great Seal of State, at the Capitol, in the city of Lansing, this 20th day of April, A. D. 1914. Signed, Woodbridge N. Ferris, Governor.

ADVISE AS TO SPRAYING

Month of May Usually the Critical Time with Fruit Crops.

Should Be Sprayed When the Flower Buds Have Opened and Show Pink and White Color.

The month of May is usually a critical period with fruit crops, as, aside from the danger of injury from frost and other unfavorable climatic conditions, the delicate flowers and fruit are likely to be greatly injured by the attack of various fungous diseases. If fruit growers can only be made to realize this fact and to understand that most, if not all, of the injury can be prevented by thoroughly spraying the trees the value of the fruit crop could easily be doubled.

These fungi develop on the leaves and fruit in the presence of moisture and it has been found that if before infection has taken place the trees are thoroughly sprayed with either lime-sulphur solution or Bordeaux mixture the development of the spores will be prevented and the attack warded off. In order to be effectual the spraying should be repeated often enough to keep the leaves and fruit at all times covered with the spray.

In practice it is customary to spray fruit trees of all kinds when the flowerbuds have been opened so they show a pink or white color, as at this time it is possible to cover the flower stalk and ovary, which will later develop into fruit, and thus protect them during the blossoming period. If the weather is cold and wet, so that the opening of the buds is delayed more than two weeks, it is advisable to repeat the application.

A second spraying should be made as soon as the fruit has set in order to cover the newly developed leaves and the fruit. Care should be taken at this time to use an abundance of the spray so as to fill the calyx-cup at the blossom end of the apple and thus poison the apple worms when they attempt to enter the fruit. Two or three weeks later another application is necessary, especially for apples and pears, which are subject to attack of apple scab, and in seasons when the weather is cold and wet a fourth application a little later is always advisable. For the winter varieties of apples a fifth application during the first part of August (the date varying with the season) should be made for the second brood of the codling moth. A slight modification of these sprays may be used in advantage for any of our orchard fruits.

For the apple and pear it is advisable to use a good brand of commercial lime-sulphur solution at the rate of one part to forty parts of water; one part to fifty parts for the cherry and plum; one part to one hundred for the peach. Two or three pounds of arsenate of lead should be added to each 50 gallons of the spray for the control of curculio, codling moth, tent caterpillar, canker worm and other chewing insects.

For grapevines the same rates can be applied, but Bordeaux mixture—composed of four pounds of copper sulphate, five pounds of lime and fifty gallons of water—should be substituted for the lime-sulphur. Ordinarily this treatment will suffice, but for the control of plant lice and similar insects an application of tobacco decoction or the commercial "Black Leaf" tobacco solution should be used when the insects first appear.

Candidate for Governor.

For some weeks it has been announced in the state papers that Hon. Washington Gardner would be a candidate for the nomination for governor on the Republican ticket this fall. While at Cadillac last week Mr. Gardner stated that—as a result of the encouraging letters he had received throughout the state—he had finally decided that he would enter the race.

JACKSON MAN EATS A SQUARE MEAL AFTER WAITING 15 YEARS

A. W. Hobbs Ends Stomach Suffering Quickly with May's Wonderful Remedy.

A. W. Hobbs of 1801 East Main St., Jackson, Mich., after some fifteen years of suffering from derangements of the stomach and digestive tract, took May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy. He got the surprise of his life—and a swift relief.

Mr. Hobbs has told his own story in a letter, part of which is given here:

"After taking three doses of your stomach remedy I am in perfect condition. I have not felt so well for fifteen years.

"I can eat anything now and it does not distress me. I hope those affected as I was will proceed to get your remedy at once."

The first dose of May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy convinced sufferers of its merit. Many have found only one dose sufficient. Mr. Hobbs' experience is typical. Thousands have taken this remedy with remarkable benefit. It is known everywhere.

May's Wonderful Stomach Remedy clears the digestive tract of unclean secretions and removes poisonous matter. It brings a swift relief to sufferers from stomach, liver and bowel troubles and many declare it has saved them from dangerous operations. Many are sure it has saved their lives.

Because of the wonderful success of this remedy there are many imitators, so be cautious. He sure it's May's. Go to your nearest drug store and ask them about the wonderful results it has been accomplishing in cases they know of in your own town—or send to George H. May, Mfg. Chemist, for free book on stomach ailments and many grateful letters from people who have been restored. Any druggist can tell you its wonderful effects.

For sale by all druggists.

There is more catarrh in this section of the country than in any other. It is a disease that is not only a great source of suffering but it is also a great source of expense. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease and prescribed local remedies and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment it has become a constitutional disease and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only Constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from two drops to one ounce, according to the severity of the case. It acts directly on the blood and cures the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any cure it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials.

GIVEN HERO MEDALS

Harbor Springs Indians Rewarded for Their Bravery by Andrew Carnegie.

In June, 1906, Amos Leveck, William Pratt and Louis Shampine, three Frenchman from Beaver Island who were fishing, lost control of their small launch, and a gale blew them toward the mainland near Good Hart. They cast anchor, fearing to come through the breakers, which would have swamped their launch. They signalled for help and their boat was fast filling with water. Joseph Kijigobeneuse of Harbor Springs and Joseph Okenote of Good Hart, Indians, started out in a small skiff and in danger of losing their lives brought the three men safely to shore. The facts were laid before Andrew Carnegie some time ago and they have each received medals as their reward.

Kijigobeneuse, who lives to the Indian village at the outskirts of Harbor Springs, is a hard-working man, is married and has grown-up children. He is about fifty years of age, although he does not appear to be over thirty. —Petoskey Evening News.

For Keeping Plants Up.
Here's a simple support for tomato plants, peonies, etc., contributed to the Farm Journal:

Get two stakes three feet long and about one inch thick and two inches wide; sharpen them at one end, and get the hoops of a mail keg for the rings. Place the lower one eighteen inches from the points, on the outside of the stakes, and the upper one at the top, on the inside of the stakes. This gives a strong top and a support that will hold any vine and also one that is easy to get around for cultivation.

Beet Tops in the Silage.
Sugar beet tops and shocked corn have been mixed in the silo at the University of Wisconsin to determine their value in this form. About 250,000 tons of sugar beets are raised every year in Wisconsin and the proper utilization of the tops is quite important. The silage from this culture had a slightly stronger odor than ordinary corn silage, although it was not offensive. Cattle relish it as well as they do ordinary silage and obtain as much food value from it, according to the chemists.

It doesn't require a great deal of push to get through the door of adversity. —Detroit Journal.

THOSE SUDDEN TWINGES

Bring Suffering to Many a Charlevoix Reader.

Pain is nature's signal of distress. A warning not to be ignored. Those sharp twinges in the back, those sudden, stab-like pains when stooping, are frequent signs of kidney trouble. Signs that must not be neglected. To remove kidney pains you must assist the kidneys. Use a tested and proven kidney remedy. None more highly endorsed than Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Ophelia Davey of Ellsworth, Mich., says: "I suffered from kidney trouble for some time. I had pain in the small of my back and twinges when stooping or lifting. My back ached at night and was lame in the morning. I tried easily, was head and nervous and had headaches. The kidney secretions were unnatural. I finally took Doan's Kidney Pills and they helped me at once."

Price 50c. at all dealers. Don't simply ask for a kidney remedy—get Doan's Kidney Pills—the name that Mrs. Davey had. Foster-McLure Co., Props., Buffalo, N. Y.

BIBLE STUDY—ON—

RICH TO HELL—POOR TO HEAVEN

Luke 16:19-31—May 17.

"Whoso sleepeth his soul at the cry of the poor, he also shall cry himself, but shall not be heard." —Proverbs 21:13.

DID Jesus mean this? Are the rich to spend eternity in misery because of failing amply every day, and wearing purple and fine linen? To get to Heaven must we be poor beggars, covered with sores, and eating crumbs from a rich man's table? Has charity nothing to do with future rewards and punishments? Again, will the rich, tormented in fire, see the poor in bliss, and will the honored poor see the rich in eternal misery?

For many years this parable has distressed God's people; both heart and head have rebelled. We remembered that Abraham and other Biblical personages were rich; and that God himself is very rich. Finally we looked the subject up in both Hebrew and Greek, and found that Abraham did not go to heaven, the hopeless condition, the Second Death, but to Sheol, Hades, the grave, the death state, where there is no fire.

Our greater knowledge increased the mystery; for the Scriptures declare that Sheol, Hades, the tomb, is to be destroyed; and that all are to be brought from it in the resurrection. No other Scripture seemed to agree with this parable, except as we might use for its support one text in Revelation, which speaks of a symbolic beast and a symbolic false prophet in torment. Thus thinking Christians have been perplexed for centuries by the story of this lesson.

Now All Is Clear—Plain.

Now we see that our lesson is a parable (Matthew 13:34). To take it literally involves the absurdity of supposing that all beggars go to Heaven, and all wealthy to Hell; for the parable says nothing about character. But in a parable the thing said is not the thing meant. Thus wheat and sheep represent children of God; tares and weeds represent those dominated by the Adversary.

In our lesson the rich man was the Jewish nation. The promises, the prophecies and the Law Covenant were their purple, fine linen and sumptuous table. The fine linen symbolized their typical justification through typical sacrifices. The purple robe typified royalty; for they were the typical kingdom. The sumptuous fare represented the Divine promises, as St. Paul implies—Romans 11:19.

In Jesus' day Jewish favor began to end. They were completely cut off in A. D. 70, as all Jews admit. Figuratively, the rich man died and was buried. Nationally the Jews went to Hades, the tomb; and their resurrection has not yet been accomplished, although Zionism is its beginning.

Nationally dead and buried, the Jews individually have had anguish of soul, as they have received persecutions, sometimes, almost from those who profess the name of Jesus, but deny Him in practice. For nineteen centuries the Jews have cried to God, represented in the parable by Abraham. The only answer they have had is that there is a gulf between them and Jehovah. "Think God, the New Dispensation dawns, in which the rich man will return from Hades! Israel will be re-habilitated." —Ezekiel 37, etc.

The Poor Man of the Parable.
Lazarus represented an outcast class—publicans and sinners, who had alienated themselves from God's favor; and Gentiles, to whom favor had never been extended. (Ephesians 2:12.) These had no line then of typical justification, no purple of Kingdom prospects, no rich prospects. All that they could have were crumbs from the rich man's table.

The Scriptures illustrate two such crumbs given by Jesus. His healing of the Roman centurion's servant, at the request of the Jews, was a crumb. Similarly, the Syro-Phoenician woman got a crumb when she entreated Jesus to heal her daughter. Jesus noted her faith and gave her the desired crumb. See Matt. 15:21-28.

As the Jews died to their favor, so the outcasts died to their disfavor. The early Church was made up of this Lazarus class. In the parable they are represented as Abraham's children—in his arms. Jesus and His followers are Abraham's Spiritual Seed. This St. Paul writes—Galatians 3:29.

Divine Five Brethren.
The parable mentions the fact that the rich man had five brethren. In Jesus' day the Jews of Palestine represented chiefly the tribes of Judah and Benjamin, while the majority of the other ten tribes were scattered abroad. The statement of the parable, "They have Moses and the Prophets," proves that Jews only were referred to; for no Gentile had Moses and the Prophets. The number five is also in accord. Whereas two tribes, Judah and Benjamin, were represented by one rich man, proportionately the other ten tribes would be represented by five brethren.

Vera Cruz Main Gateway For Troops to Mexico City

Nearly 300 Miles of Mountainous Country Face Offensive Army—United States Hasn't Minimized Dangers of Situation

VERA CRUZ, the most important seaport in Mexico, which several months ago witnessed the assembling of the International fleet in her harbor, at once becomes the most strategic point in the situation between the United States and the defiant southern republic. As a matter of fact, Vera Cruz, in all the wars that Mexico has experienced, has felt the first blow. An invading army to reach Mexico City would have to land its troops at this port and then beach a trip across a mountainous country, peculiarly adapted to the style of warfare the Mexicans like.

There was a time when the general staff of the United States army did think an invasion of Mexico an easy matter. It was thought then that a certain phenomenal military success, which had landed troops in Mexico

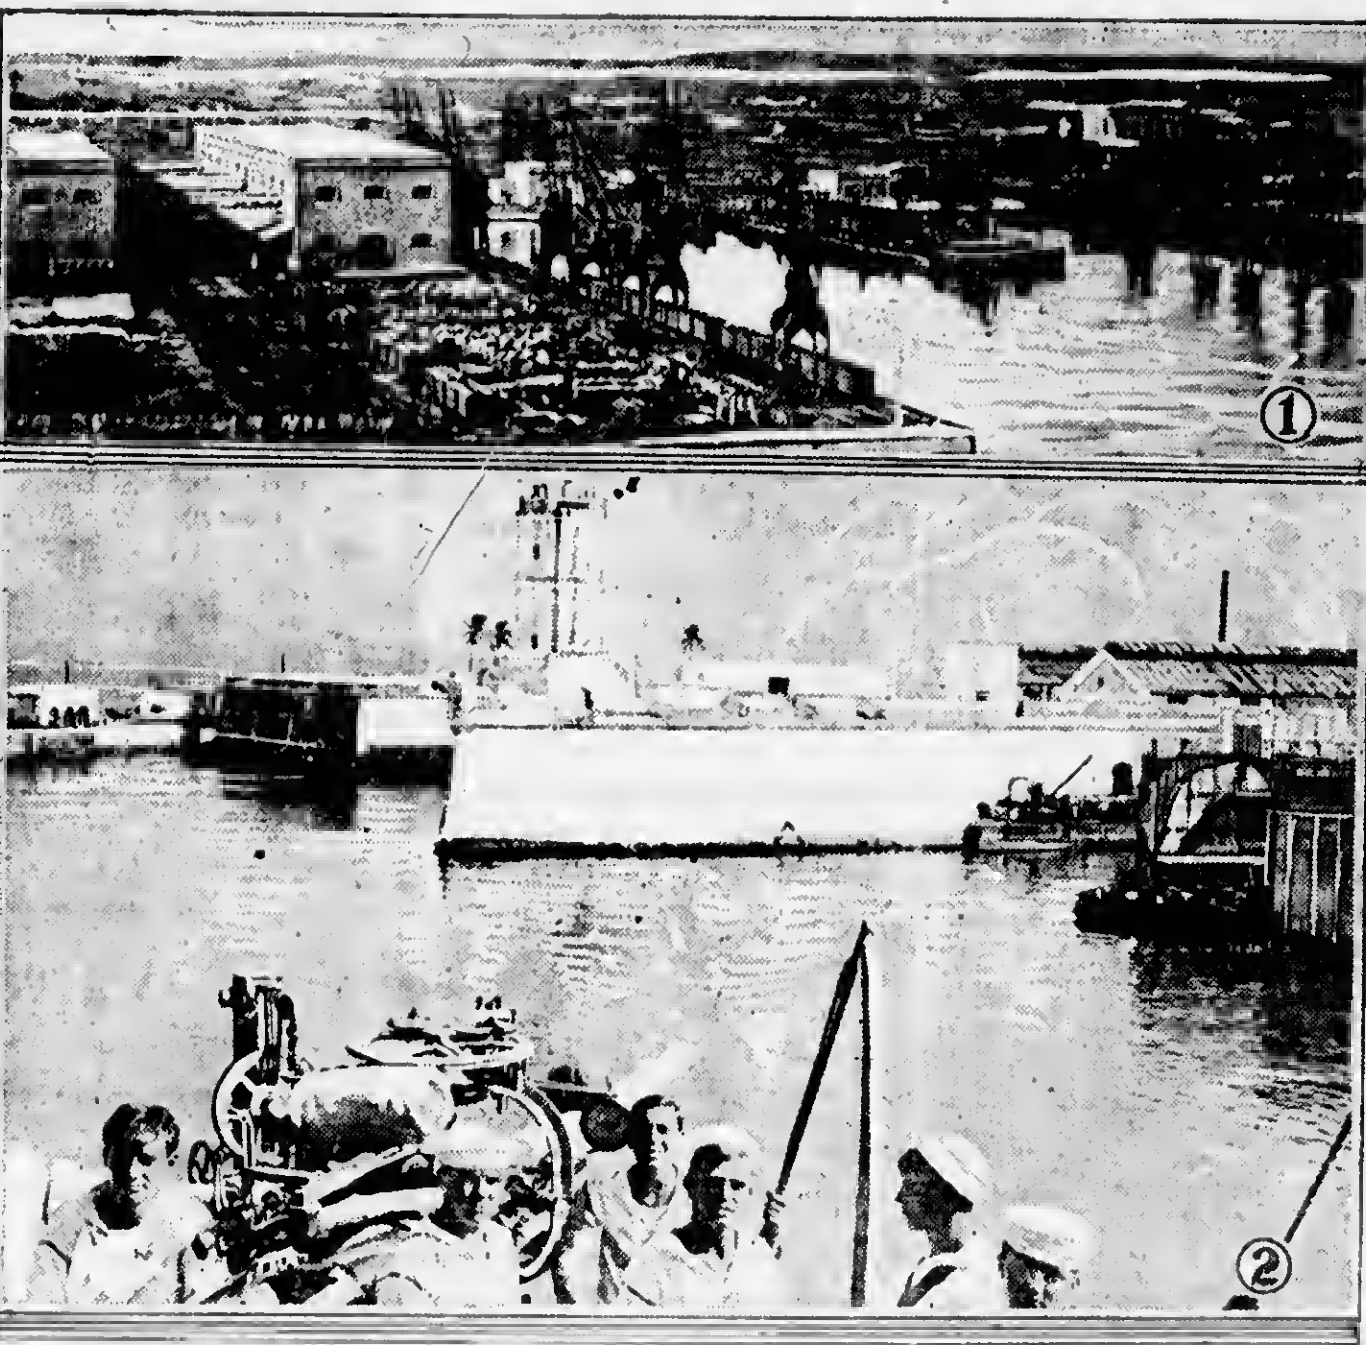

ing forces, and such is the territory which the line traverses that in many places it could be put out of commission for months. The line between the City of Mexico and Vera Cruz is as difficult a piece of railroad engineering as can be found. The same is true of most of the other railroads operating east and southeast of the capital. Estimating the cost of military operations at $2 per day for each man employed, the taking of the Mexican capital, outside of the mobilization expenditure and cost of equipment would amount of $12,000,000, it is figured.

It must be borne in mind, however, that the case here presented does not discount even a single serious reverse. With the Mexican army to dislodge the invading army might and itself stance had been broken. There are many instances of this sort in history, but in this respect Mexico City means so little to the Mexicans that such a result could not be hoped for. The pacification of Mexico (for that could be the only reasonable objective of intervention) would have to be carried into the most remote parts of the republic. In that would lie the difficulty.

There is the hope, of course, that the answer element of Mexico would be that time realize that law and order were all the American army demanded. But this is merely a hope, not well supported by the country's antecedents. One has to know the intimate history of political Mexico, from Hidalgo and Juarez down, to understand how little justification there is for such a conclusion. The Mexican is not above demanding that before he would grant with the invader for his own good there would have to be a complete evacuation. Naturally to this the United States government could not consent. Interminable guerrilla warfare would be the consequence.

The claim made now and then that it would take from ten to fifteen years to subdue Mexico is very extravagant, of course. Yet the task might stretch over three to four years easily enough. The public is accustomed to seeing maps of Mexico on a very small scale that there is constant danger of underestimating the extent of the republic. The distance from Laredo to Mexico City is roughly 800 miles, from El Paso the distance is even greater, and between Matamoros and Mazatlan lie hundreds of miles of the most difficult terrain an army might wish to try its mettle on.

BIRDSEYE VIEW OF VERA CRUZ AND ITS FAMOUS OLD FORT.

1.—Vera Cruz water front as seen from American battleship. 2.—San Juan de Ulua, oldest fort in Mexico

City before the world had thought this possible, could be repeated at pleasure. Today a different view prevails in the war department.

Vera Cruz offers the best opportunity as a base for the main attack upon Mexico City. The distance to be traversed is not very great—200 miles by the best route. There is no difficulty in handling at that point a sufficient force to penetrate to the capital in time, but there is the mountainous formation that makes operations from this point difficult. At Jalapa, but eighty-two miles from the coast, the country rises to an altitude of 4,400 feet, or nearly fifty-seven feet to the mile. Beyond Jalapa and until Puebla is reached the country is every bit as difficult. At Puebla, about 172 miles from Vera Cruz, the elevation is no less than 7,125 feet. The passes that may be negotiated are few in number and all of them are easily defended. The country, which meets an army on the offensive is such that artillery could not be used effectively.

It is admitted that there is likely to be a great loss of life in a series of engagements that would have to be fought in the country which the general plan of Mexico offers. The fact that south of Vera Cruz the country is even more difficult and that in operations toward the northwest the factors of distance and insubstantiality of all must have to be met has been fully taken into consideration by the United States.

Some military experts have held that it is doubtful if the City of Mexico could be taken via Vera Cruz with less than 125,000 men. It has been declared that the only hope of the officers in charge of these operations would be in the superiority of numbers. The possibility that an extended front or line of attack would develop weak spots in the defensive tactics of the Mexicans.

Might Take It In Six Weeks. The City of Mexico might be taken via Vera Cruz in six weeks if no severe reverses had been suffered. Seven miles per day, with the country to be covered is no mean performance.

Needless to say, the railroad to the capital could not be used by the invading armies to such an extent that weeks would be consumed in the carrying of points of strategic importance. It must be remembered that the American army must fight uphill from the moment it sets foot on Mexican soil and that every military crest would be a point of vantage for the Mexicans. Most of the fighting would occur in the ditches between the escarpment walls, with final Mexican soldiers holding the heights.

But with Mexico City taken and with the territory toward the coast cleared the pacification of Mexico would not yet to complete. To all intents and purposes that part of the republic is as tranquil today as it ever has been or probably ever will be.

Effect Would Be Doubtful.

To what extent would the taking of the capital influence the Mexicans? Is now the question to be considered. To be sure, when the Germans had taken Paris in 1871 the backbone of all re-

Mexico is a country of magnificent distances, but so much by reason of extent as by reason of inaccessibility.

Would Have to Get Railroad.

For strategic purposes the Americans would be obliged to gain control of the Laredo-Mexico City railroad line from the very first. With this in view, several divisions, having San Antonio, Tex., as their main base, would operate from the north. The country north of Monterrey might not present any serious problems, though in the vicinity of Llaneros, N. L., some resistance might be expected. Here one of the lower plateaus rises to an elevation of about 1,200 feet from a plain 500 feet above sea level. At Villahermosa more encounters would take place. The Mexicans even might decide to contest possession of the railroad leading to Monterrey through a terrain rendered severe by the fact that the valley in which the line runs is flanked on both sides by hills and mountains excellently suited to guerrilla operations. It would be no small matter of any rate to keep open this line of communication.

Monterrey lies at an elevation of 2,313 feet, and it held by a force well supplied with artillery a siege of some duration might prove its acquisition. It is not likely, however, that the Mexicans would make a stand there, though, if obliged to do so, they could make its tenure precarious for a long time. The mountains south, east and west of the city would end themselves to this purpose.

Between Monterrey and Saltillo lies a stretch of country sixty-seven miles in width that would give an invading army many an anxious moment. Within that short distance the country rises to an elevation of roughly 5,400 feet or a little more than 2,000 feet for sixty-seven miles. The easiest pass is negotiated by the railroad, but little energy would be expended in rendering this line useless for many days if not weeks.

Quite easy.

A NEW STOCK FEED.

Use of Dried Potatoes Gaining Ground Rapidly in Germany.

A consular report from Hamburg tells of the growing recognition in Germany of the value of dried potatoes as food for cattle and horses.

German science has been actively engaged in devising methods of utilizing the enormous surplus potato crop of the country. The preparation of the dried product for cattle feeding is only one of the many results of these investigations. It has been found impossible to feed raw potatoes on an extensive scale because this diet gives rise to various forms of sickness. Stock raisers cannot prepare potatoes without a heavy investment for specially constructed boiling apparatus, to say nothing of fuel. Official tests have determined that dried potatoes are digestible and nutritious in numerous forms—chips, flakes and pressed potatoes—which are now on the market.

According to reports of the German board of agriculture, it has been demonstrated that the one-third of strengthening food usually given to horses in the form of grain can be replaced by dried potatoes—Country Gentleman.

THEATRICAL

Manager Lookout of the Charlevoix Theatre is in receipt of advice from the Film Exchange to the effect that in the future his picture programs will be better than in the past, which will be good news to patrons of picture theatres in this city.

The program for Thursday night will be a real treat for lovers of the silent photoplays. The headliners will be two feature dramas, "A Modern Christmas" (Kalem) with Tom Moore in the title role, supported by Alice Joyce as Father, a city unfortunate, and "The Blind Gypsy" (colored Pathe masterpiece).
Three good laughable comedies—
"The Professor's Predicament,"
"Nearly in Mourning" and "The Island of Perversity"—make up the comedy part of the program.

Manager Lookout advises us that anyone who can sit and watch these comedies without laughing should place themselves under a doctor's care.

"A Face from the Past" (Edison) and "Father and Son" (Vitaphone) are the coming two-reel special features at the Charlevoix Theatre next Saturday and Sunday.

Real Estate Deals.

Mrs. Rhoda Woolley of Chicago has purchased the fruit farm six miles south of the city known as the George Cooper farm. The farm will be occupied by Mrs. Woolley's son, who is an electrician in the employ of the U. S. Steel Company at South Chicago.

The house and lot on Mason St.
known as the Fagan house was sold the past week by E. L. Bartholomew, the administrator, to Martha J. Ayers.

The house on Alice St. occupied by Mr. Potter and family and belonging to the Bartholomew estate was also sold during the week.

These sales were made by J. Milo
Eaton, the real estate man.

There will be an ice cream social

Found Dead in Bed.

Mrs. Martha J. Hadden, aged fifty-five years, an old resident of Charlevoix, was found dead in bed at the home of her son, Milton Russell, who lives in the west end of town, Saturday morning. Examination indicated the cause of death as venerular disease of the heart.

Funeral services were held from the house Monday.

A Pleasant Event.

On Wednesday afternoon, Tommy Robert Durrance of Mackinaw City entertained twenty-three little friends, at a party given in honor of his sixth birthday at the home of his grandparents, Mr. and Mrs.
Thos. E. Nowland, on Antrim street.
After various games were played by the little ones a dainty luncheon was served. He received many gifts from the little folks. After spending a very pleasant afternoon they departed wishing him many more happy birthdays.

TRY, TRY AGAIN.

Few men can sit down quietly when they have lost a fall in life's wrestle and say: "Well, here I am, beaten, no doubt, this time; by my own fault too. Now, take a good look at me, my good friends, as I know you all want to do, and say your say out, for I am getting up again directly and having another turn at it."—Thomas Hughes.

First Trip of Missouri.

Steamer Missouri of the Northern Michigan Transportation Co.'s fleet arrived in port Monday forenoon, bringing considerable freight and a few passengers. The ship left Chicago at 8 o'clock Sunday morning with Capt. Wm. Bright in charge.
She went from here to Petoskey and as far north as Cheboygan. The
S. S. Illinois will be placed in commission within a week, but the Manistee will not begin her schedule until about June 20.

LABOR'S LADDER.

Every occupation, even the meanest, which adds anything to the capital of mankind, if followed assiduously, with a desire to understand everything connected with it, is an ascending stair whose summit is nowhere and from the successive steps of which the horizon of knowledge perpetually enlarges.—James Anthony Froude.

Fountain City House Open.

The Fountain City House, for several seasons past run under the management of Mrs. H. Bedford, was opened the first of the week under charge of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cooper. The hotel, which is one of the first erected in Charlevoix, has been filled to overflowing practically every season it has been opened.
Mr. and Mrs. Cooper will be glad to welcome their old friends as well as new to their new quarters.

Auction Sale.

On page 8 of this issue will be found advertised the auction sale of H. A. Portman at his farm five and one-half miles south of Charlevoix on the Norwood road. The sale will commence at one o'clock sharp. W. E. Byers, auctioneer;

Dry Cleaning and Pressing.

D. G. Lilly of Elwood, Indiana, has opened up a dry cleaning, pressing and dyeing clothes established in the Bell building, in the store formerly occupied by C. S.
Dodge & Son. Mr. Lilly opened up for business Monday morning.

Farm and Garden

THE VALUE OF DAIRYING.

Without agriculture no civilized government can stand, no million of free men exist, while without live stock there can be no permanent system of agriculture. Specialized concentrated effort counts, and of this dairying is an illustration of the highest type. As nature gave the richest soil, so the cow and the sheep will conserve it.

APPLE TREE CANKER.

Recommendations For Preventing and Curing Serious Orchard Evil.

Of all bark diseases of fruit trees none is worse than apple blight can-ker.

Experiments conducted in orchards for the purpose of discovering means of treating the disease led to the conclusion that where wounds are made on apple trees accidentally or by the removal of branches or limbs some form of covering should be applied as soon after as possible to prevent the entrance of the fungus spores.

Tests were made in covering tree wounds with white lead paint, asphalt tun and paraffin. Treatment attemat ed after the sap had begun to flow was attended with difficulty. When the cankered limb was cut off or the diseased bark was removed and the wound treated some of the wounds showed that the fungus continued to grow in spite of the covering.

Recommendations for prevention are that when a branch or limb is severed the cut should be as smooth and as close as possible, that as far as possible free trimming should be done when the sap is not flowing and that all wounds should be covered with some kind of dressing. Of the tree covering materials mentioned it was impossible to determine which was the best.

Other protective measures consist in spraying of branches, limbs and trunks of apple trees and removal and destruction by fire of all brush. All dead trees should be grubbed out by the roots and burned.—Country Gentleman.

Value of the Wheel Hoe.

The wheel hoe, a light cultivator to be operated by man power, is regarded with much interest by many who raise acres of crops. They consider it a nice little plaything for the suburban resident and the boy with a garden. The wheel hoe has, however, undeveloped possibilities as a real farm tool. For instance, if one is kept near the kitchen garden somebody is likely to pick it up almost any night after supper and cultivate a dozen rows of vegetables. If the garden had to wait until a house could be spared with a regular

Truckers use the wheel hoe for intersive crops.—Country Gentleman.

CLUCK AND CROW.

Common road dust with a little powdered sulphur mixed in makes a good dust bath for fowls that are troubled with lice.

If good, clean, sound grain is abundant and variety, with pure water, grit oyster shell and meat in some form, will not produce eggs nothing else will.

Ducks are great feeders, and they are also great growers, so where does the loss come in? A few ducks will help to keep the income up to the required standard.

Every hen house should have two yards. When one is occupied the other should be sown to some forage crop.
Swiss chard is best, but rape, turnips and clover are also good.

Fowl fanciers and experts in the bureau of animal industry, Washington, are experimenting with crossbreeding whereby the hen may grow feathers sufficiently variegated to be used in places of bird plumage for millinery.

Little turkeys are the most helpless of all poultry. They require great care during the first ten or fifteen days of their lives. They should not be fed hard they are thirty-six hours old and then on well baked corn bread crumbs.

ROSE TO THE OCCASION.

Even dead men on the stage have their embarrassing moments, as a certain actor who recently played the role of a peacher in a melodrama discovered. The peacher had been shot by a rival at the end of the second act, and the curtain should have fallen as he dropped dead. As ill luck would have it, however, it stopped short when a few feet from the stage and opposed all efforts to lower it further. The audience began to titter; the situation became tense and painful, when the dead man saved it. Rising wearily, he said, in a sepulchral voice, "Alas, there is no rest even in the grave!" and glided spectrally off the stage.—Cassell's Journal.

A Poor Congregation.

Robert Ford in his book "Thistle-down" tells an amusing story of a clergyman who stood for some time one Monday morning watching a man fishing for trout in a Scotch stream.

"I'm a fisher, too," remarked the minister in the course of conversation, adding rather diffidently, "But a fisher of men."

"Aye," was the dry retort of the angler. "I had a peep into your creed yesterday. Ye didn't seem to have caught many!"

Plants That Eat Insects.

That such plants as "Venus flytrap" actually catch and squeeze to death flies and other insects alighting on their leaves has long been known. But the discovery is comparatively recent that the plants digest the softer parts of their prey by means of a peptic ferment secreted by the leaves. These, then, are real instances of plants feeding upon animals.

Appointment of Administrator.
State of Michigan, the Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.
At a session of said Court, held at the Probate Office in the City of Charlevoix in said County on the 26th day of April, A. D. 1914.
Present: Hon. Servetus H. Correll, Judge of Probate. In the matter of the estate of Eliza Jane Clover, deceased. Oliver E. March having filed in said court her petition praying that the administration of said estate be granted to petitioner or to some other suitable person.
It is ordered, that the 25th day of May, A. D. 1914 at ten o'clock in the forenoon, at said probate office, be and is hereby appointed for hearing said petition.
It is further ordered, that public notice thereof be given by publication of a copy of this order, for three successive weeks previous to said day of hearing, in the Charlevoix Courier, a newspaper printed and circulated in said county.
Servetus H. Correll, Judge of Probate.

Notice.
Notice is hereby given that the Board of Review of the City of Charlevoix, Michigan, will meet in the Council Rooms in said city on Monday, the 18th day of May, 1914, at nine o'clock in the forenoon, for the purpose of reviewing the assessment rolls of said city. Said Board will remain in session four days successively from and after said date and as much longer as may be necessary to complete said review.
Any person or persons may appear before said Board at such time and place and examine his, her or their assessment, and show cause if any exists, why the valuation therefor should be changed.
Dated May 6th, 1914.
P. E. Vanderwaade, City Clerk.

Notice of Hearing of Claims.
State of Michigan, the Probate Court for the County of Charlevoix.
In the matter of the estate of Anna B. Nowland, deceased.
Notice is hereby given that four months from the 9th day of May, A. D. 1914, have been allowed for creditors to present their claims against said deceased to said court for examination and adjustment, and that all creditors of said deceased are required to present their claims to said court, at the probate office, in the City of Charlevoix in said county, on or before the 9th day of September, A. D. 1914, and that said claims will be heard by said court on Wednesday the 9th day of September, A. D. 1914, at ten o'clock in the forenoon.
Dated May 9th, A. D. 1914.
Servetus H. Correll, Judge of Probate.

"His Mouth Full."
A certain town council after a protracted sitting was desirous of adjourning for luncheon. The proposition was opposed by the mayor, who thought that if his fellow councilors felt the stimulus of hunger the dispatch of business would be considerably facilitated.
At last an illiterate member got up and exclaimed:
"I am astonished, I am surprised, I have amazed, I have surprised, I have amazed, 'Mr. Mayor, that you will not let us go to lunch!"
"I'm surprised," exclaimed one of his colleagues, "that a gentleman who has got as much 'ham' in his mouth wants any lunch at all!"—London Globe.

Peace Day Will Be Observed May 18th Throughout the Eastern States.

One of the most active organizations in the peace propaganda is the American School Peace League, organized in 1908, with headquarters at 405 Marlborough street, Boston.

The league strives to lay emphasis on the teaching of peace in history courses rather than on battles and campaigns. It also promotes the observance in the school of Peace Day, May 18, the anniversary of the first Hague Conference on international peace. Special efforts are to be made by the Michigan Branch of the School Peace League to have exercises held in every school in Michigan May 18th next and State Superintendent Fred L. Death of Miss McCabe.
Miss Salomia McCabe, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. John McCabe, died in Chicago last week, the funeral taking place May 8.—Charlevoix was the birth place of Miss McCabe, having been born here November 17, 1891. She was educated in the Charlevoix public school and moved to Chicago with her parents seven years ago. She was well known here and has visited Charlevoix every summer since leaving.

The KITCHEN CUPBOARD

WAYS WITH PEPPERS.
Among the numerous ways of cooking this piquant vegetable the following recipes are worth trying. While peppers have no particular dietetic merits they serve to whet the appetite for other foods.

Peppers and Bacon.—Take firm, large sweet green peppers. Wash them and remove the seeds. Cut in rings and lay in cold water to which has been added a pinch of salt and set away for one hour. Fry slices of bacon, saving the drippings. Remove the peppers from the water, dry thoroughly on a clean towel and fry in the bacon drippings. Serve the fried pepper in a circle as a border to the dish of bacon.

With Canned Tomatoes.
Peppers With Rice.—Take a tablespoonful of flour and one of butter and rub smooth over the fire. Cook one can of tomatoes until tender and strain. Pour over the butter and flour. Fill sweet peppers with boiled rice and add butter, salt, pepper and the pulp of the tomatoes. Cook in double boiler, with sauce poured over peppers. If the juice is not thick enough add more flour.

Peppers and Eggs.—This is a very nice dish that may serve for a change, especially for luncheon. Take as many green peppers as there are persons to serve and having cut off the tops and carefully removed the seeds place upright in a pan and break an egg into each pepper. Bake for about fifteen minutes and serve with tomato sauce on toast.

Easily Prepared.
Peppers With Chicken.—Boil a chicken, saving the water in which it was boiled. Cut chicken very fine. Add mushrooms, one cup pecans and half a cupful of butter, the nuts and mushrooms having been chopped up. Mix together and add enough of the chicken stock to moisten and fill the peppers, which have been made ready by cutting off the tops and removing the seeds. Put in a baking dish and heat the remainder of the chicken stock, adding a lump of butter the size of an egg. Pour on the peppers, cover with bread crumbs and bake in oven a few minutes until thoroughly cooked.

RAISING WINTER LAYERS.

Careful Study of Breeds Essential to Success.

In order to raise winter layers one must know something about the characteristics of the different breeds, the laying periods of which vary, says a correspondent of the Country Gentleman. Some begin laying in five months, others in six, seven or eight months. When the egg laying characteristics of a particular breed of fowl are known it is easy to raise winter layers.

In the writer's experience with White Plymouth Rocks the time between hatching and the laying of the first egg has varied from five months and four days to seven months and thirteen days. Pullets usually lay a small number of eggs at first—about fifteen or twenty—then rest a few days or a week, after which they begin to lay again and continue for three or four months or more without stopping. By regulating the hatching of chicks according to these laying characteristics and by giving them proper care and attention a good supply of fresh eggs may be had during the winter months. A brief description of the writer's method of raising winter layers may be helpful.

BEST TYPE OF HOUSE FOR WINTER LAYERS.

Hens are used for incubating eggs. Provided a hen wants to set any time after the middle of February she is put in a warm and protected place. For prospective winter layers it is well to hatch the chicks as early as March and April. With hens to brood the chicks and with a sunny exposure and protection from cold winds, they need little more attention in early than in later hatching.

No wet food is given young chicks until they are four to five weeks old. The mother hen is coupled, but the chicks are allowed free grass range. They are fed regularly five times a day until they are about two months old, after that for two months or so four times a day and from that time on three times a day.

a day until winter is over. The young chicks are kept free of vermin by simple methods, the perches and roosting places are carefully watched for chicken mites, and any indication of sickness is at once investigated.

After the chicks are three months old they are fed a wet mash in the morning and a grain mixture consisting of two parts of whole or cracked corn and one part each of wheat and oats for the remaining meals. The mash is composed of four parts to measure of bran and one each of middlings, cornmeal and mixed grains. Occasionally one measure of meat meal is added to the mash to furnish animal protein, though the meat meal is kept in hoppers in order that the young chickens may learn to balance their individual tastes. It is better to let them balance their ration to suit themselves. The mash is usually wet down with the wastes from the table. Oyster shell and grit are always kept before the fowls in hoppers.

A dry scratching pen, free from drafts and well lighted, is provided for each pen of fowls. This is practically indispensable for winter layers in cold or moderate climates. Grain thrown to the fowls will keep the fowls busy for hours. Exercise is very important for fowls that are kept to produce eggs during the winter months. Plenty of fresh water is also essential for laying hens. Fifty fowls cared for in this manner during the past four or five years have given a fairly uniform supply of winter eggs. As a rule the fifty fowls have consisted of from sixteen to twenty pullets, about the same number of one-year-old hens and a few two-year-olds. Careful records show that the pullets during the winter months lay about four times as many eggs as the hens. For profitable winter egg production it is advisable to have as many vigorous pullets as possible.

With pullets numbering only about one-third of the fifty fowls, the production of the writer's flock during the past four winters, regarding the winter months of December, January and February, has been as follows:

Winter of 1907-8, 1,662—average per month, 311; winter of 1908-9, 1,330—average per month, 440; winter of 1909-10, 1,258—average per month, 419; winter of 1910-11, 1,345—average per month, 448.

WINTERING BEEF BREEDING COWS

Ten Fierthorn and ten Aberdeen Angus cows were fed 140 days at the Pennsylvania station on ensilage and cottonseed meal alone, says the Iowa Homestead. These cows consumed approximately sixty pounds of ensilage and one pound of cottonseed meal per head daily. During this period they made an average daily gain of 1.1 pounds per head.

The ensilage was fed twice a day and the cottonseed meal once daily. There was less than 1 per cent waste in feeding in this manner. These cows were allowed to run loose in a abed, that was well bedded, the experiment lasting from Dec. 1 to April 19. It required four tons of silage to winter each cow in this manner, this being equivalent to one-half acre of corn yielding forty bushels per acre or one-third of an acre of corn if the land produced at the rate of sixty bushels per acre. Computing ensilage at $3.50 per ton the cost of wintering the twenty cows on ensilage was $280 or $14 per head. In addition the cows consumed cottonseed meal to the value of $42. With this item included the average cost per head was approximately $16. Attention might be called to the fact that during this period covered by this experiment the weather conditions were unusually severe, the temperature falling as low as 23 degree below zero at times. These cows when turned to grass made satisfactory daily gains, indicating that ensilage when fed in large quantities, as was the case in this instance, is in no manner whatever injurious.

One of the peculiarities of the Hereford breed on account of the strong constitution the sire impresses his progeny with the color and markings of the breed in almost every case, no matter what the breed of the dam may be. It is in the touch more than anything else that the true Hereford is identified, for it has not the thin skin and light flesh that so many inferior cattle have. Almost the only breed with which the Hereford does not improve its color is the Angus. They divide the honor, having the black body of the one and the white face of the other, but the hide has not the distinctive touch that a well bred Hereford steer should have. The illustration shows a Hereford steer of high quality.

It may be of interest to know that 8,540 pounds of manure were produced during the 140 day period by each cow. This computed at $1.50 per ton means a value of $12.75. As each cow gained 164 pounds in weight this increase of 5 cents a pound amounts to $8.20. It is true that this added weight has in reality no intrinsic value unless the cow is marketed, but it does mean that the cow goes on to the grass in a good fleshy condition.

Those of our readers who have a supply of ensilage at hand might profit by a perusal of the results obtained in this instance. If an experiment station can obtain these economical results on ensilage and a small amount of cottonseed meal daily there is no reason why there will not be a similar outcome if the same plan is carried out under average farm conditions.

Niagara.

Niagara is a corruption of the Seneca word "neagara," meaning "across the neck," an allusion to a strip of land between the lakes. The name has been subjected to many changes since the discovery of the tract, more than thirty different readings being found in the writings of the various early explorers and geographers.

General View of Tuxpan, Mexico

TUXPAN once was a populous Indian town. Many of the present inhabitants are descendants of the Aztecs, and they retain not a few of their vicious attributes. The region roundabout is fertile, and some of the more industrious Indians possess haciendas stocked with cattle.

THE ECONOMY OF GOOD DAIRY COWS

On many farms the dairy cow will be poorly fed this winter, says the Kansas Farmer. When feed is plentiful and of good quality, the cow has a chance to pick the best from a great deal more feed than she can consume, and under these conditions she makes a better showing than she can make in a year when feed is scarce and when she is compelled to eat the feed offered, whether that feed be palatable or not. The fact is that the cow must be well fed if she is to produce milk. She must have enough feed to maintain her body and must consume a sufficient surplus to produce milk. This condition prevails always. The animal body cannot adapt itself to seasonal conditions.

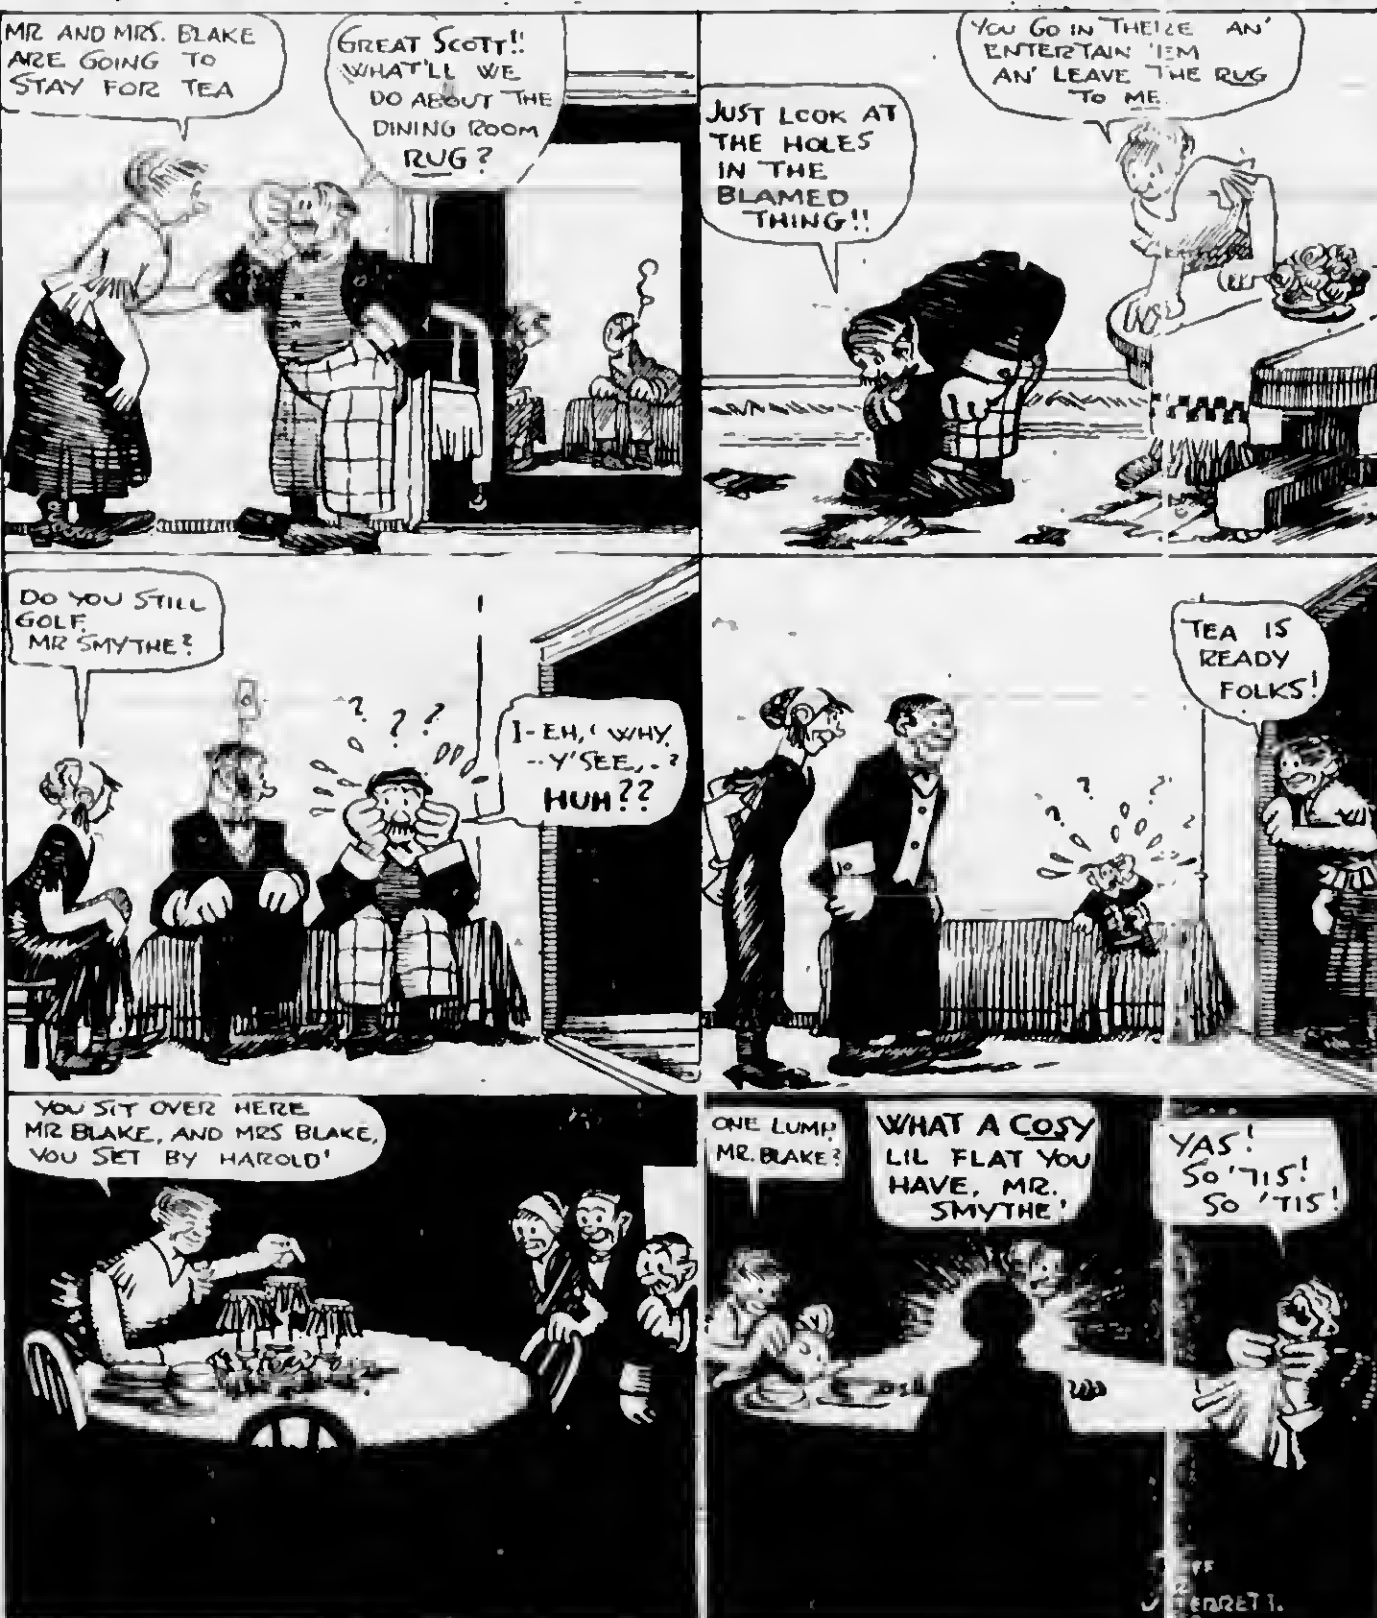

This means that the dairy cow, if she be profitable, must at all times have such feed as will enable her to produce milk to her capacity. It costs about as much to feed to maintain a cow of low capacity as it does a cow of large capacity. Figuring on this basis, therefore, one cow consumes about as much feed as another in maintaining herself. The cow which can consume the greatest amount of feed over and above that required by bodily maintenance is the cow which, if she puts that feed to proper use, will fill the milk pail.

In times when feed is plentiful the individual cow, whether of low capacity or of the highest capacity, does not suffer from the same comparison as in times when feed is scarce. The scarcer the feed the better the cow should be; the better the cow the greater use she makes of her feed and the greater will be the profit therefrom. The cow, after all, supplies only a market for the feed she consumes. The first toll she exacts is that of supporting herself. After this is done then the value she gives for the feed is measured by the amount of milk produced.

While this is the most trying year, from the feed standpoint, Kansas has experienced in many years, nevertheless it demonstrates the necessity of having a good cow. The good cow is not only a necessity in a year like this, but in years when feed is more plentiful. All she will give a larger return for the feed consumed than will the poor one. Just as a season like this asserts the benefits resulting from the best of farming, so does it show the necessity for better live stock of all kinds. The best live stock will give the largest return for the feed consumed. The dairy cow of the best type will give a larger return for the feed she consumes than any other farm animal.

After the company had gone Mrs. Mason said to her husband: "What on earth did you mean, Harold, by telling the Flemings that my humor was positive, but not negative?" "I meant," said Mrs. Mason, discreetly moving toward the door, "that you could make a joke, but couldn't take one."—Youth's Companion.

HOW UNCLE SAM HELPS.

A bulletin of the bureau of plant industry, "a study of farm equipment in Ohio," gives a most valuable review of important data of this character gathered and collated with much painstaking care by Mr. L. W. Ellis. On twenty-one farms investigated the following was found to be the average distribution of capital invested: In land, drainage and water supply, 31 per cent; in buildings, 21 per cent; in implements and machinery, 5 per cent, and in live stock, 43 per cent. The bulletin gives much detailed information, of which the figures just quoted represent a gross summary.

One is the day of scientific management. No longer need the farmer slowly find his way to the best working conditions by a series of successive approximations. The government helps him to profit by the experience of others who have preceded him and have paid the heavy dues of that excellent but dear schooling.

500 A MONTH

Estimated Number of Settlers Each Month in the State of Michigan.

Settlers came into Michigan at the rate of 500 per month during March and April, 1914, according to W. E. Wolfenden, general passenger agent of the Pere Marquette Railroad. He bases his estimate on the number of newcomers handled by that road.

"During March," Mr. Wolfenden said Sunday, "more than 100 carloads of settlers' effects came in from Indiana and Illinois alone over the lines of the Pere Marquette. During April even a greater number of cars were brought in. Estimating four persons to a car of household goods the number of newcomers arriving in the state each month can be realized."

Mr. Wolfenden said many of the newcomers were Polish, being attracted to this state by the numerous successful colonies of that race already here.

ABOUT $7.00 EACH

Present indications are that this will be the amount of primary money paid.

From present indications the $7.41 which each pupil in Michigan was entitled to draw from the primary school fund this year, based on the primary school taxes for last year, will be slightly decreased.

At present the primary school fund in the hands of the state treasurer amounts to $5,140,000. When the Pere Marquette and some others pay up, it is figured that the primary fund will be $1,000,000 ahead of last year by July 1.

But last year there were 703,000 pupils, and this year there are 800,000. As it stands now, the per capita draw is $7, but figuring on the July estimate, it will amount to $7.22.

Wilson Grange, No. 719.

Wilson grange met Saturday evening, May 9th, with an attendance of twenty-three members.

The members voted to purchase 100 lbs. Paris green and 25 lbs. arsenic of lead.

The ladies announced that they would hold a spectacle social at the hall Saturday, May 16, for the benefit of Rev. Shumaker. Ladies bring two pair of spectacles and basket containing supper. The tables will be set.

The lecturer's program consisted of a speech, songs, readings, recitations, stories and dialogues. Next meeting is the last evening of the contest. Grange closed to meet in two weeks.

Bay Shore Grange.

Regular meeting of Bay Shore grange was held Friday evening, May 8. Meeting was called to order by Overseer Arthur Zipp, acting as Master on account of the absence of Worthy Master Karcher.

This meeting closed the red and blue contest which began in March. The red side won the contest and will be given a banquet by the blue at the next grange meeting. Lecturer's hours was spent with following program:

Music—Orin Hopper.
Recitation—Dewey Jones.
Recitation—Helen Hand.
Song—Grange.
Story—Arthur Zipp.
Story—Mrs. Hurn.
Song—Grange.

The committee served refreshments. Grange closed in due form with twenty-nine members present, two visitors from Maple Grove and one from Rock Elm.

DON'T BURN ROUGHAGE.

Expensive and Wasteful Practice With Cornstalks, Straw, Chaff, Etc.

A contributor to Farm and Fireside writes:

"A tendency exists among many farmers to burn up all cornstalks, loose straw, clover chaff and superfluous roughage about the place. But it is too expensive.

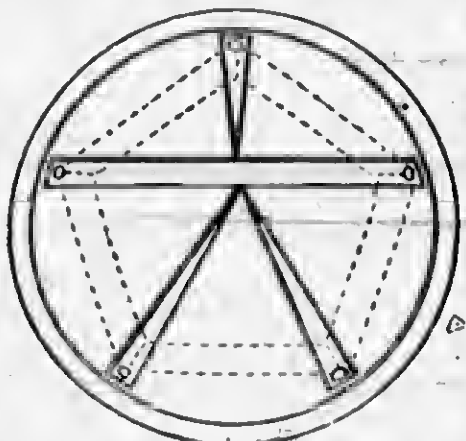

"Every time an acre of stalks is burned twenty-one pounds of nitrogen go into the air, and it will cost you $2.50 to buy it back again. Wheat or oat straw from an acre contains about twelve to fourteen pounds of nitrogen and clover chaff three times this amount.

"One can easily figure from these deductions what a reckless loss to the farm is the loss in the chaff pile or stalk field. The cutaway and disk harrows will chop these bulky materials up ready for the plow, where they can be turned under. If you want to fatten the old farm, stuff it with organic matter."

FOR A SILO SCAFFOLD.

Directions For Making Necessary Part of Concrete or Tile Structure.

Should any one be thinking of building a concrete or tile silo the accompanying cut might help in building the scaffold. After the foundation wall is laid get five poles at least eight feet higher than you expect the silo to be. Set inside of the wall deep enough to hold poles in place. Lay

Heavy Dues, 2 by 4's; dotted lines, boards to work on; five small circles indicate position of support poles.

SCAFFOLD INSIDE SILO

(From National Stockman and Farmer.) The silo as high as you can from the ground; then take 2 by 4's or 2 by 6's and build frame for scaffold as shown in cut.

Leave plenty of room for poles to work easily; then floor as shown by dotted lines in cut. Attach a pulley to each pole and raise when ready. Then spike a piece under scaffold on pole. One scaffold does it all. The scaffold should have just play enough to let it slide up easily. Sometimes if it is too loose a wedge to hold it firm while at work should be put in.

The idea of having the poles longer than the silo is high is to get pilleys high enough for last raise.—National Stockman and Farmer.

Chicks Need Cleanliness.

Drinking dishes and feeding troughs for chicks are likely to become dirty and insanitary unless special precautions are taken, according to Professor J. G. Halpin of the College of Agriculture of the University of Wisconsin. Drinking water should never be placed in common dishes or vessels where the chicks may get in with both feet, but "sanitary" fontainals, either homemade or purchased, should be used. These should be cleaned and scalded at frequent intervals. Wet washes when fed in wooden troughs mold unless all refuse feed is scraped off and the troughs are placed on end so that they may dry in the sun. Neglect of these two simple matters may cause considerable loss.

Coverings For Silage.

The use of heavy tarpaulin to cover the surface of silage during summer feeding is being practiced quite successfully by some of the farmers of the Kansas Farmer. The tarpaulin is very carefully spread over the whole surface of the silage, and the silage is removed from half the surface only at each feeding, alternating from one side of the silo to the other. In this way a thicker layer can be removed from the surface fed from daily. The tarpaulin cover retards the tendency to spoil on the surface left untouched.

MEMORIAL DAY TO BE OBSERVED

Arrangements for Its Proper Observance Have Been Completed.

ADDRESSES WORTH HEARING

Will Be Made by Judge S. A. Correll and Other Local Speakers.

Children of Churches and Public Schools to be in the Parade—Ritualistic Work of G. A. R. and W. R. C. at the Cemetery.

The arrangements for the proper observance of Memorial Day in Charlevoix are practically completed and the various committees that have been named by Chairman J. M. Felts will work hard to make it the most successful event of its kind ever held in this city.

Judge S. A. Correll will make the principal address of the day and it will be well worth hearing. Short addresses will also be made by Rev. C. E. Taggart and other local speakers.

The parade of veterans, members of the W. R. C., local lodges and school children will form on Bridge street at 9:30 o'clock, passing up Bridge street to Antrim, up Antrim to State and then south on State street to the cemetery. Here the parade will disband and the exercises will at once begin.

At the cemetery the ritualistic work of the Grand Army of the Republic and the W. R. C. will be read and the school children and those participating in the parade will scatter flowers on the graves of the departed comrades. Each of the last resting places will be marked by an American flag.

After the program at the cemetery the members of the G. A. R. and ex-soldiers and families and the W. R. C. and families will return to the I. O. O. F. hall, where an excellent dinner will be served.

In the parade each of the boys and girls of the schools and the local lodges and organizations participating are requested to carry a flag.

Arrangements for the program and formation of the line of march are as follows:

Marshal of the day, D. C. Nettleton; assistant, L. H. Wheeler.

Master of ceremonies at the cemetery, Captain H. Berdan.

Positions in line of march:

Members of the G. A. R. with flag on foot.

Members of the G. A. R. in vehicles.

Speakers of the day in vehicles.

Members of the W. R. C. in vehicles.

Members of the G. A. R. and ex-soldiers in vehicles.

M. E. Sunday school on foot.

Baptist Sunday school on foot.

Congregational Sunday school on foot.

City schools, in classes, on foot.

Catholic schools on foot.

All orders and others who will participate are especially requested to join the parade.

The formation will take place on Bridge street at 9:30, the right wing resting at the corner of Bridge and Mason streets. Line of march will be from Mason street south to Antrim street, thence west to State street and south to the cemetery.

At the cemetery:

Patriotic songs by the W. R. C. and others.

Prayer by Rev. J. G. C. Irvine.

Ritualistic work by G. A. R. and W. R. C.

Address by Judge S. A. Correll and short addresses by Rev. C. E. Taggart and other local speakers.

ANNUAL BANQUET

Plans Under Way for Annual Republican Banquet
First Week in June.

The annual banquet of the Charlevoix County Republican Club, held in this city at the Beach Hotel the first week in June.

The committee in charge are busy getting in touch with prominent speakers throughout the state. All candidates for governor will be invited to speak on the occasion, as well as the four or more candidates for congress from this district. The president of the club will make an effort to secure the best talent while at the welfare conference at Detroit the 26th of this month. It is thought now that the date will be June 5, but nothing is definite as yet. Full particulars will be announced next week.

RECOVERED STOLEN PROPERTY

Cottages Found.

Since the looting of several cottages on the Belvedere resort last winter a strict watch has been kept for some trace of the stolen property. Among the cottages broken into were those of Messrs. Dissette and Clement. For some time it was thought that the missing property could be found in a certain house on the south side.

Monday a disinterested party was sent to this place to look over the house with a view of purchasing it. Samples of missing curtains and bedding were taken along and upon short investigation it was concluded the stolen goods had been located.

Under Sheriff Novak and Mr. Dissette visited the house shortly afterward and the missing articles were found and identified.

It was the home of Jack Cunningham, the man who was arrested last winter for stealing wood and who was convicted and served time in the county jail. Wednesday morning Cunningham confessed to stealing from both the Dissette and Clement cottages. He was arrested and bound over for hearing Friday.

Practically all the stolen articles were identified and taken possession of by their owners.

PURCHASE BUILDING

Round Lake Lodge, No. 293, I. O. O. F., Buy Bartholomew Property.

Round Lake Lodge, No. 293, I. O. O. F., recently purchased from the Bartholomew estate the store property adjoining their building on the north, the first floor of which is occupied by the Ivy Drug Store.

For some time the upper floor has been leased by the lodge and used as a banquet hall. The recently acquired property gives the order a 44 foot Bridge street frontage.

Round Lake Lodge is in a good, prosperous condition and the recently acquired property adds greatly to their present holdings.

COURIER HAS "A NEW DRESS"

Entire New Type Face Makes Its First Appearance in This Issue.

Opening Chapters of the New Serial, "The Story of Waitstill Baxter"—Out After the News.

The Courier in this issue presents a treat to its subscribers and readers in the form of, using the printer's term, "A New Dress." Many will no doubt notice at once the clean, clear-cut appearance of the type matter at a first glance. We hope our readers can glean the news told in these columns each week to better advantage than in the past.

Since the Courier has been under the present management rapid strides in progress have been made. The Job Department has been gradually built up to that of a modern equipped office with up-to-date materials to handle all kinds of work.

It is now the intention of the publisher to add force to the newspaper element and to furnish, if possible, an improved newspaper, both in appearance and in the news line. Every newspaper needs the co-operation of its friends and readers, whether subscribers or not, in the issuance of an up-to-the-minute publication. We therefore earnestly request that anyone who knows of anything in the news line phone 22r or give their information to authorized reporters of the Courier.

If all will do this the Courier will be a most valuable asset to the community and to the homes where it enters. We appreciate all past courtesies and hope that many more will be extended in the future. We are putting forth every effort to give our readers a clean weekly paper and all the news obtainable. Special attention is constantly exerted to get all the local news facts.

This week's issue also contains the opening chapters of our new serial, "The Story of Waitstill Baxter," by the well-known author, Kate Douglas Wiggin. The Courier management has taken considerable pride in the character of the stories run and in the selection of the story commencing in this issue we believe it to be one of the best we have ever published. Read the opening chapters and we are sure that you will anxiously await the arrival of each weekly instalment.

SHOULD HAVE BEEN A SHUT OUT

Petoskey Got But One Score in Game
Last Saturday.

Second Collision Results in Victory for Home Team by the Score of 3 to 1—Played Stellar Ball.

Charlevoix played stellar ball last Saturday and in the second collision of the season with Petoskey came off with the high end of a 3-1 count. See occupied the mound for the locals and pitched in great form. Reed for Petoskey was a difficult proposition at times.

From the time Chase walked to the rubber just one hour and twenty minutes elapsed until the last visitor broke the atmosphere with the ball. As for exercise off the bases the visitors excelled in that issue, for it was just a walk to the plate, furnishing See with material to leave missile at, swing three times and back to the bench. Only four Petoskeyites had a look at the initial sack.

In one respect, the game might be called a pitchers' battle, but on close inspection it is easily seen that Southpaw "Antithias" See had the best of the bargain. Fourteen men fell before his stonewall attacks. Every Petoskey man felt the humiliation and had nerved to beat the air. The local lads found Reed for safe bingles when they were needed and of the thirteen strikeouts credited to the Petoskey hurler three men copied eight of the failures to connect.

Charlevoix's scores were all earned runs. In the second inning Krulick singled over short, stole second and went to third on taking a chance on Reed's fumble. A hit by Gregory scored Krulick.

In the fourth Krulick repeated the performance, completing the circuit on a steal home. The third run was made by King in the sixth on a hit and neat base running. Petoskey's lone tally came in the ninth inning and was as unexpected to the batter as to the crowd. Sik made a hurried crack at a quick return from See and laced one out for a single. Stealing second and sacrificed to third, he squeezed home by a hair's breadth. The game should have been a shut out.

For the locals, outside of the work of See, Krulick and Mascho created the big noise of the game, Krulick by his hitting and baserunning and Mascho by his robbing episodes in right field when he scooped two drives that looked good for hits.

TRACK MEET SATURDAY

Big Event of Year in Athletics to Be Held at Petoskey Saturday.

The annual northern Michigan Inter-scholastic track and field meet will be held in Petoskey, Saturday, May 23. Excursion will be run from Traverse City, Boyne City and Charlevoix on the steamers Miasouri and City of Boyne, leaving this port during the forenoon of that day.

Six or seven northern Michigan towns will be represented at the meet. Charlevoix high school will be well represented.

LOCAL ELKS ARE TO TAKE PART

Convention of Michigan Elks to be Held at Petoskey June 23-25.

Preparations Under Way for Biggest Event of Its Kind in Northern Michigan.

Charlevoix Elks, nearly 50 in number, are planning extensively for the convention of Michigan Elks to be held June 23, 24 and 25 in Petoskey, at which time fully 6000 visitors from all over Michigan will be in attendance. It will be the greatest thing in the way of a celebration ever seen in Northern Michigan.

The most popular young lady in Charlevoix will make a flight in a hydro-aeroplane. A voting contest has been started here by the Petoskey lodge to ascertain just who this maid may be, and the aviator has agreed to take her into the clouds during the convention.

The attractions for Elks, and others as well, will be many and the entertainment program for the ladies is receiving special attention. Free auto and boat rides, dances, theatres and—well, everything good that can be thought of will be provided. The parade, on June 25, will alone be worth traveling a long distance to see. One of its features will be the Little Traverse Bay sea serpent, 108 feet long, which will wriggle along the street directly ahead of the Petoskey delegation, including the Charlevoix members. The serpent will vomit water, fire and smoke and will wield a tongue seven feet long. The motive power of the dragon will be carefully concealed. There will be numerous other comical floats and hands galore.

A "movie" camera "mao" will be on hand to take film of the parade to be reproduced in motion pictures all over the country in the "Path Weekly."

Day and night fireworks will likewise be seen and arrangements are being

LOU S. DARLING, Exalted Ruler, Petoskey Lodge.

made for a night parade. Petoskey will be decorated from stem to stern in a systematic manner and the days of the convention will be gala days for Northern Michigan, not only for Elks but for dears and others.

Charlevoix Elks who are taking active part in the general preparations, in that they are members of the various committees, are: Harry Nicholls, Dr. R. B. Armstrong, Oluf Nordrum, Romeo A. Emrey and Oakley D. Hammond, who are members of the reception committee, and L. P. Adams of the publicity committee. Every Elk in Charlevoix who is alive and kicking will be on hand, however, dressed in purple and white.

E. L. Rose of Petoskey, president of the Michigan Elks Association, and Lou S. Darling, Exalted Ruler of Petoskey lodge, are well known in Charlevoix.

The preliminary program for the convention has been arranged as follows:

Tuesday, June 23—State convention meets at 2 p. m. Evening session at 7 p. m. Grand ball at Cushman House 9 p. m.

Wednesday, June 24—Election of officers at 9 a. m. Auto trip for visiting ladies 10 a. m. Ritualistic competitive drill 7 p. m. Grand ball at Arlington Hotel 9 p. m.

Thursday, June 25—Parade at 10 a. m. Boat ride during afternoon.

DIED AT SOLDIERS' HOME

Mrs. Mary A. Kelly Had Lived in Charlevoix for a Number of Years.

Mrs. Mary A. Kelly, a pioneer resident of this city, died Friday noon at the Michigan State Soldiers' Home at Grand Rapids, at the advanced age of 84 years. She had been in poor health for some time and her demise was not unexpected.

Her remains were brought to this city Saturday night and taken to the home of her daughter, Mrs. M. Lamphear, on Clinton street. Funeral services were held from the home Sunday at 2:30, being conducted by Rev. Quinton Walker, interment at Brookside cemetery.

She is survived by two children, Mrs. M. Lamphear of this city, and John Kelly of Chicago.

Death of Mrs. Feltnburger.

Mrs. Isaac Feltnburger, aged thirty-eight years, died at her home near Phelps Sunday morning at six o'clock, the direct cause being tuberculosis of the hip joint. Funeral services were held Tuesday. Interment at the Boss cemetery. She leaves her husband and a large number of friends to mourn their loss.

AUTO TAX LAW DEFEAT

Will Not Delay the Construction of Good Roads Throughout State.

Work Will Go On and Rewards Will All Be Paid, Says Commissioner Rogers.

Good-road-building will continue in Michigan during the present year, although the supreme court has declared unconstitutional the auto tax law, from which the state highway department expected to receive $750,000 as a result of sales of auto tags. State Highway Commissioner Frank Rogers says: Township and county road commissioners are planning to build hundreds of miles of state reward roads this summer, trusting the next legislature will appropriate funds to pay the rewards.

July 1 the state highway department will have $350,000 with which to pay rewards on roads built under the supervision of the state. There are now on file in Mr. Rogers' office applications for road rewards amounting to $1,384,111. Not all of the applications will be granted, but it is expected the total will be over $1,000,000.

Rogers is notifying road commissioners that he cannot guarantee that the legislature will appropriate funds to pay for reward roads constructed this year, but he says that with 70 of the 85 counties in the state demanding that the legislature appropriate funds the lawmakers undoubtedly will be compelled to make provision for raising the money.

According to Commissioner Rogers nearly one-fourth of all state reward roads in the state were accepted by his department during the last six months of 1913. At the present time there are 2363 miles of state reward roads in Michigan and 609 miles were accepted during the first six months of 1913.

Mr. Rogers has not decided whether he will recommend to the governor that the auto tax law be made constitutional by the legislature or that the body be asked to appropriate a certain amount each session for road building during the following two years.

GOOD ROADS CLUB ORGANIZED

Organization Completed at a Meeting Held Here Last Week.

LOCAL CLUBS TO BE FORMED

Delegations From All Over the County Were Present.

Movement Gives Promise of Splendid Work Along the Line of Road Building—Officers Chosen.

While the crowd that attended the good roads meeting at the court house last Wednesday afternoon and evening was small, there was no lack of enthusiasm shown by those present in the movement to organize a County Good Roads Club. It was the initial step in the formation of good roads clubs all over the county and the meeting was a success in every detail.

Both afternoon and evening State Highway Commissioner Frank Rogers gave a talk from which the assembled hoosters got much inspiration. Frank Hamilton, the "father of good roads in Northern Michigan," at present highway commissioner of Grand Traverse county, gave a lecture on good roads in the evening, which was illustrated by stereopticon views showing work that has been accomplished so far in Northern Michigan.

Delegations were present from East Jordan, Boyne Falls, Boyne City and many townships. A County Good Roads Club was organized with the following officers: President, D. S. Payton; secretary, W. J. Rachow; committee, R. Robinson, Boyne City; William Spring, East Jordan; Dr. Conkle, Boyne Falls; R. C. Hammett, Charlevoix. These a committee men were instructed to organize local clubs. Each club will have its own officers, the presidents to be vice-presidents of the county club.

It is the intention of the officers to have the work taken up in each locality and an effort will be made to push the campaign to a successful issue. Occasionally county meetings will be held, that all may get together and talk the plans over.

With a good working club in different communities throughout the county the promise for good roads was never brighter and it is expected that there will be an increased interest in road building in Charlevoix county.

GAVE INTERESTING TALK

Deputy State Forestry Warden McGillivray at the School House Wednesday.

J. H. McGillivray, Deputy State Forestry Warden, gave a very interesting talk to the 7th and 8th grades and the high school and county normal students Wednesday, May 13th.

He gave an interesting description of the wild life of the woods and their value to man. Mr. McGillivray made an excellent plea for the sparrow as an economic factor in the destruction of weed seeds and insects. There are 28 recognized species of sparrows, only one of which, the English sparrow, is at all destructive. Even his record as a destructive bird is questioned when taking into consideration the amount of weed seed eaten by him. The deputy warden especially desired the repeal of the sparrow bounty law as a protection to the bird life destroyed in connection with the killing of sparrows by boys unable to distinguish the several varieties of sparrows or many of the song birds.

Excursion to Petoskey.

The Str. City of Boyne will run an excursion to Petoskey, Saturday, May 23, to the big Northern Michigan Inter-scholastic track and field meet. The boat will leave the Wilbur dock at 8:30 a. m., returning leave Petoskey at 6:30 p. m. Fare for round trip 50c. Adv. 201r

The STORY of WAITSTILL BAXTER

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

BY KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Author of "Rebecca of Sunnybrook Farm"

PROLOGUE

Strength and interest of quiet lives in the New England of three-quarters of a century ago provide the framework of "The Story of Waitstill Baxter." That is the skeleton. The flesh and blood of human beings, living and loving and moving in a world of their own that is a miniature picture of the greater world outside, are also there. The story is a cross section of life as seen and described by a woman who has been well called "America's greatest living woman novelist."

Amid the hills of New England are many men and women like Waitstill and Patience Baxter and their father, Ivory Boynton and his afflicted mother and funny Cephas Cole, who woos hopelessly, but with small chance of success. They find their way into books but seldom, for it takes a master hand to describe faithfully the doings of real people. And that is the reason why "The Story of Waitstill Baxter" has won highest praise from critics who know a good book when they see one.

CHAPTER I.

The Sisters.

FAR, far up in the bosom of New Hampshire's granite hills the Saco has its birth. As the mountain ridges gather strength it takes through Bartlett's valley its tinny way. Or hides in Conway's great brakes retreating from the glare of day. Now it leaves the mountains and flows through "green Fryeburg's woods and farms." In the course of its frequent turns and twists and bends it meets with many another stream and sends it, fuller and stronger, along its rejoicing way. When it has journeyed more than 100 miles and is nearing the ocean it greets the Great Ossipee river and accepts its crystal tribute. Then in its turn the Little Ossipee joins forces and the river, now a splendid stream, flows onward to Bonny Eagle, to Modocraft and to Salmon falls, where it dashes over the dam like a young Niagara and hurries in a foamy torrent through the ragged dell cut between lofty banks of solid rock.

Whirling out placidly for a moment's rest in the sunny reaches near Pleasant point it gathers itself for a new plunge at Union falls, after which it speedily merges itself in the bay and is fresh water no more.

At one of the falls on the Saco the two little hamlets of Edgewood and Riverboro nestle together at the bridge and make one village. The stream is a wonder of beauty just here, a mirror of placid loveliness above the dam, a tawny, roaring wonder at the fall and a mad, white-flecked torrent as it dashes on its way to the ocean.

The river has seen strange sights in its time, though the history of these two tiny villages is quite unknown to the great world outside. They have been born, waxed strong and fallen almost to decay while Saco water has lapped over the rocks and spent itself in its impetuous journey to the sea.

It remembers the yellow-moccasined Sokokis as they issued from the Indian Cedar and carried their birchen canoes along the wooded shore. It was in those years that the silver-skinned salmon leaped in its crystal depths, the otter and the beaver crept with sleek wet skins upon its shore and the brown deer came down to quench his thirst at its brink, while at twilight the stealthy forms of bear and panther and wolf were mirrored in its glassy surface.

Time sped. Men chained the river's turbulent forces and ordered it to grind at the mill. Then houses and barns appeared along its banks, bridges were built, orchards planted, forests changed into farms, white-painted meeting houses glimmered through the trees, and distant bells rang from their steeples on quiet Sunday mornings.

All at once myriads of great horned loons eyed its downward course, slender legs linked together in long crafts and huge legs drifted down sleekly to the pools. Men appeared, running blithely and blithely like ants and going through mysterious operations the reason for which the river could never guess. Then the mill wheels turned, the great saws buzzed, the smoke from tavern chimneys rose in the air, and the cattle and cluster of stagecoaches resounded along the road.

Now children paddled with bare feet in the river's sandy coves and shallows, and lovers sat on its slender shaded banks and exchanged their vows just where the shuffling bear was wont to come down and drink.

The Saco could remember the "cold year," when there was a black frost every month of the twelve, and, though almost all the corn along its shores shriveled on the stalk, there were two farms where the vapor from the river saved the crops, and all the seed for the next season came from the favored spot, to be known as "Egypt" from that day henceforward.

Strange, complex things now began to happen, and the river played its own part in some of these, for there were disastrous freshets, the sudden breaking up of great jams of logs, and the drowning of men who were engulfed in the dark whirlpool below the rapids.

Caravans, with moccasins of wild beasts, crossed the bridge now every year. An infuriated elephant lifted the side of the old Edgewood tavern-barn, and the wild laughter of the roistering rum-drinkers who were tantalizing the animals floated down to the river's edge. The roar of a lion, leaping and chewing the arm of one of the bystanders, and the cheers of the throng when a plucky captain of the local militia thrust a stake down the beast's throat—these sounds displaced the former warwhoop of the Indians and the ring of the ax in the virgin forests along the shores.

There were days and moonlight nights, too, when strange sights and sounds of quite another nature could have been noted by the river as it flowed under the bridge that united the two little villages.

Issuing from the door of the Riverboro townhouse and winding down the hill through the long row of teams and carriages that lined the roadside, came a procession of singing men and singing women, conscious of sin, but entranced with promised pardon, spiritually exalted by the glowing eloquence of the latter day prophet they were worshipping, the loud of "Cochranites" marched down the dusty road and across the bridge, dancing, swaying, waving handkerchiefs and shouting hosannas.

God watched and listened, knowing that there would be other prophets, true and false, in the days to come, and other processions following them. And the river watched and listened, too, as it hurried on toward the sea with its story of the present that was some time to be the history of the past.

When Jacob Cochran was leading his overwrought, ecstatic band across the river, Waitstill Baxter, then a child was watching the strange, noisy company from the window of a little brick dwelling on the top of the Town House hill.

Her stepmother stood beside her with a young lady in her arms, and when she saw what held the gaze of the child she drew her away, saying, "We mustn't look, Waitstill; your father don't like it."

"Who was the big man at the head, mother?"

"His name is Jacob Cochran, but you mustn't think or talk about him. He is very wicked."

"He doesn't look any wicked than the others," said the child. "Who was the man that fell down in the road, mother, and the woman that knelt and prayed over him? Why did he fall, and why did she pray, mother?"

"That was Master Aaron Boynton, the schoolmaster, and his wife. He only made believe to fall down, as the Cochranites do; the way they carry on is a disgrace to the village, and that's the reason your father won't let us look at them."

"I played with a nice boy over to Boynton's," boasted the child.

"That was Ivory, their only child. He is a good little fellow, but his mother and father will spoil him with their crazy ways."

"I hope nothing will happen to him, for I love him," said the child gravely.

"He showed me a humming bird's nest, the first I ever saw, and the first!"

"Don't talk about loving him," chided the woman. "If your father should hear you he'd send you to bed without your porridge."

"Father couldn't hear me, for I never speak when he's at home," said grave little Waitstill. "And I'd need to go to bed without my porridge."

strange and uncertain doctrine. Waitstill, the child who never spoke in her father's presence, was a young woman now, the mistress of the house; the stepmother was dead and the baby a girl of seventeen.

The brick cottage on the hilltop had grown only a little shabbier. Deacon Foxwell Baxter still slammed its door behind him every morning at 7 o'clock and, without any such cheerful conventional as goodbys to his girls, walked down to the bridge to open his store.

The day, properly speaking, had opened when Waitstill and Patience had left their beds at dawn, built the fire, fed the hens and turkeys and prepared the breakfast, while the deacon was graining the horse and milking the cows. Such minor "chores" as carrying water from the well, splitting kindling, chopping pine or bringing wood into the kitchen were left to Waitstill, who had a strong back or if she had not had never been unwise enough to mention the fact in her father's presence. The alternate day, however, which opened with sunrise, had nothing to do with the real human day, which always began when Mr. Baxter slammed the door behind him and reached his high noon of delight when he disappeared from view.

"It's opening the store shutters," chanted Patience from the heights of a kitchen chair by the window. "Now he's taken his cane and beaten off the Boynton puppy that was sitting on the steps as usual. I don't mean Ivory's dog; there the girl gave a quick glance at her sister, but Bodman's little yellow cur. Bodman must have come down to the bridge on some errand for Ivory. Isn't it odd when that dog has all the other store steps to sit upon he should choose father's when every bone in his body must tell him how father hates him and the whole Boynton family?"

"Father has no real cause that I ever heard of. But some dogs never know when they've had enough beating nor some people either," said Waitstill, speaking from the pantry.

"Don't be gloomy when it's my birthday, sis. Now he's opened the door and kicked the cat. All is ready for business at the Baxter store."

"I wish you weren't quite so free with your tongue, Patty," retorted the girl, jumping down from the chair and shaking back her mop-of-red-gold curls. "I'll put this hateful, childish, round comb in and out just once more, then it will disappear forever. This very afternoon up goes my hair!"

"You know it will be of no use unless you braid it very plainly and neatly. Father will take notice and make you smooth it down."

"Father hasn't looked me square in the face for years, besides my hair won't braid and nothing can make it quite plain and neat. Thank goodness! Let us be thankful for small mercies, as Jed Merrill said when the lightning struck his mother-in-law and skipped his wife."

"Patty, I will not permit you to repeat those tavern stories, they are not so-called on the lips of a girl!" And Waitstill came out of the pantry with a shadow of disapproval in her eyes and in her voice.

Patty, though her arms around her sister teemingly and pulled out the waves of her hair so that it softened her face. "I'll be good," she said, "and oh, Waitstill, let's invent some sort of cheap happiness for today! I shall never be seventeen again and we have so many troubles. Let's put one of the cows in the horse's stall and see what will happen! Or let's spread up our beds with the head at the foot and put the sheet of drawers on the other side of the room, or let's make candy! Do you think father would miss the molasses if we only use a cupful? Couldn't we strain the milk, but leave the churning and the dishes for an hour or two, just once? If you say 'yes' I can think of something wonderful to do!"

"What is it?" asked Waitstill, relenting at the sight of the girl's eager, roguish face.

"Pierce my ears," cried Patty. "Say you will!"

"Oh! Patty, Patty, I am afraid you are given over to vanity! I dare not let you wear earrings without father's permission!"

"Why not? Lots of church members wear them, so it can't be a mortal sin."

Father is against all adornments, but that's because he doesn't want to buy them. You always said I should have your mother's coral pendants when I was old enough. There I am, seventeen, today, and Mr. Perry says I

"We can't! The Lord couldn't expect us to hear all we hear," exclaimed Patty, "without our trying once in a while to have a good time in our own way. FLOWER MISSION SUPERINTENDENTS

Report For Year Ending in March as Made at Recent Meeting.

Its Aim is to Reach All Sick and Shut-ins, the Poor, Afflicted and Ailing.

At a recent meeting of the Woman's Christian Temperance Union, the flower mission superintendents submitted a report for the year beginning March 14, 1913 and ending March 13, 1914 of which the following is a brief summary.

Number to whom flowers or plants, were sent by B. B. Blair, florist, 27.
Number remembered by cards, tied in white as a substitute for flowers, 8.
In Flower Mission Day July 11, a happy time was had with the shut-ins.
Ten were present as guests, conveyances being furnished for those unable to walk to the meeting. The Superintendents provided supper and invited twelve W. C. T. U. members, mature in years, but young in spirit to partake with them, and each one was presented with a handsome scripture text card tied in white.

Sufficient flowers contributed to remember 17 in the community with banquets, these being tied in white with text cards. We have reason to believe the silent floral messengers have given an awakening to more than will ever be known.

Number remembered by the superintendents during the summer season 50, making a total of 102. Amount expended for flowers, cards and ribbons $0.30. Calls on the sick have been made and delicacies sent in many cases.
Although the fundamental idea of this department is the distribution of flowers accompanied by scripture texts or appropriate quotations, the work embraces many kinds of service. It is adaptable to all communities and in addition to the direct good done, it helps in an indirect way to disarm prejudice and create favorable sentiment for the cause. Its aim is to reach all sick and shut-ins, the poor, afflicted and erring with its ministrations.

"The flowers then, of right, are our token.
The flowers are our ornament, grand,
The God who created their fragrance,
Is the God of the white ribbon band.
With Him, we will plant strength for weakness;
Like Him scatter darkness with light
Till He reveals as the God of all benign
In a world freed from sin's fearsome light."

Sealed proposals will be received at the office of the Lighthouse Inspector, Milwaukee, Wisconsin, until 2 o'clock
p. m., June 5th, 1914, and then opened, for furnishing fuel for the Twelfth Lighthouse District for the fiscal year 1915. Blank proposals and particulars may be obtained by addressing the Lighthouse Inspector, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

B. B. BLAIR SELLS OUT

Disposes of Greenhouses and Business to G. M.
Babcock of Harbor Springs.

B. B. Blair, who has for the past fourteen years has been practically the only florist in this city, disposed of his holdings last week to G. M. Babcock of Harbor Springs, who will take possession next Monday.

Mr. Babcock has been in the same business at Harbor Springs for the past ten years, and comes to the city well recommended as a successful florist, and will conduct the business along the same lines it has been in the past.
He has moved his household goods from Harbor Springs and is busy settling and becoming acquainted with his new holdings.

Farm and Garden

WATCH THE FENCES.

A good fence is insurance against the depredations of browsing animals. All repairs should be made promptly. Diversified farming requires small fields and considerable fencing material, but it pays. Do not be afraid of spending a few dollars for fences if they are needed.
Put up the farm into small fields so crops can be grazed.—Iowa Homestead.

TO KEEP UP SOIL WEALTH.

Growing a Legume Crop is Necessary
Every Four Years.

Clover or some other legume crop once every four years is absolutely necessary in order to maintain the nitrogen of the soil for corn, wheat, oats, timothy and like crops.

Where it is difficult to secure clover the trouble is either a sour soil needing limestone or a soil low in phosphate.

To help out the stand, says Farm Magazine, it is often advisable to sow part in alsike clover. Alsike clover will often produce a good stand where red clover fails.

Where clover has failed and a crop like clover is needed, soy beans and cowpeas are proving a very profitable substitute in the corn belt.

Soy beans make a valuable hay, yielding from one and a half to three tons

Photograph by Tuskegee agricultural experiment station, Alabama.

WELL GROWS CORN AND VINE.

per acre. The seed when left to ripen make a very valuable concentrate, being as rich in protein as oilmeal. They will yield from ten to fifty bushels per acre, and the seed often sells for $2 or more per bushel.

A crop rotation should be practiced which includes the growing of clover or some other legume crop at least as often as once every four years. If the clover should fall some other legume, as soy beans or cowpeas, should be substituted.

All crop residues, as well as manure, whether stalks, straw or chaff, should be left on the farm, being hauled if necessary and plowed under, either directly or in the form of manure, in order to supply organic matter and ultra-gen.

Make Swine Pay Two Ways.

An important consideration that is too often overlooked is the economical utilization of manure produced by swine. Dry lot feeding in summer is often resorted to when heavy waste of manure on account of the large part of the manure that is leached or blown away when deposited in bare lots. Feeding on pastures or in cultivated fields will do much to obviate this loss, since a large proportion of the droppings and urine will then be deposited in the field where the fertilizing constituents may be utilized.—

MAYOR'S APPOINTMENTS

But few changes made in the Heads of the Various City Departments.

At Monday evening's session of the common council came the much-looked-for bunch of city appointments. Few changes were made in the various departments of the city. All the mayor's appointments were confirmed by the council with the exception of the chief of police, which was tabled for one week. Following is the list as confirmed:

Cemetery board, full term—A. L. Fitch.
Board of health, full term—F. M. Glassford.
Board of public works—J. S. Baker.
City attorney—Lise Shanahan.
Street commissioner—E. B. Ward.
Health officer—Dr. R. B. Armstrong.
Harbor master—Sam Hamilton.
Fire warden and chief of fire department—H. D. Marshall.
City engineer—R. E. Sloan.
Board of special assessors—D. F. Meech and Charles J. Zeitler.
Dog warden—George W. Cook.
Ten special police officers were also appointed.
Plans and specifications for the proposed new cement sidewalk and stairs at the foot of Petoskey avenue leading down to the lake were presented and left with the street committee to let the contract for building.
G. W. Priest was chosen mayor pro tem.

Sunday Special—Lamphear's Ice Cream, Chocolate Flavor, 25c, quart at Bert Beaudoin's. Adv. 201

BUY GRAVEL PIT

Corner Lots Recently Purchased By Mr. and Mrs. John S. Baker.

What probably means in the near future the erection of a splendid new building on the north side will be the culmination of a real estate deal last week when John S. Baker and wife purchased the vacant property at the corner of Bridge and River streets, formerly owned by Lee Howland, and better known as the "gravel pit."

From what we can learn it is the intention of the Bakers to erect a building before the season opens next year that will cover the entire space below the bluff. It will be of the casino character, and the first floor will be devoted to novelty and oriental stores, while the second story will be an auditorium or hall that can be utilized for other purposes. The need of a place of this kind has been evident for some time, and it is safe to say that if Mr. and Mrs. Baker take hold of the proposition, its success is assured.

When you want an auto tire buy a Goodyear. We have them; also vulcanizing done on short notice—Benjamin Brown. 191f

THEATRICAL

Manager Miles of the Majestic takes pleasure in announcing the annual visit of the Champion-Richmond players. This company is well known locally, having played five engagements. The company plays a large repertoire of tabloid versions. Further introduction of the players is not necessary, as each has a host of friends wherever they have been. The stock company opens for one week Monday, May 25th, with the play "Retribution."

Memorial Service.

The members of the G. A. R., W. R. C. and Spanish-American War veterans will attend memorial services at the Methodist church Sunday morning. All who can attend are requested to meet at the I. O. O. F. hall at 10 a. m. and march in a body to the services at the church.

GREGORY & BENTON

The Story of Waitstill Baxter

By KATE DOUGLAS WIGGIN

Copyright, 1913, by Kate Douglas Wiggin

"We can't! The Lord couldn't expect us to bear all that we bear." Here, and you know it, besides, Ivory Boynton would tell you so if you didn't. Come and here my cuts, there's a darling!"

"Ivory Boynton never speaks a word of my looks, nor a word that father and all the world might hear." And Waitstill flushed.

"Then it's because he's shy and silent and has so many troubles of his own that he doesn't dare say anything. When my hair is waving in my ears I shall expect to hear something about my looks. I can tell you, Waity, after all, though we never have what we want to eat and never a decent dress, to our backs, nor a young man to cross the threshold, I wouldn't change places with Ivory Boynton, would you?" Here Patty swept the hearth vigorously with a turkey wing and added a few corn-cobs to the fire.

Waitstill paused a moment in her task of bread kneading. "Well," she answered cheerfully, "at least we know where our father is."

"We do indeed. We also know that he is thoroughly alive."

"And, though people do talk about him, they can't say the things they say of Master Aaron Boynton. I don't believe father would ever run away and desert us."

"I fear not," said Patty. "I wish the angels would put the idea into his head, though, of course, it wouldn't be the angels. They'd be above it. It would have to be the old driver," as Ted Merrill calls the evil one. But whoever did it the result would be the same—we should be deserted and live happily ever after. Oh, to be deserted and left with you alone on this hill-top, what joy it would be!"

CHAPTER II. Deacon Baxter's Wives.

Waitstill frowned, but did not interfere further with Patty's intemperate speech. She knew that she was simply serving as an escape valve and that after the steam was "let off" she would be more rational.

"Of course we are motherless," continued Patty wistfully, "but poor Ivory is worse than motherless."

"No, not worse, Patty," said Waitstill, taking the bread board and moving toward the closet. "Ivory loves his mother, and she loves him with all the fond love of a mother. She has the best blood of New England flowing in her veins, and I suppose it was a great comfort when he was married to Mrs. Boynton, clever and gifted though he was. Now Ivory has to protect her—poor, dear, innocent creature—and hide her away from the gossip of the village. He is surely the best of sons, Ivory Boynton."

"She is a terrible cure for him and like to spoil his life," said Patty.

"There are cures that swell the heart and make it bigger and warmer, Patty, just as there are cures that shrivel it and leave it dried and cold. Love lightens Ivory's afflictions, but that is something you and I have to do without, so it seems."

"I suppose little Rodman is some comfort to the Boyntons, even if he is only ten?" Patty suggested.

"No doubt. He's a good little fellow, and, though it's rather hard for Ivory to be troubled for those last few years with the support of a child who's no nearer kin than a cousin, still he's of use, minding Mrs. Boynton and the house when Ivory's away. The schoolmaster says he is wonderful at his books, and likely to be a great credit to the Boyntons some day or other."

"You've forgot to name our one great blessing, Waity, and I believe, anyway, you're talking to keep my mind off the ear-rings."

"Yes, name 'em each other? No, Patty, I never forget that, day or night. It's that makes me willing to bear any burden father chooses to put upon me. Now the bread is set, but I don't believe I have the courage to put a needle into your tender flesh, Patty. I really don't."

"Nonsense! I've got the waxed silk all ready and chosen the right sized needle, and I'll promise not to jump or scratch more than I can help. We'll make a fine lead pencil dot right in the middle of the lobe, then you place the needle on it, shut your eyes and jab hard! I expect to faint, but when I come to we can decide which of us will pull the needle through to the other side. Probably it will be you. I'm such a coward. If it hurts dreadfully I'll have only one pierced to-day and take the other tomorrow, and if it hurts very dreadfully perhaps I'll go through life with one ear-ring. And Abby Cole will say it's just old enough to suit me."

"You'll never go through life with one tongue at the rate you use it now," chided Waitstill, "for it will never last you. Come, we'll take the workbasket and go out in the barn where no one will see or hear us."

"Goodly, goodly! Come along!" and Patty clapped her hands in triumph. "Have you got the pencil and the needle and the waxed silk? Then bring the sampler bottle to revive me, and the coral pendants, too, just to give me courage. Hurry up! It's a o'clock. I was born at sunrise, so I'm 'going out' eighteen and can't waste any time!"

Foxwell Baxter was ordinarily called "Old Foxy" by the boys of the district and also, it is to be feared, by the men gathered for evening conference at the various taverns, or at one of the rural village stores.

He had a small farm of fifteen or twenty acres, with a pasture, a wood lot and a hayfield, but the principal source of his income came from trading. His sign bore the usual legend: "West India Goods and Groceries," and probably the most profitable articles in his stock were rum, molasses, sugar and tobacco, but there were chests of rice, tea, coffee and spices, barrels of pork to bring, as well as piles of cotton and woolen cloth on the shelves above the counter. His shop window, seldom dusted or set in order, held a few clay pipes, some glass jars of pepper and saffron, some glass jars of pepper and saffron, some glass jars of pepper and saffron, some glass jars of pepper and saffron.

He was a sharp-eyed, shrewd trader, but his honesty was never questioned. Indeed, the only trait in his character that ever came up for general discussion was his extraordinary, unbelievable, colossal meanness. This so-called every other person in the man and heaped so thickly and lastingly in the foreground that had been cherished a second vice no one would have observed it, and if he really did possess a casual virtue it could scarcely have reared its head in such ugly company.

It might be said, to defend the fair fame of the church, that Mr. Baxter's deaconhood did not include very active service in the courts of the Lord. He had "experienced religion" at fifteen and made profession of his faith, but all well brought up boys and girls did the same in those days; their parents saw to that. If change of conviction or backsliding occurred later on that was not their business! At the ripe age of twenty-five he was selected to fill a vacancy and became a deacon, thinking it might be good for trade, as it was for some years. He was very active in the days of the "Cochrane craze," showing every defense of the creed that included lively detective work and incessant spying on his neighbors was particularly in his line, but for many years now, though he had been regular in attendance at church, he had never officiated at communion and his deacon services had gradually lapsed into the jangling of the contribution box, a task of which he never wearied. It was such a keen pleasure to make other people yield their pennies for a good cause without adding his own!

Deacon Baxter had now been a widower for nine years, and the community had almost relinquished the idea of his seeking a fourth wife. There was a general feeling that it would be a good thing for the Baxter girls to have some one to help with the housework and act as a buffer between them and their grim and terrible parent. As for the women of the village, they were mortified that the Deacon had been able to secure three wives and refused to believe that the universe held anywhere a creature bright enough to become his fourth.

The first, he it said, was a mere ignorant girl, and he a heartless youth of twenty, who may not have shown his true qualities so early in life. She bore him two sons, and it was a matter of comment at the time that she called them, respectively, Job and Moses, hoping that the endurance and meekness connected with these names might somehow help them in their future relations with their father, Pneumonia, coupled with profound discouragement, carried her off in a few years to make room for the second wife, Waitstill's mother, who was of different fiber and greatly his superior. She was a free, handsome girl, the orphan daughter of an English gentleman who had died when she was eighteen, leaving her alone in the world and penniless.

Baxter, after a few days' acquaintance, dove into the doorway of the house, where she was a visitor and, showing her his two curly-headed boys, suddenly asked her to come and be their stepmother. She assented, partly because she had nothing else to do with her existence so far as she could see, and also because she fell in love with the children at first sight and forgot, as girls will, that it was their father whom she was marrying.

She was as plucky and clever and spirited as she was handsome, and she made a brave fight of it with Foxy, long enough to bring a daughter into the world, to name her Waitstill and start her a little way on her life journey—then she, too, gave up the struggle and died. Typhoid fever it was, shown many a kind of despairing rage at having made so complete a failure of her existence.

The next year Mr. Baxter, being unusually busy, offered a man a good young heifer if he would go about the country a little and pick him up a housekeeper, a likely woman who would if she proved energetic, economical and amiable be eventually raised to the proud position of his wife. If she was young, healthy, smart, tidy, capable and a good manager, able to milk the cows, harness the horse and make good butter he would give a dollar and a half a week. The woman was found, and, incredible as it may seem, she said "Yes" when the deacon, whose ardent was kindled at having paid three months' wages, proposed a speedy marriage. The two boys by this time had reached the age of discretion, and one of them evinced the fact by promptly running away to parts unknown, never to be heard from afterward; while the other, a reckless and unhappy lad, was drowned while running on the logs in the river. Old Foxy showed little outward sign of his loss.

His third wife, the one originally secured for housekeeping, bore him a girl, very much to his disgust, a girl named Bathsheba, and great was Waitstill's delight at this addition to the dull household. The mother was a timid, colorless, docile creature, but Bathsheba nevertheless was a sparkling, bright-eyed baby, who speedily became the very center of the universe to the older child. So the months and years wore on dimly enough until when Bathsheba was eight the third Mrs. Baxter succumbed after the manner of her predecessors and slipped away from a life that had grown intolerable. The trouble was diagnosed as "liver complaint," but severity of proper food, no new frocks or kind words, hard work and continual lullabying may possibly have been contributory causes. Dr. Perry thought so, for he had witnessed three most contented deaths in the Baxter house. The ladies were all members of the church and had presumably made their peace with God, but the good doctor fancied that their pleasure in joining the angels was mild compared with their relief at parting with the deacon.

"I know I hadn't ought to put the care on you, Waitstill, and you only fourteen," said Mrs. Baxter, sighed, as the young girl was watching with her one night when the end seemed drawing near. "I've made out to live till now when Bathsheba is old enough to dress herself and help round, but I'm all bent out and can't try any more."

"Do you mean I'm to take your place, a mother to Bathsheba and keep house and everything?" asked Waitstill quaveringly.

"I don't see but you'll have to, unless your father marries again. He'll never help you, you know that."

"I won't have another mother in this house," flashed the girl. "There's been three here and that's enough! If he brings anybody home I'll take Bathsheba and run away, as Job did, or if he leaves me alone I'll wash and iron and scrub and cook till Bathsheba grows up, and then we'll go off together and hide somewhere. I'm fourteen, oh, mother, how soon could I be married and take Bathsheba to live with me? Do you think anybody will ever want me?"

"Don't marry for a home, Waitstill! Your own mother did that, and so did I, and we were both punished for it! You've been a great help, and I've had a bit of comfort out of the baby, but I wouldn't go through it again, not even for her! You're real smart and capable for your age, and you've done your full share of the work every day, even when you were in school. You can get along all right."

"I don't know how I'm going to do everything alone," said the girl, forcing back her tears. "You've always made the brown bread, and mine will never suit father. I suppose I can wash, but I don't know how to iron smudged clothes, nor make pickles, and oh! I can never kill a rooster, mother. It's no use to ask me to! I'm not big enough to be the head of the family."

Mrs. Baxter turned her pale, lined face away from Waitstill's appealing eyes.

"I know," she said faintly. "I hate to leave you to bear the brunt alone, but I must. . . . Take good care of Bathsheba and don't let her get into trouble. . . . You won't, will you?"

"I'll be careful," promised Waitstill, sobbing quietly. "I'll do my best."

"You've got more courage than ever I had; don't you souse you can stiffen up and defend yourself a little more? Your father'd ought to be opposed, for his own good, but I've never seen anybody that dared do it." Then, after a pause, she said with a dash of spirit, "Anyhow, Waitstill, he's your father after all, he's no blood relation of mine, and I can't stand him another day; that's the reason I'm willing to die."

Ivory Boynton lifted the bars that divided his land from the highway and walked slowly toward the house. It was April, but there were still patches of snow here and there, fast melting under a drizzling rain. It was a gray world, a black, black and brown world, above and below. The sky was leaden the road and the footpath were deep in a muddy ooze decked with white. The tree trunks, black, with bare branches, were outlined against the gray sky; nevertheless, spring had been on the way for a week, and a few sunny days would bring the yearly miracle for which all hearts were longing.
